In selecting 4 but no more than 8 states the Secretary is to choose among those states which desire this option through a competitive application process. In determining which states will be allowed to adopt this option the Secretary shall consider the degree to which the option will help a state meet existing need for these CSLA services. The Secretary may consider an appropriate mix of other characteristics including but not limited to: size of the state; population; geographic location; and other demographic characteristics. The Secretary shall decide which states will be permitted to adopt this CSLA option no later than July 1, 1991.

CLARIFY COVERAGE OF PERSONAL CARE SERVICES

Present law

Personal care services are not explicitly defined but are generally recognized in statute. HCFA regulations define personal care services as "personal services in a recipient's plan of treatment, provided by an individual who is qualified to provide the services and is not a member of the recipient's family, and supervised by a registered nurse". The regulations limit personal care services to those performed strictly within the four walls of a recipient's home.

Committee provision

The Committee-approved provision explicitly defines and recognizes "personal care services" in statute. The provision also allows medically necessary personal care services to be performed in settings outside of the recipient's home, with safeguards to preclude the diversion of funds to adult day care activities.

NURSING HOME REFORM

In OBRA 87, Congress comprehensively revised the statutory authority applying to nursing homes participating in Medicare and/or Medicaid. The revision is often referred to as nursing home reform of OBRA 87, and includes three major new sections in Medicare and Medicaid laws: (1) requirements that nursing homes must meet in order to participate in the programs; (2) provisions revising the survey and certification process for determining whether nursing homes comply with these requirements; and (3) provisions expanding the range of sanctions and penalties that the States and the Secretary of HHS may impose against noncompliant nursing homes. Congress included in the enactment a phased-in implementation schedule for these provisions, with major sections of the new law becoming effective October 1, 1990. The Committee's bill includes a number of changes to nursing home reform law that are primarily technical in nature. Many of these provisions would apply both to skilled nursing facilities participating in Medicare and nursing facilities participating in Medicaid. Other provisions would amend Medicaid law only.

A number of the amendments are effective on April 1, 1991. The Committee expects that, by that time, the Health Care Financing Administration will have issued its final regulations on nurse aide training and pre-admission screening and annual resident review, and that these regulations will reflect the amendments made pursuant to this bill. The Committee also expects that these regulations will permit a public comment period.

Nurse aide training

Present law

Effective October 1, 1990, skilled nursing facilities (SNFs) participating in Medicaid must use on their staffs as nurse aides only those persons who have completed approved training and competency evaluation programs. Specifically, the law prohibits nursing homes from using (on a full-time, temporary, per diem, or other basis) persons as nurse aides for more than 4 months, unless the aid (a) has completed a training and/or a competency evaluation program approved by the State; and (b) is competent to provide nursing or nursing related services. OBRA also requires States to establish nurse aide registries of all persons who have satisfactorily completed training and competency evaluation programs and those persons who have been involved in resident neglect and abuse. Nursing homes are required to consult these registries before hiring a person as a nurse aide.

OBRA 87 required the Secretary to establish requirements for State approval of nurse aide training and competency evaluation programs by September 1, 1988, and to specify in these requirements areas to be covered in programs, content of curriculum, minimum hours of initial and ongoing training and retraining, qualification of instructors, and procedures for determining competency. The law prohibits the approval of training and competency evalutation programs offered by a SNF or NF, if the facility has been determined to be out of compliance with requirements for provision of services, residents' rights, and administration. In addition, an amendment included in OBRA 89 prohibits the approval of programs that impose charges for training and competency evaluation. In 1989, HCFA issued an interim guidance document, effective May 12, 1989, setting out criteria for the States for approval of nurse aide training programs. On March 23, 1990, HCFA published a proposed regulation on approval criteria for nurse aide training and competency evaluation programs.

OBRA 87 authorized enhanced Federal Medicaid matching payments for State activities required in connection with nurse aide training and competency evaluation programs. For the 8 calendar quarters beginning July 1, 1988, States have been authorized to receive for nurse aide training and competency evaluation activities their Federal matching rate plus 25 percentage points, but not exceeding 90 percent. In subsequent years, the rate becomes 50 percent.

Committee provision

1. No Compliance Actions Before Effective Date of Final Regulations: The Committee bill would amend Medicare and Medicaid to prohibit the Secretary from taking (and continuing) any compliance actions against a State for its failure to meet the law's requirements for nurse aide training and competency evaluation programs before the effective date of final regulations for such programs, if the State demonstrates that it had made a good faith effort to meet the requirements.

2. Part-Time Nurse Aides Not Allowed Delay in Training: The Committee bill would amend Medicare and Medicaid to require that nurse aides used on a temporary, per diem, or any other basis complete the training and competency evaluation programs that full-time aides must complete.

3. Extension of Enhanced Medicaid Match: The Committee bill would amend Medicaid to extend enhanced Federal matching for nurse aide training and competency evaluation through September 30, 1990.

4. Clarification of Permissible Charges for Training of Aides Not Yet Employed by a Facility: The Committee bill would amend Medicare and Medicaid to permit States to approve accredited non-facility based nurse aide training and competency evaluation programs that charge for training and instruction.

5. Reimbursement of Certain Individuals Prior to Employment: The Committee bill would also require that the State ensure that nurse aides who are employed by a facility within 12 months after successfully completing and paying for an accredited non-facility based program be reimbursed for the costs of the program.

6. Clarification of State Responsibility to Determine Competency: The Committee bill would clarify that States may not subcontract for the determination that an aide is competent to provide nursing and nursing-related services.

7. Nurse Aide Registry: The Committee bill would require SNFs and NFs to consult other State nurse aide registries if they have reason to believe that an aide whom they are considering employing is from another State. The Committee bill would further require that nurse aides deemed under OBRA '89 to have met the law's training and competency evaluation requirements be added to a State's nurse aide registry.

8. Required Retraining of Nurse Aides: The Committee bill would require those nurse aides who have not performed nursing or nursing-related services for 24 consecutive months to complete either a nurse aide training and competency evaluation program or a new training and competency evaluation program (instead of being required to undergo another training program).

9. Facilities Ineligible to Offer Nurse Aide Training and Competency Evaluation Programs: The Committee bill would modify standards for prohibiting a nursing home from conducting nurse aide training due to deficiencies in its compliance with regulations. A facility would be prohibited from conducting such programs if it has been terminated from the program any time on or after October 1, 1988, until after the end of a period of at least two years during which no survey or investigation finds any deficiencies warranting termination; or it has received a notice initiating termination between October 1, 1989 and September 30, 1990, until the completion of the next survey which finds no deficiencies warranting such a notice. Beginning October 1, 1990, a nursing facility will not be permitted to conduct training if it is found in a standard survey to have deficiencies resulting in significant civil money penalties (over $5,000), denial of payment, or appointment of temporary management, until the completion of the next standard survey which finds no such deficiencies.

The Committee intends that, as the Department gains experience with the new survey and certification methods established in OBRA 1987, the Secretary will recommend more appropriate criteria, if any, to determine whether facilities provide appropriate, quality care to their residents, and therefore, are qualified to provide nurse aide training.

Preadmission screening and annual resident review

Present law

OBRA '87 requires States to establish preadmission screening and review programs to determine whether mentally ill or mentally retarded persons require the level of services provided by a nursing facility and whether they require active treatment. Effective January 1, 1989, NFs participating in Medicaid must not admit any new resident who is mentally ill or mentally retarded, unless the State has determined, prior to admission, that the prospective resident requires the level of services provided by the facility, and whether he or she requires active treatment. OBRA also requires States to review, on an annual basis, all residents who are mentally ill or mentally retarded to determine whether their continued placement is appropriate and whether they require active treatment. The first of these annual reviews was to have been completed April 1, 1990. These preadmission screening and annual resident review requirements are often referred to as PASARR requirements.

The law requires that certain residents be discharged from facilities if their placement is found to be inappropriate. OBRA authorized the Secretary of HHS and States to enter into agreements, prior to April 1, 1989, that specify alternative disposition plans (ADPs) for persons who must be discharged from facilities. ADPs provide additional time for the State to arrange for the disposition of persons who must be discharged.

OBRA required the Secretary to issue by October 1, 1988, minimum criteria for States to use in making determinations as to whether a mentally ill or mentally retarded individual requires the level of services provided by a nursing facility. In May, 1989, HCFA issued interim guidelines (effective May 26) to the States for use in making determinations. On March 23, 1990, HCFA published proposed regulations on requirements for PASARR.

Committee bill

1. No Delegation of Authority to Conduct Screening and Reviews: The Committee bill would clarify that a State mental health authority and State mental retardation or developmental disability authority may not delegate their PASARR responsibilities to nursing facilities (or entities that have a direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with these facilities).

2. No Compliance Actions Before Effective Date of Final Regulations: The Committee bill would prohibit the Secretary from taking (and continuing) any compliance actions against a State for its failure to meet the law's requirements for preadmission screening before the effective date of HCFA's regulations, if the State demonstrates it had made a good faith effort to meet the requirements.

3. Revision of Alternative Disposition Plans: The Committee bill would allow States with approved alternative disposition plans to revise their plans before April 1, 1991, but only if all residents who do not require the level of services provided by nursing facilities are discharged no later than April 1, 1994.

4. State Reports: The Committee bill would require States to report annually to the Secretary on the number and disposition of mentally ill and mentally retarded residents who are discharged from nursing facilities because they do not require this level of care. The Committee bill would also require the Secretary to include this information in his annual report on nursing home reform requirements.

5. Definition of Mentally Ill: The Committee bill would modify the current definition of mental illness from "a primary or secondary diagnosis of mental disorder as defined in DSM-III" to "serious mental illness as defined by the Secretary in consultation with the National Institute of Mental Health." The Committee bill would retain the existing exclusion from PASARR requirements for individuals with a primary diagnosis of dementia (including Alzheimer's disease or related disorder) and would clarify that an individual with a secondary diagnosis of dementia would also be excluded if the individual's primary diagnosis is not a serious mental illness.

6. Substitution of "Specialized Services" for "Active Treatment": The Committee bill would make a technical change to substitute the term "specialized services" for the term

"active treatment." The Committee intends that specialized services include active treatment where appropriate.

7. Clarification with Respect to Admissions and Readmission from a Hospital: The Committee bill would clarify that preadmission screening requirements would not apply to nursing facility residents who are being readmitted to the facility after a hospital stay. The Committee bill would also provide that preadmission screening requirements would not apply to persons (1) who are admitted to the nursing facility directly from a hospital after receiving acute inpatient care at a hospital; (2) who require nursing facility services for the condition for which the person received care in the hospital; and (3) whose attending physician has certified, before admission to the facility, that the person is likely to require less than 30 days of nursing facility services.

Facility staffing

Present law

OBRA 87 requires SNFs and NFs to provide, directly or under arrangements, various kinds of services, including medically-related social services, dietary services, and an on-going program of activities. It also requires facilities to maintain clinical records on all residents. Final regulations published by HCFA on February 2, 1989, and effective October 1, 1990, specify qualifications for the persons providing these services. In some respects, these differ from regulations in effect prior to October 1.

Nursing facilities participating in Medicaid are required to provide 24-hour licensed nursing care sufficient to meet the nursing needs of residents and must use a registered professional nurse at least 8 consecutive hours a day 7 days a week. OBRA 87 authorizes States to waive the registered nurse or licensed nurse requirements if (1) the facility demonstrates that it has been unable to recruit appropriate personnel, despite diligent efforts (including offering wages at the community prevailing rate for nursing facilities); (2) the State determines that a waiver will not endanger the health or safety of residents, and; (3) a registered nurse or physician is obligated to respond immediately to telephone calls from the facility. These waivers are subject to annual renewal and to review by the Secretary of HHS.

1. Standards for Certain Professional Services: The Committee bill would require the Secretary to conduct a study on the hiring and dismissal practices of SNFs and NFs with respect to social workers, dieticians, activities professionals, and medical records practitioners and to report to Congress by January 1, 1993, on whether facilities have on their staffs persons with significantly different credentials as a result of new regulations that became effective October 1, 1990. The Committee also intends that the Secretary discuss in this report the impact any changes have on the quality of care provided by facilities.

2. Additional Requirements with Respect to Medicaid Nurse Staffing Waivers: The Committee bill would require the State agency granting the waivers of nurse staffing requirements to provide notice of a waiver to the appropriate State and substate long-term care ombudsman, to the protection and advocacy system and other appropriate State and private agencies. The Committee bill would also require nursing facilities with waivers to make reasonable efforts to notify present and prospective residents of the facility (or a guardian or legal representative of the resident) of the waiver.

3. Study on Staffing Requirements in Nursing Facilities: The Committee bill would further require the Secretary to study and report to the Congress by January 1, 1992, on minimum caregiver to resident ratios and minimum supervisor to caregiver ratios for nursing facilities receiving Medicaid payments.

Miscellaneous

1. Delay in Requirement for Remedies

Present law

OBRA 87 revises and expands the sanctions that States and the Secretary may impose against nursing facilities found to be out of compliance with the requirements for participation. OBRA required States to amend their Medicaid plans by October 1, 1989, to include certain sanctions that they could use to impose against noncompliant nursing facilities. OBRA also required the Secretary to provide guidance to the States on these sanctions by October 1, 1988, but specified that the failure of the Secretary to provide this guidance did not relieve a State of its responsibility for establishing the sanctions by the statutory deadline. The Secretary has not yet issued regulations providing this guidance.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would delay until April 1, 1991, the requirement that States establish certain sanctions to be imposed against noncompliant nursing facilities.

2. Resident access to clinical records

The Committee bill would require facilities to assure that residents or their legal representatives have access to current clinical records, promptly upon reasonable request;

3. Ombudsman program coordination with State Medicaid and survey and certification agencies

The Committee bill would require that State survey and certification agencies enter into agreement with the Office of the State Long-term Care ombudsman to provide for information exchange, case referral, and prompt notification of any adverse action against a SNF or NF.

4. Period for Resident assessment

The Committee bill would increase from 4 to 14 days the period permitted for resident assessment.

DEMONSTRATION: UNINSURED FAMILIES

Present law

Traditionally, Federal law has extended Medicaid eligibility only to people who are also eligible for cash assistance (SSI, due to age, blindness or disability, or AFDC, due to membership in a family with dependent children). These are called the "categorically needy." Federal law also permits States to cover the "medically needy"—individuals who meet the qualifications for those programs other than income and resource standards, and whose medical bills are high relative to their incomes. The medically needy include many elderly people in nursing homes who "spend down" income and resources to the point that they qualify for Medicaid. The eligibility standards for both the categorically and medically needy are determined largely by the States, so there is a wide variation in eligibility.

In recent years, Congress has extended Medicaid coverage to certain populations based solely on income level, without regard to potential eligibility for cash assistance programs. States must cover pregnant women, infants, and children up to the age of 6 in families whose income is below 133% of the Federal poverty level. States have the option to cover pregnant women and infants with family incomes up to 185% of the Federal poverty level, as well as children up to age 7 (or, at State option, age 8) born after September 30, 1983 whose family incomes are below 100% of poverty.

Committee provision

The Committee approved a provision to establish a demonstration program to permit for up to four States to conduct demonstration projects to provide a minimum health benefits package equal to the State's Medicaid package, to all individuals in families with incomes up to 150% of the Federal poverty level who are not otherwise eligible for Medicaid and do not have other insurance. Those with incomes below 100% of poverty would have all expenses paid by the State. Those with incomes between 100% and 150% of poverty would pay premiums, deductibles and copyaments on a sliding scale basis up to 3% of their monthly gross income. Where it is determined to be cost-effective, the State would pay contributions to employer-based health insurance available to the eligible individuals.

The State may impose a resource test in determining eligibility and may, with the Secretary's approval, restrict services other than early periodic screening, diagnostic and treatment services, to children under age 18. The demonstration project may not be used to pay for nursing home or other long-term care services, or for pregnancy related services in States which have picked up all Medicaid options relating to eligibility of pregnant women and children.

The demonstration project must begin no later than July 1, 1991 and will be of three years' duration. At least one, but no more than two of the projects must be conducted on a substate basis in an area containing a high percentage of racial or ethnic minorities. Other projects must be conducted on a statewide basis, in States which already provide the most generous coverage currently permitted under Federal law to pregnant women, infants and children. The Secretary may not approve a project unless it can reasonably be expected to improve access to health insurance for the uninsured.

The program is intended to demonstrate the effects of eliminating categorical eligibility for Medicaid, both on costs of the program and on reducing the number of uninsured individuals.

DEMONSTRATION: RESPITE CARE

Present law

Medicaid does not cover respite care services except where provided under a home and community-based services waiver approved by the Secretary under section 1915(c) of the Social Security Act. OBRA 1986 established a respite care pilot project under the Medicaid program in the State of New Jersey. This project is intended to determine the extent to which respite services will delay or avert the need for institutional care and how such services can enhance and sustain the role of the family in providing long-term care services for elderly and disabled individuals at risk of institutionalization. The project was to be conducted for a maximum of four years (FY 1987 through FY 1990), plus an additional period of up to six months for final evaluation and reporting.

Committee provision

The Committee bill extends the New Jersey respite care demonstration through September 30, 1992 to compensate for a two-year delay in initiation of the program.

DEMONSTRATION: AIDS

Present law

Eligibility for Medicaid and services offered are determined by States within guidelines established by Federal law. Certain population groups and services must be covered; States have the option of covering other groups and services. The mandatory services generally resemble those offered by traditional health insurance policies.

Federal Medicaid law requires that eligibility and services be uniform throughout a State (the so-called "statewideness" requirement), although this requirement may be waived by the Secretary in certain situations. With limited exceptions, the law also requires that services be comparable for all beneficiaries.

Individuals who test positive for HIV often do not qualify for Medicaid because they do not fit into one of the eligibility categories related to eligibility for a cash assistance program (AFDC or SSI), and are not members of the groups eligible by virtue of income level (pregnant women, infants, and children). Individuals with HIV often become eligible for Medicaid, however, after they have become seriously ill and have spent their resources and income on hospital or other medical care. (In fact, Medicaid pays for approximately 40 percent of all hospital costs incurred by AIDS patients.)

In addition, it is often difficult for AIDS patients, and other patients with complex medical and psychosocial needs, to obtain the various services they require. For example, a pregnant substance abuser with mental illness would be unlikely to find one medical or mental health facility that could address all her needs.

Committee provision

In order to determine the cost-effectiveness of early medical intervention in a hospital-based setting, for HIV-infected individuals and certain other individuals at risk for HIV-infection, two demonstration projects would be established, under which:

Hospitals would be responsible for providing certain services, in certain settings to individuals: (1) who have tested positive for and are infected with the HIV virus (without regard to whether they display symptoms of AIDS or related opportunistic diseases) and whose income and resources do not exceed the maximum amounts that a disabled individual may have under the State Medicaid plan, or (2) who are under age 19, pregnant, have multiple medical and psychosocial needs, and are at risk for HIV infection due to substance abuse.

Medicaid services would be expanded for these individuals to include: general and preventive health care services; prescribed drugs; educational services; case management; social work services/counseling; home care services, including assistance in the activities of daily living; substance abuse treatment services, and respite for caregivers.

The hospitals participating in the program would be paid on a per capita basis determined by the State.

These programs are expected to demonstrate whether early intervention in the treatment of HIV-infected individuals is more cost-effective than treatment for the disease once symptoms occur. The demonstration is also expected to demonstrate the extent to which centralizing various medical and psychosocial services enhances treatment. It is the Committee's intent that hospitals in States or localities with a high incidence of AIDS will be given priority in the selection of facilities for which these demonstration grants will be awarded.

DEMONSTRATION: DEEMED STATUS FOR MENTAL HEALTH FACILITIES

Present law

Under the Medicare program, a provide is said to have "deemed status" if it is accredited by the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Health Care Organizations (JCAHO). The term refers to the fact that the law specifically provides that such accreditation will satisfy most conditions of participation under the Medicare program, thus dispensing with the need for Federal enforcement of such conditions.

Under State Medicaid plans, a State may determine, through a State agency, whether a provider qualifies for program participation. Alternatively the State may involve private accrediting organizations in making such determinations.

Committee provision

The Committee-approved bill requires the Secretary to establish a demonstration project involving not more than 5 States in which deemed status is provided to mental health facilities (excluding ICFs/MR) by private agencies designated by the State in accordance with criteria developed by the Secretary. A mental health facility is defined, solely for purposes of this demonstration project, as a facility or part of a facility which provides, in an organized setting, outpatient mental health services, outpatient substance abuse and alcoholism services, residential treatment services for children, or day treatment services for children.

The Secretary would be required to consult with various accrediting agencies and provider and consumer organizations in determining criteria for granting deemed status to accrediting bodies, which will be reflected in agreements between those organizations and the Secretary.

PERMIT STATES TO MAKE DISABILITY DETERMINATIONS

Present law

On December 11, 1989, the Health Care Financing Administration issued a final rule, effective January 10, 1990, that prohibits States from making their own determinations of disability for the purpose of determining Medicaid eligibility.

Committee provision

All States would be given the option to make independent eligibility determinations—using Federal standards—for the purposes of Medicaid eligibility, pending a final determination by the Social Security Administration.

MEDICALLY NEEDY INCOME LEVEL FOR FAMILIES OF ONE

Present law

In a medically needy program, a client becomes eligible through deduction of medical expenses from income. After deductions, the client is eligible if the adjusted income does not exceed 133% of the AFDC payment standard that would be paid to a family of the same size without income or resources. The AFDC program does not have a standard for an individual. States are permitted to impute what this standard should be. Most States have been using the AFDC payment standard for a family of two for individuals. The typical medically needy Medicaid client is an adult, but the AFDC payment standard for one is developed to meet the needs of a child. Because of this, an adult has very little remaining income upon which to live.

Committee provision

The Committee-approved bill clarifies 1903(f)(3) so that States are permitted to continue to base medically needy eligibility for single persons on an AFDC payment standard for a family of two.

OPTIONAL SPEND-DOWN METHODOLOGY OPTION

States have the option of covering "medically needy" individuals—persons who, except for income and resource levels, fall into one of the categories covered by the State (i.e., aged, blind, disabled, member of a family with dependent children, pregnant women and certain children), and whose income and resources fall below the medically needy standards established by the State (according to certain Federal criteria). People may "spend down" to these levels by incurring medical expenses.

Typically, this spend down occurs when a person is institutionalized in a nursing home or has catastrophic health care expenses. In some cases, however, a person whose income and resources are close to the medically needy standard may regularly incur expenses, such as prescription drugs to treat a chronic illness, that make them newly eligible periodically (e.g., monthly). In such cases, the person must present incurred medical bills to establish eligibility.

Committee provision

States would be permitted to apply an alternative methodology for establishing eligibility for their medically needy programs. Medicaid applicants would be given the option to pay their "spend down" amount (i.e., the difference between their actual income and the medically needy income level) to the State Medicaid agency ("pay in"), becoming eligible upon doing so, rather than becoming eligible only after incurring medical expenses.

Under the proposed procedure, the Medicaid agency would notify clients of their monthly spend-down amount; clients could choose whether to pay in or incur the medical expenses to qualify. If an individual elects to pay in, a Medicaid card would be issued monthly until the person failed to make a payment or their eligibility terminated due to a change in circumstances.

This procedure is intended to simplify eligibility determinations for both the applicant and the State, and may afford individuals greater access to health care.

Federal financial participation could be claimed only for the amounts in excess of the spend-down amount paid in.

SANCTIONS FOR INPATIENT PSYCHIATRIC FACILITIES

Present law

Medicaid permits optional coverage of inpatient psychiatric services for children under age 21 in facilities that meet the Medicaid definition of a psychiatric hospital. Coverage is permitted only where a multidisciplinary team has determined that the services are necessary on an inpatient basis and can be reasonable expected to improve the patient's condition. This screening determination—known as the "certification-of-need" process—must be made for new admissions, emergency admissions, and existing patients who become eligible for Medicaid. Regulations prescribe details of the requirements.

Although these requirements have been in place since the optional services was added in 1972, the Department has not actively enforced the screening requirement. Recently, however, the HHS Inspector General began auditing selected States for compliance. Disallowances have been taken in two States and are expected in several others. The disallowances are based on failure to follow proper certification-of-need procedures; whether the admissions were actually appropriate is not at issue.

Committee provision

Disallowances for failure to comply with the regulations pertaining to certification of need requirements would be limited to the time period between admission and the date on which the facility has developed a plan of care for the patient or related documentation that reflects the need for inpatient care, or, where that is not applicable, to the date on which an independent utilization review was completed (pursuant to 42 C.F.R. sec. 441.155(c), or the earliest date that a utilization review is completed that determines that the admission was appropriate. Disallowances could be taken only for the 3-year period ending on the date the audit commenced. In addition, the disallowance would be limited to 25% of the amount in question.

The above limitations would apply to any disallowances or deferral actions with respect to which there has not been a final judicial determination or administrative decision not subject to judicial review as of the date of enactment. The limitations on disallowances for failure to comply with the certification of need requirements would not apply for violations occurring after the date of enactment.

EXTEND AUTHORIZATION OF MINNESOTA MANAGED CARE DEMONSTRATION

Present law

Section 1115 of the Social Security Act provides for demonstration waives of State plan requirements in order to permit the States "to achieve more efficient and effective use of funds for public assistance." Under one such 115 demonstration project, the Minnesota Department of Human Services has been testing a pre-paid capitated approach to providing medical assistance since 1985. The waiver will expire June 30, 1991.

Committee provision

Extend demonstration project for an additional five years.

DEMONSTRATION: ROBERT WOOD JOHNSON LONG-TERM CARE PROJECTS

Present law

In most States, Medicaid will cover the costs of long-term care for poor, elderly individuals who are eligible for SSI. A State may also cover long-term care for elderly individuals with incomes exceeding SSI levels in several ways.

First, a State may establish higher income standards for elderly individuals in nursing facilities, based upon the greater need for financial assistance these individuals would have if they were not in an institution. The income levels for these individuals may not exceed 300 percent of the SSI benefit rate for an individual. Second, a State may opt to cover elderly individuals with incomes below 100 percent of poverty for the wider package of benefits available under its State Medicaid plan. Third, a State may establish a "medically needy" program under which an individual with income exceeding SSI levels become eligible for long-term care by incurring expenses for medical care that reduce his or her income to a level specified by the State; this level may not exceed 133⅓ of the amount that would be payable to a family of the same size without income of resources under the State's AFDC program.

In order to be classified as medically needy, individuals "spend down" to the medically needy level by incurring sufficient medical expenses. They must contribute to the cost of long-term care to the extent that subsequent income would cause the eligibility level to be exceeded.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation has awarded planning grants to a number of States to investigate the potential role of public-private partnerships in financing long-term care.

Committee provision

The Committee bill requires the Secretary to approve 10 State Medicaid demonstration projects, in States with long-term care grants from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, to permit States to implement public-private partnerships for long-term care insurance. Under the State plans, Medicaid would "reinsure" individuals who purchase approved private long-term care insurance by deeming such individuals eligible for Medicaid long-term care services after the expiration of the benefits provided by the private long-term care insurance plan. Thus, certain resources of these individuals would be protected.

The Secretary would be authorized to waive requirements relating to statewideness, comparability, income and resource eligibility limits, Qualified Medicare Beneficiaries, collection of premiums, liens, recovery of assets, freedom of choice, personal needs allowances, protection of community spouses, and transfer of assets.

States would be required to assure the Secretary that: the average per capita and aggregate expenditures for long-term care services for individuals covered under the waiver do not exceed the expenditures for such individuals under the State plan in the absence of the waiver; services to Medicaid beneficiaries not involved in the demonstration program are not affected; State-approved insurance policies meet certain (NAIC) guidelines; and Medicaid payments will be made on behalf of the demonstration project participants after the demonstration program has expired. States and the Secretary also will be required to report certain information to Congress. The projects will be for an initial period of five years and must be renewed for another five years if requirements have been met. The Secretary would be required to award the demonstration projects in a budget neutral manner.

CLARIFICATION OF SUBSTANCE ABUSE COVERAGE

Present law

Under the Medicaid program, States may cover a number of services at their option, in addition to specified mandatory services. There has been some confusion among States about whether substance abuse treatment may be covered. A recent memorandum from HCFA (August 1990) clarified that any of the Medicaid services that States may offer may be used to treat substance abuse.

Committee provision

The Committee bill includes a provision designed to codify the HCFA policy that nothing shall be excluded from Federal financial participation solely because it is provided as a treatment service for alcoholism or drug dependency.

HOME AND COMMUNITY BASED SERVICES WAIVERS

Present law

a. Bed and board exclusion: Section 2176 of OBRA 1981 permitted States to obtain waivers of certain Medicaid requirements in order to establish a home and community-based service program for a defined population (such as the aged or the mentally retarded) of persons who would otherwise require long-term institutional care. Costs for bed and board are excluded from those which a State may include as Medicaid costs under a waiver.

b. Residents of Terminated ICFs/MR: In order to obtain a Section 2176 waiver, the State must demonstrate that average per capita Medicaid costs for waiver participants are no greater than would have been incurred in the absence of the waiver.

c. HCBS Waiver Baseline Costs: Section 1915(d) waivers place an overall ceiling on the amount a State can spend on all long-term care services, including nursing home and community-based care for persons aged 65 and older. States must determine how much was spent on such services during a base year (usually Federal fiscal year 1987), and inflate the base year amount forward by taking into account inflation and the growth in the age 65 and older population.

d. Freedom of choice of case managers: Home and community-based waivers may not include waiver of patients' freedom to choose among providers of services. Where case management services are purchased as a Medicaid program cost under the waivers, State must allow the recipient of waiver services to choose any provider of case management services.

Committee provision

a. Bed and Board Exclusion: The "bed and board" exclusion would be applied to the share of rent and food costs attributable to an unrelated caregiver who is residing with a waiver participant and without whom the participant would require institutional care.

b. Residents of Terminated ICFs/MR: In estimating per capita costs in the absence of a waiver for persons with mental retardation or a related condition who are residents of an ICF/MR whose Medicaid participation has been terminated, the State may use the costs that would have been incurred if the facility had not been terminated.

c. HCBS Waiver Baseline Costs: Include the costs of OBRA 1987 nursing home reform provisions and other statutory requirements hereinafter in calculating the baseline costs for waiver determinations.

d. Freedom of choice of case managers: Allow States to restrict waiver clients' cloice of case management providers to those employed or trained by the State. States would have to provide assurances to the Secretary that the restriction would not substantially limit the beneficiary's access to waiver services.

MEDICAID PREPAID PLAN PROVISIONS

Present law

a. Physician Incentive Payments: HMOs and CMPs have been permitted to make arrangements with physicians to assume all or part of the financial risk of providing services to Medicaid beneficiaries. However, OBRA 1986 prohibited a health maintenance organization with a Medicaid risk contract from making direct or indirect payments to a physician as an inducement to reduce or limit services provided to enrollees. This prohibition is effective April 1, 1991. Organizations that violate this requirement are subject to civil monetary penalties.

b. Enrollment Composition Requirement: No Federal Medicaid matching payments may be made for services provided by entities contracting with States on a prepaid basis if 75 percent or more of the enrollees are medicaid recipients or Medicare beneficiaries.

Proposal

a. Physician Incentive Payments: The State would be authorized to collect such information as may be necessary to identify inappropriate financial and incentive arrangements used by a prepaid plan with a contract for services provided to Medicaid enrollees.

A prepaid plan with a Medicaid contract would be prohibited from making any direct and specific payment to an individual physician as an inducement to withhold or limit a specific medically necessary service to an identifiable patient. If a plan violates this prohibition, it will be subject to civil monetary penalties of $25,000 for each determination.

A prepaid plan could not place an individual physician or physician group at substantial financial risk (as determined by the State) for services which are rendered by a provider other than the physician or group unless the plan provides adequate protections (as determined by the State) to limit liability, such as stop-loss reinsurance or appropriate risk corridors. A plan would also be required to conduct periodic surveys to determine enrollee satisfaction with access to, and quality of, services, and to have in place quality assurance mechanisms to guard against underutilization. If a plan violates this prohibition, it will be subject to civil monetary penalties of $25,000 for each determination.

b. Enrollment Composition Requirements: The Secretary will have the authority to approve waivers of the 75 percent enrollment standard on a case-by-case basis after he or she has complied with the following requirements:

1. conduct a study of situations where the 75/25 percent enrollment standard is not practical and/or where alternative safeguards or procedures other than private enrollment and oversight could be used to assure that prepaid health care organizations provide quality care and are fiscally sound;

2. publish in the Federal Register by April 1, 1991 for review and comment a set of minimum standards that prepaid health plans must meet to be considered eligible for an enrollment composition waiver (including standards to assure that high quality is maintained) and the terms under which waivers will be approved; and

3. publish revised standards and terms as a final notice.

A waiver under this section shall initially be approved for three years; the Secretary shall determine the terms of the renewal.

DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE FORMULA

Present law

States are required, in making payment for inpatient hospital services, to take into account the situation of hospitals that serve a disproportionate share of low-income patients with special needs. Section 4112 of OBRA 1987 established minimum criteria for defining disproportionate share hospitals and for payment adjustments States are required to make to those hospitals. OBRA 1987 and the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 established special rules for States that already had program for compensating these hospitals before the enactment of the minimum requirements. The special rule for one of these States (Texas) expires in June 1991.

Guidelines issued by HCFA to assist States in implementing the statutory requirements provided three options for calculating payments to disproportionate share hospitals—the two specified in the statute and another mechanism developed by the State, if the State could demonstrate that it would result in payment adjustments at least equal to the amounts that would be paid under either of the alternatives defined in the law.

On March 19, 1990, HCFA issued proposed regulations that would eliminate this third option for determining payments to disproportionate share hospitals. At least 16 States were employing alternative payment calculation formulae under the interim guidelines, which were approved by the Secretary through approval of the State plans for medical assistance. These States would be required to redesign their payment calculation formulae if this new regulation becomes effective.

Committee provision

In order to give States flexibility in identifying and paying disproportionate share hospitals, States would be permitted to continue using disproportionate share payment methodologies they are currently using provided that they met specified criteria. In addition, States would be provided with additional flexibility in determining which hospitals should be considered disproportionate share hospitals.

In order to be considered a disproportionate share hospital, a hospital would have to meet the criteria (related to Medicaid or low-income utilization rates) currently contained in the statute, or (1) meet other criteria specified by the State that identify hospitals serving a disproportionate number of low income patients with special needs, or (2) meet other criteria specified in an amendment to the State plan that was approved by the Secretary prior to May 1, 1989.

States could continue to use current payment calculation methodologies, including those which treat different types of hospitals in different ways, provided that the amount of each payment adjustment is reasonably related to services provided to Medicaid or low-income patients and that either: (1) the amount of each payment adjustment is at least as great as the minimum currently specified in the law, or (2) the aggregate amount of payment adjustments under a State plan approved prior to December 22, 1987 is not less than the aggregate amount of payment adjustments that otherwise would be required if subsection (c)(1) of section 1923 applied.

A technical amendment would be made that would require States identifying hospitals on the basis of low-income utilization rates to make payments in proportion to the amount by which such rate exceeds 25 percent. (This is parallel to the current requirement for proportionality to the Medicaid utilization rate for hospitals deemed to be disproportionate share hospitals on that basis.)

VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS/PROVIDER-SPECIFIC TAXES

Present law

Current regulations allow States to use as State expenditures, for purposes of receiving Federal matching payments, funds donated from private sources. Donated funds must be transferred to the State Medicaid agency, be under the agency's administrative control, and not revert to the donor's facility or use unless the donor is a nonprofit organization and the Medicaid agency, of its own volition decides to use the donor's facility. In addition, some States use funds that are generated from taxes on health care providers to draw Federal matching funds.

In the President's proposed budget for FY 1989, the Administration indicated that it would issue regulations to limit the use of donated funds to draw down Federal matching payments. Section 8431 of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 prohibited the Secretary from issuing final regulations changing the treatment of voluntary contributions or provider-paid taxes utilized by States to receive Federal matching funds under Medicaid. The prohibition expired May 1, 1989.

The President's budget for FY 1990 indicated that regulations changing the treatment of these contributions and taxes would be issued after expiration of the ban, but the regulations were not issued.

In its reconciliation bill last year, the Committee approved an amendment that would have permitted states to use donated funds for the purposes of drawing down Federal funds if the State's financial participation in Medicaid in a year, and donations by a particular hospital could not exceed 10 percent of the hospital's gross revenues for a cost reporting period (excluding any Federal revenues under Medicare, Medicaid, or the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant).

The conference agreement simply extended the moratorium on regulations pertaining to both donated funds and provider-specific taxes until December 31, 1990.

In February 1990, HCFA issued proposed regulations that would prohibit State use of either voluntary contributions or provider-specific taxes. Subsequently, HCFA has publicly indicated that it will reconsider its position.

Committee provision

The Committee-approved provision continues the moratorium on regulations pertaining to both voluntary contributions and provider-specific taxes until September 1, 1991. The Committee expects that the Department will seek the advice of outside experts in health economics in reconsidering its policy, and expects a new proposed regulation to be issued within six months.

PROHIBIT WAIVER OF REASONABLE AND ADEQUATE PAYMENT RATES

Present law

In granting waivers of freedom-of-choice under section 1915(b)(4), to allow for selective contracting program, the Secretary has, in some instances, also granted waivers of the provision that requires States to pay hospitals rates that are reasonable and adequate to meet the costs which must be incurred by efficiently and economically operated facilities (the "Boren amendment") (section 1902(a)(13)(A)).

Committee provision

The Committee provision would prohibit the Secretary from waiving the reasonable and adequate payment rates for facilities under freedom-of-choice waivers and clarifies that rates established for facilities under selective contracting arrangements must be reasonable and adequate for economically and efficiently operated facilities.

The provision does not prohibit States from establishing selective contracting arrangements for hospital and other institutional services. Nor does it remove the Secretary's authority to waive other portions of section 1902 that could allow the States to pay different rates to different providers under a selective contracting arrangement.

CHILD CARE REPORT LANGUAGE

The Committee has included in its amendment the Child Care and Development Block Grant Act of 1990, a program in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources. The Committee has taken the unusual step of including a program that is in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources in order to preserve the Senate's intent (as manifest in Senate passage of S. 5 on June 23, 1989) that child care legislation include both expanded tax credits and such a grant program to states. The Committee intends that the child care block grant remain exclusively in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

The purpose of this block grant program is to increase the availability, affordability, and quality of child care and to expand the range of choices available to parents throughout the nation. The provision provides financial assistance to low-income and working families to help them find and afford quality child care services for their children. It also contains provisions to enhance the quality and increase the supply of child care available to all parents, include those who receive no financial assistance under the block grant project.

More specifically, the purposes of this block grant program are to give parents the maximum choice possible in addressing family child care needs. Additionally, this provision is intended to build on and to strengthen the role of the family by seeking to ensure that parents are not forced by the lack of available programs or financial resources to place a child in an unsafe or unhealthy child care arrangement; to promote the availability and diversity of quality child care services to expand child care options available to all families who need such services; to provide assistance to families whose financial resources are not sufficient to enable such families to pay the full cost of necessary child care; to improve the productivity of parents in the labor force by lessening the stresses related to the absence of adequate child care services; and to provide assistance to states and Indian tribes to improve the quality of, and coordination among, child care programs and early childhood development programs.

The subchapter authorizes $750,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, $825,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, $925,000,000 for fiscal year 1993, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1994 and 1995. Block grant funds are provided to states in accordance with a formula based on numbers of young children and of school lunch recipients.

Use of Block Grant Funds for Child Care Services

Each state may use 75 percent of block grant funds for direct assistance to parents for child care services and to increase the supply and to improve the quality of child care. The Committee believes that parents should have the greatest choice possible in selecting child care for their children. Thus, parents assisted under section 658E(c)(3)(B) would have complete discretion to choose from a wide range of child care arrangements, including care by relatives, churches, synagogues, family providers, centers, schools, and employers. All such providers could be paid with funds from this program through grants or contracts or through certificates provided to the parent. A parent assisted under section 658E(c)(3)(B) must be given the option of receiving a certificate.

States may use some portion of these funds to increase the supply of child care services. To this end, the Committee expects each state to consider using funds for one or more of the following activities, although this is not intended to be an exclusive list, and the Committee encourages innovative approaches to providing child care for families. The Committee suggests: (1) grants or loans to family and non-profit providers to help establish or expand programs, (2) grants or loans to providers to assist them in meeting state and local standards, (3) activities to promote business involvement in meeting employee child care needs, (4) assistance for the temporary care of eligible children who are sick, (5) assistance for the establishment and operation of child care programs for eligible children who are homeless, (6) assistance to link publicly-assisted child care programs with programs designed to assist the elderly, (7) establishment and administration of a revolving loan fund from which a person desiring to make capital improvement to his or her principal residence may obtain a loan in order to become a family care provider and to comply with applicable state standards, (8) planning, developing and operating a child care certificate program, (9) assistance for comprehensive child care demonstration projects within public school buildings in order to provide year-round, on-site, all-day child care for children ages 3 to 5 and on-site before- and after-school care and which include a family support system for parents (including a home visitation program), (10) grants to local libraries to improve the quality and availability of early childhood learning resources, and (11) establishment of a state liability risk retention pool for child care providers.

The Committee is aware that child care providers are concerned about exposure to liability and the high cost of liability insurance coverage. In come cases, the cost of this insurance has prohibited potential child care providers from openly entering the market. To help provide a mechanism for relief of this liability burden, the Committee has included establishment of liability risk retention groups in the list of activities suggested above that may be undertaken by states to promote and improve child care services. It is assumed that a state which elects to establish such a program may pattern it after the Liability Risk Retention Act of 1986 and may wish to seek technical assistance from the Department of Commerce.

Use of 25 Percent Reserve of Funds

Each state will reserve 25 percent of block grant funds for grants and contracts to providers of early childhood development or before- and after-school services and for activities to improve the quality of child care. Forty percent of this reserve should be allocated to early childhood development and before- and after-school care, 40 percent to quality activities, and the remaining 20 percent may be used for either purpose. The Committee expects that a state may choose to assign responsibility for administration of early childhood development and/or latchkey programs to an agency other than the lead agency. Eligible quality activities include assisting resource and referral programs; making grants or providing loans to providers to assist them in meeting state and local child care standards; establishing or improving child care standards; improving the monitoring of, compliance with, and enforcement of, state standards and licensing and regulatory requirements; providing training and technical assistance; and improving salaries and other compensation paid to child care providers.

General Provisions

Families eligible for assistance in paying for child care are those earning less than 75 percent of the state median income and with children under age 13. The amount of assistance would be based on a sliding fee scale, and providers would receive payment at rates which would ensure equal access to services comparable to those provided to children whose care is not publicly subsidized (with categories for comparability to be determined by the state).

Parental choice and involvement are further enhanced through provisions for unlimited access to providers during the day and within the care setting, for parental complaint procedures and access to records of substantiated parental complaints, and for consumer education.

The Committee intends that the determination whether any financial assistance provided under this subchapter, including a loan, grant or child care certificate, constitutes Federal financial assistance for purposes of title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq.), title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (20 U.S.C. 1681, et seq.), the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794 et seq.), the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.), all as amended, and the regulations issued thereunder, shall be made in accordance with those provisions.

To receive funds, a state will submit a plan that includes: designation of a lead agency; local consultation regarding use of funds; coordination with existing programs; descriptions of planned use of funds, in general and in the quality reserve; supplement not supplant language; priority for very low income children and children with special needs; and use of a sliding fee scale. The Committee intends that, to the maximum extent practicable, the lead agency be a state entity in existence on or before the date of enactment of this subchapter with experience in the administration of appropriate child care programs.

All eligible providers will be licensed, regulated, or registered prior to payment and must comply with applicable state and local licensing and regulatory requirements. The state plan must describe health and safety requirements established by the state for all providers funded through this subchapter and ensure that such providers demonstrate compliance with these requirements. These health and safety requirements are to cover the prevention and control of infectious diseases, building and physical plant premises safety, and a minimum health and safety training requirement. The health and safety training requirement is to be appropriate to the provider setting and thus may vary by type of provider and may utilize past experience or other informal training. The state is to conduct a one-time review of state licensing and regulatory requirements and policies, unless the state has done so within three years prior to the date of enactment.

The state will report to the Secretary of Health and Human Services annually on the use of funds (including use of the quality reserve); data on caregivers and children in care; results of any review of state licensing and regulatory requirements; an explanation of any state actions to reduce the levels of state standards; state actions to improve the quality of care; and a description of standards in the state.

The Secretary will report to Congress annually on use of funds in the states (including the use of the quality reserve). The report will include a summary and analysis of the above data provided by the States to the Secretary and any recommendations to Congress on further steps necessary to improve access to quality and affordable child care.

SUBTITLE D—TRADE PROVISIONS

Part I—Customs User Fees (Section 6301)

Customs User Fees

(a) Extension of customs user fees

Present law: Sections 111 through 115 of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 (Public Law 101-382) restructured the merchandise processing fee in order to bring the United States into conformity with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and reauthorized the merchandise processing fee and the fees imposed on the processing of air passengers from abroad, various conveyances, dutiable mail, and customs broker permits through FY 1991.

Proposed change: The provision would extend the merchandise processing fee and other above-mentioned user fees through September 30, 1995.

Effective date: The provision would be effective on and after October 1, 1991.

(b) Adjustment mechanism for merchandise processing fee on formal entries.

Present law. Present law provides no authority for the Customs Service to adjust the merchandise processing fee on formal entries, since the fee had been extended only through FY 1991. Sections 113(a) (3), (4), and (5) of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 require the Customs Service to estimate for each fiscal year, based on the amounts appropriated, the amount of the fee that would, if imposed on the processing of merchandise, offset the salaries and expenses subject to reimbursement from the fee that will likely be incurred by Customs in conducting operations during that fiscal year, develop a detailed explanation of the cost base and methodology used to compute the fee and report the estimates and explanations to the House Ways and Means and Senate Finance Committees. As provided in Section 111(a) of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990, the merchandise processing fee on formal entries is 0.17 percent ad valorem.

Proposed change: The Committee bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the fee in order to take into account changes in economic conditions or trade flows and avoid unintended under- or over-collections. The Committee believes this adjustment mechanism would help to ensure that the user fee would continue to conform to the requirements of the GATT.

Under the provision, the Secretary may adjust the merchandise processing fee on formal entries by the lesser of either the amount needed to meet the appropriated levels for allowable Commercial Operations costs, or 0.02 percentage points. When an adjustment is made, the Secretary shall take into consideration any under- or over-collections in prior years. The Secretary may adjust the fee only after: (1) publishing within 30 calendar days of the date of enactment of the Customs Service's regular annual appropriation both a notice of intent to adjust the fee, the amount of the proposed fee, and an invitation for public comment on the proposal; (2) consulting with the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees for a period of 30 legislative days (as defined in the section); and (3) publishing a final determination of the new rate in the Federal Register after the public comment and Congressional consultation periods have expired. The new rate would be effective 15 days after the determination is published.

Effective date: The amendments made by this section shall apply to the processing of merchandise during any fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1991.

(c) Small user fee airports

Present law: Section 111 of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 exempts air courier hubs, express consignment carrier facilities and user-fee airport operators from the Customs user fees on "informal" entries (generally, those valued at less than $1,250). In lieu of these informal fees, section 111 requires that these entities reimburse Customs in an amount that is double their current assessments for Customs processing services.

Proposed change: Under this provision, user fee airports that process fewer than 25,000 informal entries annually would be required to collect the applicable informal entry user fee. Such low-volume user fee airports would not be required to pay the double reimbursement to Customs. This change reflects the fact that the double reimbursement requirement imposed an unintended hardship on those user fee airports that process small volumes of informal entries. High volume user fee airports continue to be exempt from the user fees for informal entries and subject to the double reimbursement requirement.

Effective: October 1, 1990.

Part II—Technical Corrections (Sections 6311 and 6312)

Technical Corrections to Customs and Trade Act of 1990

Present law: The Customs and Trade Act of 1990 included numerous tariff provisions and miscellaneous Customs provisions.

Proposed change: This section corrects several technical errors in the Customs and Trade Act of 1990. In particular, it corrects drafting errors in various tariff provisions, and reinstates two statutory provisions of the Customs Forfeiture Fund that were inadvertently deleted from existing law.

Effective date: The amendments to the miscellaneous tariff provisions apply to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after October 1, 1990. Where applicable, retroactivity contained in original provisions is preserved. The Customs Forfeiture Fund amendments are retroactive to August 21, 1990.

INCREASES IN PBGC PREMIUMS

Present law

Under present law, a flat-rate per-participant premium of $16 is payable with respect to each single-employer defined benefit pension plan. The premium is payable to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC). An additional premium of $6.00 multiplied by $1,000 of unfunded vested benefits is payable with respect to underfunded plans. The maximum additional per-participant premium (i.e., the total additional premium divided by the number of plan participants) is capped at $34.

Committee provision

The Committee bill raises the flat-rate PBGC premium to $19, increases the assessment per $1,000 of unfunded vested benefits to $9, and increases the per-participant cap on the additional premium to $53. The increases are effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1990. The Committee believes that it is appropriate to increase the PBGC premiums in a manner so that the proportion of premium revenue raised from the flat-rate premium and the additional premium keeps relatively constant compared to present law.

II—REVENUE TITLE (TITLE VII OF THE BILL)

SUBTITLE A. EXTEND EXPIRING TAX PROVISIONS THROUGH 1991

1. Allocation and apportionment of research and experimental expenditures (sec. 7101 of the bill and sec. 864(f) of the Code)

Present Law

Foreign tax credit and source rules

Under the Code, each item of income is assigned either a U.S. source or a foreign source. The foreign tax credit for foreign taxes paid on foreign source income is limited to the amount of U.S. tax otherwise payable on foreign source income. The foreign tax credit is not available against U.S. tax on U.S. source income. (This is known as the foreign tax credit limitation.) A shift in the source of income from foreign to U.S. may increase net U.S. tax for some taxpayers by reducing the foreign tax credit limitation.

In determining foreign source taxable income for purposes of computing the foreign tax credit limitation, and for other tax purposes, taxpayers are required to apportion expenses between foreign source income and U.S. source income (Code secs. 861-864). A shift in the apportionment of expenses from U.S. source to foreign source gross income decreases foreign source taxable income. This decrease may increase U.S. tax by reducing the foreign tax credit limitation.

Research and experimental expense allocation regulation

Treasury Regulation section 1.861-8 (promulgated in 1977) sets forth detailed rules for allocating and apportioning several categories of expenses, including deductible research and experimental expenditures ("research expenses"). The regulation provides that research expenses are ordinarily considered definitely related to all gross income reasonably connected with one or more of 32 product categories based on two-digit classifications of the Standard Industrial Classification ("SIC") system. Research expenses are not traced solely to the income generated by the particular product which benefited from the research activity. Instead, these expenses are associated with all the income within the SIC product group in which the product is classified.

The Treasury regulation contemplates that taxpayers will sometimes undertake research solely to meet legal requirements imposed by a particular governmental entity with respect to improvement or marketing of specific products or processes. In some cases, such research cannot reasonably be expected to generate income (beyond de minimis amounts) outside that governmental entity's jurisdiction. If so, the deductions allowable for such associated research expense are allocated solely to gross income from the geographic source that includes that jurisdiction.

After research expenses incurred to meet legal requirements are allocated under the above rule, any remaining research expenses are generally apportioned to foreign source income based on the ratio of total foreign source sales receipts in the SIC product group with which the expenses are identified to the total such worldwide sales receipts in that product group (the "sales" or "gross receipts" method). In computing this fraction, sales by a party controlled or uncontrolled by the taxpayer may be taken into account if the party can reasonably be expected to benefit from the research expense. However, the regulation provides that a taxpayer using the sales method may first apportion at least 30 percent of research expense remaining after allocation to meet legal requirements exclusively to income from the geographic source where over half of the taxpayer's research and development is performed.

Thus, for example, a taxpayer that performs 50 percent or more of its research and development in the United States may automatically apportion at least 30 percent of its remaining research expense to U.S. source income. A taxpayer can choose to apportion to the geographic source where research and development is performed a percentage of research expense significantly greater than 30 percent if the taxpayer establishes that the higher percentage is warranted because the research and development is reasonably expected to have a very limited or long-delayed application outside that geographic source.

Alternatively, subject to certain limitations, a taxpayer may elect to apportion its research expense remaining after any allocation to meet legal requirements under one of two optional gross income methods. Under these optional methods, a taxpayer generally apportions its research expense on the basis of relative amounts of gross income from U.S. and foreign sources. If a taxpayer makes an automatic place-of-performance apportionment, the taxpayer may not use either optional gross income method.

The basic limitation on the use of the optional gross income methods is that the respective portions of a taxpayer's research expense apportioned to U.S. and foreign source income using these methods can not be less than 50 percent of the respective portions that would be apportioned to each income grouping using a combination of the sales and place-of-performance apportionment methods.

If this 50-percent limitation is satisfied with respect to both income groupings, the taxpayer may apportion the amount of its research expense that remains after allocation under the legal requirements test ratably on the basis of foreign and U.S. gross income. If the 50-percent limitation is not satisfied with respect to one of the income groupings, then the taxpayer must apportion to that income grouping 50 percent of the amount of its research expense which would have been apportioned to that income grouping under the sales and place-of-performance methods. A taxpayer electing an optional gross income method may be able then to reduce the amount of its research expense apportioned to foreign source income to as little as one-half of the amount that would be apportioned to foreign source income under the sales method.

For example, consider a taxpayer with $110 of U.S.-performed research expense and equal U.S. and foreign sales. Assume that $10 of the research expense is to meet U.S. legal requirements and is allocated to U.S. source income. Of the remaining $100, 30 percent ($30) is exclusively apportioned to U.S. source income under the automatic place-of-performance rule and the remaining $70 is divided evenly between U.S. and foreign source income, using the sales method. Thus, under this method $35 would be allocated to foreign source income and $75 would be allocated to U.S. source income. Under the optional gross income methods, the $35 of research expense allocated to foreign sources can be reduced as much as 50 percent, to $17.50. This can occur, for example, if the foreign sales were made by a foreign subsidiary that did not repatriate earnings to the U.S. corporation, and thus a disproportionately high fraction of the U.S. corporation's income is from U.S. sources.

The optional gross income methods apply to all of a taxpayer's gross income, not gross income on a product category basis.

Temporary moratorium and Treasury study

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (ERTA) provided that, for a taxpayer's first two taxable years beginning within two years after the date of its enactment (August 13, 1981), all research and experimental expenditures (within the meaning of sec. 174) paid or incurred in those years for research activities conducted in the United States were to be allocated or apportioned to income from sources within the United States (sec. 223 of ERTA).

This two-year moratorium was effectively extended for two additional years by the Tax Reform Act of 1984 (the "1984 Act"). Under section 126 of the 1984 Act, for taxable years beginning generally after August 13, 1983, and on or before August 1, 1985, all of a taxpayer's research and experimental expenditures (within the meaning of sec. 174) attributable to research activities conducted in the United States were to be allocated to sources within the United States for purposes of computing taxable income from U.S. sources and taxable income from sources outside the United States.

One reason Congress cited for enacting the original two-year moratorium was that some foreign countries do not allow deductions under their tax laws for expenses of research activities conducted in the United States. Taxpayers argued that this disallowance caused U.S.-based research to be disadvantaged. First, U.S.-based research expense is deemed to be allocated to a foreign country which may not recognize that such amount is deductible as an expense. The allocation of this U.S.-based research expense to foreign sources had the effect of reducing the foreign tax credit of U.S. taxpayers. Because those taxpayers could take their deductions if the research occurred in the foreign country, taxpayers argued that there was an incentive to shift their research expenditures to those foreign countries whose laws disallow tax deductions for research activities conducted in the United States but allow tax deductions for research expenditures incurred locally.

Accordingly, Congress concluded that the Treasury Department should study the impact of the allocation of research expenses under the 1977 regulation on U.S.-based research activities and on the availability of the foreign tax credit. Pending the outcome of the study, Congress concluded that expenses should be charged to the cost of generating U.S. source income, regardless of whether such research was a direct or indirect cost of producing foreign source income.

On the ground that a reduction in research and development might adversely affect the competitive position of the United States, the 1983 Treasury report recommended the two-year extension of the moratorium that was ultimately enacted by Congress in 1984. The extension was intended to allow Congress to consider further the results of the Treasury study.

The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (the "1985 Act") extended the moratorium on the application of the research and experimental expense allocation rules of the 1977 regulation generally for one additional taxable year beginning after August 1, 1985, and on or before August 1, 1986.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 (the "1986 Act") permitted the moratorium on application of the research expense allocation rules in regulation section 1.861-8 to expire. However, for taxable years beginning after August 1, 1986, and on or before August 1, 1987, application of the regulation was liberalized by the 1986 Act in three respects, which were intended by Congress to provide an additional tax incentive to conduct research in the United States while Congress analyzed whether any additional permanent incentive was necessary.

The first liberalization under the 1986 Act was that for the specified one-year period, 50 percent of all remaining amounts allowable as a deduction for qualified research and experimental expenditures (that is, research and experimental expenditures within the meaning of section 174 that are attributable to activities conducted in the United States) after allocation of legally required research expenses could be apportioned to U.S. source income and deducted from such income in determining the amount of taxable U.S. source income. The 1986 Act thus had the effect of increasing the automatic place-of-performance apportionment percentage for U.S.-based research expense from 30 percent to 50 percent.

The 1986 Act further provided that, for the specified one-year period, the portion of those amounts allowable as a deduction for qualified research and experimental expenditures that remained after any legal requirements allocation and the 50 percent automatic place-of-performance apportionment were apportioned either on the basis of sales or gross income. Thus, the 1986 Act's second effective liberalization of the regulation was to allow the automatic place-of-performance apportionment temporarily to taxpayers who elected to apportion expenses using the optional gross income method, rather than only to taxpayers that used the standard sales method of apportionment. Third, the 1986 Act had the effect of temporarily suspending the regulatory rule that prohibits taxpayers from using the optional gross income method to reduce allocation of research expense to foreign source income by more than 50 percent of the amount that would be allocated to foreign source income under the sales method.

The temporary modifications made by the 1986 Act to the research expense allocation rules in regulation section 1.861-8 applied for purposes of computing taxable income from U.S. sources and taxable income from sources outside the United States. The modifications applied only to the allocation of expenditures for research and experimental activities conducted in the United States, and only for the purposes of geographic sourcing of income; the modifications did not apply for other purposes, such as the computation of combined taxable income of a FSC (or DISC) and its related supplier. Also, the modifications did not apply to any expenditure for the acquisition or improvement of land, or for the acquisition or improvement of depreciable or depletable property to be used in connection with research or experimentation.

The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (the "1988 Act") further modified, again on a temporary basis, the rules for sourcing research expenditures. These modifications were effective only for the first four months of a taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after August 1, 1987 (treating all applicable expenditures in that taxable year as if they were incurred ratably over the year). Under the 1988 Act, the treatment of research and development expenditures incurred to meet certain legal requirements was unchanged. After applying the legal requirements rule, however, the 1988 Act modifications provided that 64 percent of the U.S.-based research expenses remaining to be allocated and apportioned were allocated to U.S. source income and 64 percent of the remaining foreign-based research expenses were allocated to foreign source income. The remaining research expenditures treated as having been incurred during this four-month period were allocated and apportioned either on the basis of sales or gross income. However, if the gross income method of apportionment was utilized, the amount apportioned to foreign source income could be no less than 30 percent of the amount that would have been apportioned to foreign source income had the sales method been used.

Generally, for the remainder of a taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after August 1, 1987 (and for subsequent taxable years), the rules set forth in regulation section 1.861-8 were (and are) applicable with respect to sourcing research and experimental expenditures.

The Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1989 (the "1989 Act") extended, again on a temporary basis, the rules for sourcing research expenditures that were contained in the 1988 Act. As extended, these rules were effective only for the first nine months of a taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after August 1, 1989, and before August 2, 1990 (treating all applicable expenditures in that taxable year as if they were incurred ratably over the year). Generally, for the remainder of a taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after August 1, 1989, and before August 2, 1990 (and for subsequent taxable years), the rules set forth in regulation section 1.861-8 were (and are) applicable with respect to sourcing research and experimental expenditures.

Reasons for Change

In the 9 years since the first temporary moratorium on the 1977 regulation was enacted, Congress, the Treasury Department, and representatives of affected industries have intensely scrutinized the effects of the research and experimental allocation rules on research activities.[1] That scrutiny has not resulted in an unambiguous recommendation regarding the appropriateness of allocating U.S.-based research expenses to U.S. source income under either the 1977 regulation, the complete moratorium, or the partial moratoria of the 1986 and 1988 Acts. On the one hand, there are those who argue that the moratorium and the partial moratoria had a beneficial effect on U.S. research activity and on U.S. competitiveness in world-wide markets. On the other hand, there are those whose studies prompt them to conclude otherwise. Furthermore, the tax costs of both the total and the partial moratoria have been significant, and the tax benefits they have bestowed are distributed somewhat arbitrarily among taxpayers. At the same time, these taxpayers have faced a prolonged period of uncertainty as to the research and experimental allocation rules that will apply in the coming years, making it more difficult for them to predict the after-tax costs of the research in which they generally must engage, if at all, over extended future periods.

In April 1987 the Treasury Department, noting that "we all have a stake in ending [the controversy] as soon as possible,"[2] expressed its view that an appropriate way to balance the concerns of promoting U.S. research and development, on the one hand, and appropriately dividing income tax receipts between the United States and foreign taxing jurisdictions, on the other, would be to make the 1986 Act liberalizations permanent, while further increasing the automatic place-of-performance apportionment percentage from 50 percent to 67 percent. In 1988, a somewhat modified temporary proposal was adopted by the committee, and was subsequently adopted by Congress.

The committee continues to believe that the substantive modifications adopted in the 1988 Act and extended in the 1989 Act are consistent with tax and competitiveness policy, while reducing somewhat the cost of the permanent solution to these issues. The committee is concerned, for example, that the unlimited use of the gross income method of apportionment together with an automatic apportionment percentage of 67 percent would unfairly favor companies that delay or otherwise manipulate the repatriation of earnings of controlled foreign subsidiaries. The committee also wishes to avoid any possible inference, arguably arising under the language of the committee's 1987 bill, that while 64 percent of expenses for U.S. conducted research may be allocated to U.S. source income in order to encourage U.S. research, the regulation might also be used to automatically allocate in some cases 30 percent of the expenses of conducting research abroad to U.S. source income. Thus, the committee believes that if research is conducted abroad, most of those expenses should be allocated and apportioned against foreign source income.

In light of the 1986 Act provisions regarding the sourcing of income from space, the high seas, and Antarctica, the committee believes that it is appropriate to clarify on a permanent basis whether expenses for research conducted in such places is allocated and apportioned according to the rules for allocating expenses of U.S. conducted research or foreign conducted research.

Explanation of Provision

General allocation rule

The bill extends the application of Code section 864(f), which supersedes the Treasury's research and experimentation expense allocation regulation for purposes of determining the source of taxable income, and applies the statutory rules for allocation of such expenses contained in the 1988 Act and the 1989 Act. These rules do not apply, for example, in the allocation and apportionment of deductions for research and experimental expenditures for purposes of computing the taxable income of a foreign taxpayer effectively connected with its conduct of a trade or business in the United States.

The bill allocates research and experimental expenditures as defined by section 174 of the Code ("qualified research and experimental expenditures" as that phrase is used in the bill) entirely to one geographic source if they were incurred to meet legal requirements imposed with respect to improvement or marketing of specific products or processes and cannot reasonably be expected to generate income (beyond de minimis amounts) outside that geographic source (see Treas. Reg. sec. 1.861-8(e)(3)(i)(B)).

With respect to qualified research and experimental expenditures not specifically allocated under the rules described in the preceding paragraph, the bill provides that a taxpayer shall allocate 64 percent of such expenses for research conducted in the United States to U.S. source income, and 64 percent of expenses for foreign-based research and experimentation to foreign source income. Under the bill, a taxpayer may allocate and apportion the remainder of research and experimental expenses on the basis of either sales or gross income. However, if the income based method of apportionment is chosen, the amount apportioned to foreign source income can be no less than 30 percent of the amount that would be apportioned to foreign source income had the sales method been used.

For example, assume that an unaffiliated U.S. taxpayer has $100 of U.S. research expenses and $100 of foreign research expenses, that 50 percent of relevant gross sales produce foreign source income, and that 10 percent of the taxpayer's gross income is from foreign sources. Under the bill, assuming there is no legal requirements allocation, $125.20 of the qualified research and experimental expenditures may be allocated and apportioned to U.S. source income. The bill allocates $64 to U.S. source income using the automatic place-of-performance allocation for U.S. research expenses, and $64 to foreign source income using the automatic place-of-performance allocation for foreign research expenses. Of the remaining $72 of qualified research and experimental expenditures, $61.20 may be apportioned to U.S. source income. A straight gross income apportionment of the $72 remainder would have resulted in apportioning $64.80 to U.S. source income, and $7.20 to foreign source income, while a gross sales apportionment would have resulted in apportioning $36 to U.S. source income and $36 to foreign source income. The gross sales limit provides that a minimum of 30 percent of $36, or $10.80, must be apportioned to foreign source income. Therefore, of the $72 of expenses remaining for apportionment after the automatic place-of-performance allocations, no more than $61.20 may be apportioned to U.S. source income.

The bill expressly does not apply to any expenditure for the acquisition or improvement of land, or for the acquisition or improvement of depreciable or depletable property to be used in connection with research or experimentation. Additionally, any qualified research and experimental expenditures treated as deferred under section 174(b) shall be taken into account for purposes of applying these source allocation rules in the taxable year such expenditures are allowed as a deduction.

Affiliated group and possessions corporations

As is already true for research expenses that, but for the special allocation rule extended by the bill, would be covered by the general expense allocation rules introduced in the 1986 Act (sec. 864(e)), the bill provides generally that allocation and apportionment of research expenses, like other expenses, is to be determined as if all members of the affiliated group (plus any section 936 companies (possession corporations) that would be eligible to consolidate absent statutory prohibition) were a single corporation. However, in the case of a section 936 company that has elected either the cost sharing or profit split method of computing its intangible property income (sec. 936(h)(5)(C)), its sales and gross income from products produced in whole or in part in a possession, and dividends paid by such company attributable to sales of such products, will not be taken into account under the bill to the extent that the company is allowed a credit under section 936 with respect to gross income on those products that is intangible property income.

Where an affiliated group with qualified research and experimental expenditures has a possession corporation that has elected either the cost sharing or profit split method for computing its intangible property income, its cost sharing amount will be an adjustment to the group's qualified research and experimental expenditures subject to allocation and apportionment under the bill. (This rule applies to the profit split method as well as the cost sharing method with respect to section 936 companies because the amount allocated and apportioned to combined income in the case of such a company electing the profit split method is computed taking into account the cost sharing amount.) Thus, for example, if a group has a possession corporation using cost sharing with respect to its only product and all of the group's research expenses are qualified research and experimental expenditures, then the cost sharing amount under section 936 that is attributable to those qualified research and experimental expenditures will reduce the research expenses allocated between the group's U.S. and foreign source income based on the gross income or gross sales of the group. Similarly, where an affiliated group with qualified research and experimental expenditures has a section 936 company that has elected the profit split method, the qualified research and experimental expenditures taken into account in computing combined taxable income will be an adjustment to the group's qualified research and experimental expenditures subject to allocation and apportionment under the bill.

The bill provides the Treasury with the authority to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the one taxpayer rule and its exceptions regarding section 936 companies. In addition to providing the safeguards addressed in the regulations under the general one taxpayer rule of section 864(e), these regulations are to provide for the source of gross income and the allocation and apportionment of deductions to take into account the adjustment to group-allocable qualified research and experimental expenditures for research expenses treated as cost sharing amounts under section 936. In addition, these regulations may provide for an adjustment to group-allocable research expenditures to take into account certain bona fide cost sharing payments by foreign affiliates, where necessary and appropriate in light of the purposes of the one taxpayer rule. The committee anticipates that in taking into account cost sharing amounts, the regulations will prevent any disproportionate reduction in the amount of research expenses allocated and apportioned to foreign source income.

Allocation for space, ocean, and Antarctica research expenses

The bill clarifies the rules for research conducted in space, on or beneath the ocean, or in Antarctica. Research expenses incurred by U.S. persons for activities conducted in space, in Antarctica, or on or under water not within the jurisdiction (as recognized by the United States) of a foreign country, U.S. possession, or the United States, are allocated and apportioned in the same manner as if they were attributable to activities conducted in the United States. Similarly, research expenses for such activities incurred by non-U.S. persons are allocated and apportioned as if they were attributable to activities conducted outside the United States.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for the taxpayer's first two taxable years beginning after August 1, 1989, and on or before August 1, 1991. Thus, the allocation and apportionment rules of the provision apply to the remainder of the year covered by the 1989 Act as well as to the subsequent year.

2. Research and experimentation tax credit (sec. 7102 of the bill and sec. 41 of the Code).

Present Law

A 20-percent tax credit is allowed to the extent that a taxpayer's qualified research expenditures for the current year exceed its base amount for that year. The credit will not apply to amounts paid or incurred after December 31, 1990, and a special rule to prorate qualified research expenditures applies in the case of any taxable year which begins before October 1, 1990, and ends after September 30, 1990.[3]

The base amount for the current year generally is computed by multiplying the taxpayer's "fixed-base percentage" by the average amount of the taxpayer's gross receipts for the four preceding years. If a taxpayer both incurred qualified research expenses and had gross receipts during each of at least three years from 1984 to 1988, then its "fixed-base percentage" is the ratio that its total qualified research expenses for the 1984-1988 period bears to its total gross receipts for this period (subject to a maximum ratio of .16). A taxpayer's base amount may not be less than 50 percent of current-year qualified research expenditures.

In addition, the 20-percent tax credit also applies to the excess of (1) 100 percent of corporate cash expenditures (including grants or contributions) paid for university basic research over (2) the sum of (a) the greater of two fixed research floors plus (b) an amount reflecting any decrease in nonresearch giving to universities by the corporation as compared to such giving during a fixed base period, as adjusted for inflation.

Reasons for Change

The committee concluded that the credit for qualified research expenditures and the university basic research credit should be extended for one additional year.

Explanation of Provision

The 20-percent incremental credit for qualified research expenditures and the university basic research credit are extended through December 31, 1991. The special rule to prorate research expenditures incurred during 1990 is repealed.

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

3. Exclusion for Employer-Provided Educational Assistance (sec. 7103 of the bill and sec. 127 of the Code)

Present Law

Under present law, an employee (including a self-employed individual) must include in income and wages, for income and employment tax purposes, the value of educational assistance provided by an employer to the employee, unless (1) the cost of such assistance qualifies as a deductible job-related expense of the employee (secs. 132, 162) or (2) the educational assistance is provided under an educational assistance program that meets certain requirements (sec. 127).

The exclusion for educational assistance benefits provided pursuant to an educational assistance program described in section 127 expired for taxable years beginning after September 30, 1990. Only amounts paid before October 1, 1990, in a taxable year beginning in 1990 are taken into account in determining the amount of the exclusion.

No more than $5,250 of educational assistance benefits provided during any calendar year can be excluded from the income of an employee. In addition, the exclusion for educational assistance benefits does not apply to graduate level courses. Specifically, the exclusion does not apply to any payment for, or the provision of any benefits with respect to, any course taken by an employee who has a bachelor's degree or is receiving credit toward a more advanced degree if the particular course can be taken for credit by any individual in a program leading to a law, business, medical, or other advanced academic or professional degree.

To the extent that employer-provided educational assistance is not excludable from income because it exceeds the maximum dollar limitation or because of the limitation on graduate-level courses, it may be excludable from income as a working condition fringe benefit (sec. 132(d)), provided the requirements of that section are otherwise satisfied (e.g., the education is job related as defined under sec. 162).

Reasons for Change

The exclusion for educational assistance was originally enacted for a temporary period in order to provide Congress with an opportunity to evaluate the use and effectiveness of the exclusion. The committee believes it is appropriate to extend the exclusion again for a temporary period. In addition, the committee believes it is appropriate to make the exclusion available in the case of graduate level courses.

Explanation of Provision

The bill extends the exclusion for employer-provided educational assistance benefits through taxable years beginning before January 1, 1992. The special rule limiting the exclusion in the case of a taxable year beginning in 1990 is repealed. In addition, the rule restricting the availability of the exclusion with respect to graduate level courses is repealed.

[3] Under this special proration rule, the amount of qualified research expenses incurred by a taxpayer prior to January 1, 1991, is multiplied by the ratio that the number of days in that taxable year before October 1, 1990, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year before January 1, 1991.

Effective Date

Effective for taxable years beginning after September 30, 1990.

4. Exclusion for Employer-Provided Group Legal Services; Tax Exemption for Qualified Group Legal Services Organizations (sec. 7104 of the bill and sec. 120 of the Code).

Present Law

Under present law, amounts contributed by an employer to a qualified group legal services plan for an employee (or the employee's spouse or dependents) are excluded from the employee's gross income for income and employment tax purposes (sec. 120). The exclusion also applies to any services received by an employee (or the employee's spouse or dependents) or any amounts paid to an employee under such a plan as reimbursement for the cost of legal services for the employee (or the employee's spouse or dependents). The exclusion is limited to an annual premium value of $70. In order to be a plan under which employees are entitled to tax-free benefits, a group legal services plan is required to fulfill certain requirements. One such requirement is that group legal services benefits may not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees in certain respects.

The exclusion for group legal services benefits expired for taxable years beginning after September 30, 1990. Only amounts paid before October 1, 1990, in taxable years beginning in 1990 for coverage before October 1, 1990, are taken into account in determining the amount of the exclusion for the year.

In addition, present law provides tax-exempt status for an organization the exclusive function of which is to provide legal services or indemnification against the cost of legal services as part of a qualified group legal services plan (sec. 501(c)(20)). The tax exemption for such an organization expired for taxable years beginning after September 30, 1990.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes it is appropriate to extend, on a temporary basis, the exclusion for employer-provided group legal services and the tax exemption for group legal services organizations.

Explanation of Provision

The bill extends the exclusion for employer-provided group legal services and the tax exemption for qualified group legal services organizations through taxable years beginning before January 1, 1992. The special rule limiting the exclusion in the case of taxable years beginning in 1990 is repealed.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after September 30, 1990.

5. Targeted Jobs Tax Credit (sec. 7105 of the bill and sec. 51 of the Code).

Present Law

A tax credit is available on elective basis to employers of individuals described in at least one of nine targeted groups. The nine groups consist of individuals who are either recipients of payments under means-tested transfer programs, economically disadvantaged (as measured by family income), or disabled. The credit generally is equal to 40 percent of the first $6,000 of qualified first year wages. A credit equal to 40 percent of up to $3,000 of wages to qualified summer youth employees is also allowed. The employer's deduction for wages must be reduced by the amount of the credit. The credit expired on September 30, 1990.

Present law also authorizes appropriations for administrative and publicity expenses relating to the credit through September 30, 1990. These monies are to be used by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and Department of Labor to inform employers of the credit program.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that the targeted jobs tax credit provides a useful incentive for hiring disadvantaged individuals. It further believes that a further extension will provide an opportunity for further assessment of the program by the Congress and the Treasury Department.

Explanation of Provision

The bill extends the targeted jobs tax credit through December 31, 1991. Generally, the authorization for appropriations also is extended.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for amounts paid or incurred with respect to an individual who begins work for an employer after September 30, 1990.

6. Business Energy Tax Credits (sec. 7106 of the bill and sec. 46(b) of the Code).

Present Law

Three nonrefundable business energy tax credits have been allowed for certain types of energy property since 1978 and 1980. These tax credits were extended in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 for a 9-month period, and consequently, they expired after September 30, 1990. The credits, i.e., the rates and property to which they pertain, are:

(1) Solar—10% credit;

(2) Geothermal—10% credit; and

(3) Ocean thermal—15% credit.

Under section 38, these (and other) tax credits may not exceed the excess (if any) of the taxpayer's net income tax over the greater of (a) the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax for the taxable year, or (b) 25 percent of so much of the taxpayer's net regular tax liability for the taxable year that exceeds $25,000.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that the business energy credits for solar energy, geothermal, and ocean thermal properties serve a valuable function in encouraging the development of renewable fuel sources and should be continued.

Explanation of Provision

The business energy tax credits for solar, geothermal, and ocean thermal energy property are extended beyond the present September 30, 1990, expiration date through December 31, 1991.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for qualified investments placed in service after September 30, 1990, and before January 1, 1992.

7. Low-Income Rental Housing Tax Credit (sec. 7107 of the bill and sec. 42 of the Code).

Present Law

Overview of the credit

A tax credit is allowed in annual installments over 10 years for qualifying low-income rental housing, which may be newly constructed or substantially rehabilitated residential rental property. For most newly constructed and substantially rehabilitated housing placed in service after 1987, the credit percentages are adjusted monthly to maintain a present value of the credit stream of 70 percent of the total qualified expenditures. In the case of housing receiving other Federal subsidies (including the use of the proceeds of tax-exempt bonds) and the acquisition of an existing building which is substantially rehabilitated, monthly adjustments are made to maintain a present value of the credit stream of 30 percent of the total qualified expenditures. Generally, that part of the building for which the credit is claimed must be rented to qualified low-income tenants at restricted rents for 15 years after the building is placed in service. In addition, a subsequent additional 15-year period of low-income use is generally also required.

In order for a credit to be claimed with respect to a building, the building owner generally must receive a credit allocation from the appropriate credit authority. An exception is provided for property which is substantially financed with the proceeds of tax-exempt bonds subject to the State's private-activity bond volume limitation. The low-income housing credit is allocated by State or local government authorities subject to an annual limitation for each State. The annual State credit limitation was $1.25 per resident for years before 1990 and is $0.9375 per resident for 1990.

Rights of first refusal

Under present law, any determination as to whether Federal income tax benefits are allowable to a taxpayer with respect to a qualified low-income building is made without regard to whether the tenants are given the right of first refusal to purchase the building, for a minimum purchase price, should the owner decide to sell to them (at the end of the compliance period). The minimum purchase price to be paid by the tenants is the sum of: (1) the principal amount of all indebtedness secured by the building, with the exception of indebtedness incurred within the five years immediately prior to sale, and (2) all Federal, State, and local income taxes attributable to such sale. In determining the Federal income (but not other) taxes attributable to the sale, the tax liability resulting from the agreement to pay taxes attributable to the sale are taken into account.

Generally, properties placed in service within the last 10 years are ineligible for the credit. An exception is provided for certain transfers including transfers in which the new owner retains the basis of the previous owner. In addition, when the transferor is a qualified tax-exempt organization or a governmental entity, the 10-year rule is applied by looking to the placed-in-service date of the most recent taxable owner. There are also circumstances in which the 10-year rule may be waived, including transfers of: (1) certain Federally assisted properties, a default on which would result in a Federal Government budget outlay, (2) low-income buildings the mortgages on which are subject to prepayment if the waiver is necessary to avert conversion of the properties to market rate use; and (3) certain buildings acquired from failed financial institutions.

Compliance

Under present law each State must develop a plan for allocation of the credit among projects. A qualified State allocation plan must provide a procedure for the agency to notify the Internal Revenue Service of noncompliance with the credit rules. There is no affirmative requirement that qualified

State allocation plans require a procedure for monitoring compliance with the credit rules. The allocating agency also is required to evaluate projects in order to ascertain that a project receives only the amount of credit necessary to the economic feasibility of the project and its viability as a qualified low-income housing project throughout the credit period.

Intermediary costs

Under present law, a qualified State allocation plan must set forth criteria to be used by the agency in making allocations. Under these criteria, the highest priority must be given to those projects which result in the highest percentage of credit dollars to project costs other than intermediary costs.

Gross rent limitation

The gross rent paid by families, for units on which a tax credit is claimed, is restricted based upon apartment size and area median income. Gross rent includes the cost of any utilities, other than telephone. If any utilities are paid directly by the tenant, the maximum rent that may be paid by the tenant is reduced by a utility allowance prescribed by the Treasury Department.

The gross rent limitation applies only to payments made directly by the tenant. For example, any rental assistance payments made on behalf of the tenant, such as through section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 or any comparable Federal, State or local program of rental assistance, are not included in gross rent for purposes of the 30-percent limit.

Qualified census tracts

In certain high cost areas designated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), the eligible basis of qualifying buildings is deemed to be 130 percent of the otherwise eligible basis. Qualified census tracts and difficult-to-develop areas may be qualified high cost areas. To be a qualified census tract, 50 percent or more of the households within the tract must have an income 60 percent or less of the area median income. Qualified census tracts are identified based upon the most recent census for which data is available. The 1980 census generally only identified census tracts in metropolitan statistical areas.

Credit and HUD Section 8 programs

No credit is available for property receiving assistance under the HUD Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation program.

Units occupied by students

Generally the credit is not allowed for units occupied by students. An exception is provided for units occupied by an individual who is enrolled in a job training program receiving assistance under the Job Training Partnership Act or other similar Federal, State, or local laws. No exception is provided for recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), who are students in other types of programs.

Passive loss rules

In general

Deductions from passive trade or rental activities, to the extent they exceed income from all such passive activities (exclusive of portfolio income), generally may not be deducted against other income. Similarly, credits from passive activities generally are limited to the tax attributable to the passive activities. Suspended losses from an activity are allowed in full when the taxpayer disposes of his entire interest in the activity.

These limitations apply to individuals, estates, trusts, and personal service corporations. A special rule limits the use of passive losses and credits against portfolio income in the case of closely-held corporations.

Special rules

$25,000 allowance in the case of rental real estate activities: A special rule is provided for passive losses and credits attributable to rental real estate activities. In the case of rental real estate activities, a taxpayer who is an individual is allowed to deduct up to $25,000 of passive losses (to the extent that they exceed income from passive activities) if the taxpayer actively participates in the rental real estate activity (and has at least a 10-percent interest in it). The $25,000 amount is phased out ratably as the taxpayer's adjusted gross income (AGI), with certain modifications, increases from $100,000 to $150,000.

$25,000 allowance for low-income housing and rehabilitation credits: Under a special rule, the $25,000 allowance also applies to low-income housing and rehabilitation credits (on a deduction-equivalent basis), regardless of whether the taxpayer claiming the credit actively participates in the rental real estate activity generating the credit. In addition, the adjusted gross income phaseout range for the $25,000 amount for the rehabilitation credit is from $200,000 to $250,000 (rather than the generally applicable phaseout range of $100,000 to $150,000). There is no AGI phaseout range for the low-income housing credit under the $25,000 allowance.

Reasons for Change

The committee is concerned about the lack of affordable housing for low-income people and considers it appropriate that the Federal government play a significant role in the development of additional housing. The committee believes that the extension of this tax credit program is useful in light of the lack of other Federal subsidies for such housing. While the committee recognizes that it may be necessary to reexamine the use of the credit as other laws affecting the provision of low-income housing change, it believes that further modification of the credit is necessary to meet current housing needs.

Explanation of Provision

In general

The bill extends the low-income rental housing tax credit through December 31, 1991. It also restores the credit allocation limit to $1.25 per State resident for 1990.

Rights of first refusal

The bill expands present law to provide that tenant cooperatives, resident management corporations, qualified nonprofits, and governmental agencies, as well as tenants acting individually, may have a right of first refusal to purchase their units at the end of the compliance period. For purposes of this rule, resident management corporations generally should meet the definition provided in Section 20 of the Housing Act of 1937. The bill also modifies the definition of a qualified nonprofit organization for purposes of the credit.

Under the bill, a qualified nonprofit organization must own (directly or indirectly) an interest in the project throughout the compliance period. Also, a qualified nonprofit organization may not be affiliated with or controlled by a for-profit organization (as determined by the State housing credit agency). For these purposes a for-profit subsidiary of a qualified nonprofit organization is not considered to be an affiliated organization.

The bill provides an exception from the 10-year placed-in-service rule for owner-occupied single family dwelling units that have had no use other than as a principal residence for the owner thereof for the 10-year period before its placement in service with respect to which the credit is claimed.

Compliance

The bill provides that qualified allocation plans must include a procedure for monitoring and reporting noncompliance to the IRS. It is contemplated that the allocating agencies' responsibility to report noncompliance with the credit rules may be satisfied through the use of an agent or other private contractor.

Intermediary costs

The priority relating to the amount of intermediary costs is deleted from the qualified plan requirements and is instead made a factor in project evaluations.

Gross rent limitation

For purposes of the gross rent rules, the bill provides that FmHA's Section 515 program is to be treated comparably to the HUD Section 8 program.

Qualified census tracts

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), to use data from census enumeration districts in lieu of data from census tracts when data from census tracts is unavailable. The committee understands that the 1990 census will identify census tracts for all non-metropolitan areas of the United States, in addition to metropolitan statistical areas. The committee intends that the Secretary of HUD rely solely on census tract data when such data is available from the 1990 and subsequent censuses.

Credit and HUD Section 8 programs

The bill provides an exception from the denial of the credit in conjunction with the Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation program for funds disbursed under the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act of 1988.

Units occupied by students

The bill provides that dwelling units occupied by students receiving AFDC payments do not fail to qualify for the credit.

Passive loss rules

The bill modifies the $25,000 deduction equivalent allowance by removing the $200,000 to $250,000 adjusted gross income phaseout range for the rehabilitation tax credit in certain circumstances. This phaseout range is removed with respect to any portion of the passive activity credit that is attributable to the rehabilitation investment credit (within the meaning of section 48(o)) with respect to a building for which a credit is determined under section 42 for such year.

Effective Date

The amendments generally are effective for determinations made under section 42 with respect to housing credit dollar amounts allocated from State housing credit ceilings for calendar years after 1990. For projects not subject to the credit allocation limits, the amendments generally apply to buildings placed in service after December 31, 1990.

The provisions relating to rights of 1st refusal, the 10-year rule, and units occupied by students are effective upon date of enactment.

The provision relating to compliance monitoring and reporting procedures in the State allocation plans is effective for calendar years beginning after December 31, 1991.

The provision which removes the adjusted gross income limitation for rehabilitation tax credits, in certain circumstances, under the passive loss rule is effective in taxable years ending after December 31, 1990, for property placed in service for purposes of the rehabilitation tax credit after December 31, 1990. In addition, if the property is held through a partnership or other passthrough entity, the taxpayer's interest in the partnership or other passthrough entity must have been acquired after December 31, 1990.

8. Mortgage Revenue Bonds and Mortgage Credit Certificates (sec. 7108 of the bill and sec. 143 of the Code)

Present Law

Qualified mortgage bonds (QMBs) generally are used to finance the purchase or qualifying rehabilitation or improvement of single family, owner-occupied homes. The recipients of QMB-financed loans must meet purchase price, income, and other restrictions.

Qualified governmental units may elect to exchange qualified mortgage bond authority for authority to issue mortgage credit certificates (MCCs). MCCs entitle homebuyers to nonrefundable income tax credits for a specified percentage of interest paid on mortgage loans on their principal residences. Once issued, generally an MCC remains in effect as long as the residence being financed continues to be the certificate-recipient's principal residence. MCCs generally are subject to the same borrower eligibility requirements as qualified mortgage bonds.

Effective for loans originating after December 31, 1990, a portion of the QMB and MCC subsidy (other than qualified home improvement loans) is recaptured upon disposition of a house financed with an assisted loan within ten years and is phased out for taxpayers who have resided in the home for more than five years. The recapture is the lesser of fifty percent of the gain realized on disposition or 1.25 percent of the initial loan principle multiplied by the number of years that the taxpayer has owned the home. Recapture only applies to certain recipients whose income rises after the financing is received.

Authority to issue QMBs and to exchange private activity bond volume authority for authority to issue MCCs expired on September 30, 1990.

Reasons for Change

Generally, the committee believes that the qualified mortgage bond and the mortgage credit certificate programs should be extended without modification. It does, however, believe that a delay in the effective date of the recapture rules provides more time to review those rules.

Explanation of Provision

The bill extends the QMB and MCC programs through December 31, 1991. It also delays the effective date of the recapture provision for one year. Specifically, the recapture provision becomes effective for loans originating or mortgage credit certificates issued after December 31, 1991, rather than loans originating or mortgage credit certificates issued after December 31, 1990.

Effective Date

The provision is effective with respect to bonds issued after September 30, 1990, and before January 1, 1992.

9. Qualified Small-Issue Bonds (sec. 7109 of the bill and sec. 144(a) of the Code).

Present Law

Interest on certain small issues of private activity bonds is exempt from tax if at least 95 percent of the net proceeds of the bonds is to be used to finance manufacturing facilities or certain land or other property for first-time farmers ("qualified small-issue bonds").

Qualified small-issue bonds are bond issues having an aggregate authorized face amount (including certain outstanding prior issues) of $1 million or less. Alternatively, the aggregate face amount of the issue, together with the aggregate amount of certain related capital expenditures during the 6-year period beginning three years before the date of the issue and ending three years after that date, may not exceed $10 million. In determining whether an issue meets the requirements of the small-issue exception, certain previous small issues (and in the case of the $10-million limitation, capital expenditures during a 6-year period) are taken into account.

Interest on qualified small-issue bonds is taxable if the aggregate face amount of all outstanding tax-exempt private activity bonds (including exempt-facility bonds, qualified redevelopment bonds, and qualified small-issue bonds) that would be allocated to any beneficiary of the qualified small-issue bonds exceeds $40 million.

The aggregate amount of qualified small-issue bond financing for first-time farmers for all types of depreciable farm property (including both new and used property) is subject to a $250,000 lifetime limit for any person or related persons.

To be a qualified small-issue bond, the issuer must receive an allocation from the State private activity volume limitation. Authority to issue qualified small-issue bonds expired on September 30, 1990.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes it is appropriate to permit State and local governments to continue to issue qualified small-issue bonds.

Explanation of Provision

The bill extends authority to issue qualified small-issue bonds through December 31, 1991.

Effective Date

The provision is effective with respect to bonds issued after September 30, 1990, and before January 1, 1992.

10. Deduction for Health Insurance Costs of Self-Employed Individuals (sec. 7110 of the bill and sec. 162(l) of the Code).

Present Law

Present law provides a deduction for 25 percent of the amounts paid for health insurance for a taxable year on behalf of a self-employed individual and the individual's spouse and dependents. The 25-percent deduction is also available to a more than 2-percent shareholder of an S corporation.

No deduction is allowable for any taxable year in which the self-employed individual or eligible S corporation shareholder is eligible to participate (on a subsidized basis) in a health plan of an employer of the self-employed individual (or of such individual's spouse).

The 25-percent deduction expires for taxable years beginning after September 30, 1990. For taxable years beginning in 1990, the deduction is allowed only for premiums paid for coverage before October 1, 1990. In addition, an individual's earned income for the taxable year beginning in 1990 is pro rated in determining the applicable deduction for such year.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes it is appropriate to extend the 25-percent deduction on a temporary basis.

Explanation of Provision

The bill extends the 25-percent deduction for health insurance costs of self-employed individuals through taxable years beginning before January 1, 1992. The special rule prorating the deduction for taxable years beginning in 1990 is repealed.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after September 30, 1990.

11. Orphan Drug Tax Credit (sec. 7111 of the bill and sec. 28(e) of the Code).

Present Law

A nonrefundable tax credit is allowed for 50 percent of the expenses incurred by the taxpayer in a taxable year for the clinical testing on human beings of a qualified drug for rare diseases or conditions.

The credit applies to human clinical testing which is carried out under an exemption for a drug being tested for a rare disease or condition authorized by the Food and Drug Administration under statutory or regulatory authority. The basic statutory authority for these tests is in section 505(i) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. The testing must occur after the date a drug is qualified for such tests and before approval of sale of the drug.

A rare disease or condition means any disease or condition which (1) affects less than 200,000 persons in the United States, or (2) affects more than 200,000 persons in the U.S. but there is no reasonable expectation of recovering the developmental, production, and distribution costs from sales in the U.S. of a drug to treat a rare disease or condition.

This tax credit is scheduled to expire after December 31, 1990.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that research conducted with tax incentives from the orphan drug make important contributions to public health. An extension of the credit for only one year, however, is consistent with limited continuation of this and other tax credits under the current budget deficit reduction program.

Explanation of Provision

The orphan drug tax credit is extended past its present expiration date of December 31, 1990, through December 31, 1991.

Effective Date

The provision is effective on January 1, 1991.

SUBTITLE B. OTHER TAX INCENTIVE PROVISIONS

1. Energy Incentive Provisions.

a. Credit for nonconventional fuels (sec. 7201 of the bill and sec. 29 of the Code).

Present Law

In general

Nonconventional fuels are eligible for a production credit that is equal to $3 per barrel or BTU oil barrel equivalent (adjusted for inflation). Qualified fuels must be produced from a well drilled, or a facility placed in service, before January 1, 1991. The production credit is available for qualified fuels sold before January 1, 2001.

Qualified fuels include (1) oil produced from shale and tar sands, (2) gas produced from geopressured brine, Devonian shale, coal seams, a tight formation, or biomass, and (3) liquid, gaseous, or solid synthetic fuels produced from coal (including lignite), including such fuels when used as feedstocks.

Gas produced from tight formations

Under the nonconventional fuels production credit, qualifying gas produced from a tight formation only includes gas the price of which is regulated by the United States or for which the maximum lawful price is at least 150 percent of the applicable price under section 103 of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.[4] The restriction that tight formation gas be subject to some form of regulation was instituted in 1980 under the anticipation that absent regulation, prices for natural gas would increase to the extent that economical production of gas from tight formations would not require the section 29 credit.

Pursuant to the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, phased deregulation of natural gas began in 1985. As of the beginning of that year, tight formation gas that was not committed or dedicated to interstate commerce in 1977 was deregulated. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) subsequently ruled that certain tight formation gas that also qualified as deregulated gas under another provision of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 was to be treated as deregulated.[5] The FERC ruling was upheld by the Supreme Court in 1988.[6] Production of gas from wells that were deregulated under this decision was thus no longer qualified for the section 29 credit.

On July 26, 1989, Congress enacted the Natural Gas Wellhead Decontrol Act of 1989.[7] In part, that legislation provided that all previously regulated gas generally was to be deregulated as of 1993. With respect to gas produced from wells drilled after July 26, 1989, deregulation was to occur on May 15, 1991.

In 1990, FERC issued an order providing that regulated tight formation gas produced from wells drilled after May 12, 1990 would no longer qualify for an incentive price under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.[8] The result of this order was to disqualify from the section 29 credit tight formation gas produced from wells drilled after May 12, 1990.

The cumulative result of the legislation and regulatory actions described above is that the nonconventional fuels production credit presently is not available to most gas produced from tight formations, and will no longer be available for any such gas as of January 1, 1993.

Reasons for Change

In general

The committee believes that it is in the best interest of the United States to provide incentives designed to enhance the nation's energy security and to reduce its dependence on foreign energy sources. The committee views the permanent extension of the credit for the domestic production of fuel from nonconventional fuel sources to be in accordance with the goals of lowering the United States' dependence on imported petroleum products and of discovering alternative sources of fuel. The committee believes that continuing present-law phaseout of the benefits of the credit when oil prices are sufficiently high is desirable tax policy because the tax subsidy is reduced as market prices provide increased incentives for production.

Gas produced from tight formations

The committee does not believe that under the current economic environment, provision of the credit to tight formation gas should be linked to a requirement that the price for such gas be subject to Federal regulation. Based on recent geological information, some believe that a significant capacity for production of gas from tight formations can be developed given a sufficient after-tax rate of return. The committee believes that reinstatement of the production credit for tight formation gas is desirable in order to accelerate increases in natural gas production. Since section 29 already provides the credit will be phased out when oil prices are high enough to provide sufficient production incentive, there is no need, in the committee's view, to retain the additional limitation on qualification for deregulated gas.

In the committee's view, it is proper to reinstate qualification for the section 29 tax credit to tight formation gas produced from previously drilled wells where such gas was committed or dedicated to interstate commerce as of April 20, 1977. With respect to such gas, it was anticipated by the owners at the time of drilling that the resulting natural gas production would qualify for the credit.

Explanation of Provision

In general

The bill makes permanent the nonconventional fuels credit. Thus, the bill repeals both the placed-in-service date and the sunset date of the credit as provided under present law.

Gas produced from tight formations

Under the bill, gas produced from certain tight formations is reinstated as qualifying for the section 29 credit, and any requirement that such gas be regulated or eligible for price incentives is repealed. Specifically, the bill treats as qualifying tight formation gas any gas produced from a tight formation (1) which is produced from a well drilled after December 31, 1990, or (2) which, as of April 20, 1977, was committed or dedicated to interstate commerce (within the meaning of section 2(18) of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 as in effect on the date of enactment of this bill). Wells producing gas that was not committed or dedicated to interstate commerce as of April 20, 1977, and thus was subject to decontrol under provisions of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, will not qualify for reinstatement of the credit under the bill.

Effective Date

The January 1, 1991 placed-in-service date and the sunset date of January 1, 2001 are repealed and the credit is made permanent under the bill. The provisions related to natural gas produced from tight formations apply to qualifying tight formation gas which is produced after December 31, 1990.

b. Alcohol fuels credit, exemption, and tariff (sec. 7202 of the bill and sec. 40 of the Code).

Present Law

Excise taxes

Excise taxes on gasoline, diesel fuel, special motor fuels, trucks and truck trailers, and truck tires make up the sources of tax revenue for the Highway Trust Fund (sec. 9503). The Highway Trust Fund taxes, however, generally are scheduled to expire after September 30, 1993. Through that expiration date, an excise tax of 9 cents per gallon generally is imposed upon gasoline (sec. 4081), and an excise tax of 15 cents per gallon generally is imposed upon diesel fuel used in diesel-powered highway vehicles (secs. 4041(a)(1) and 4091). An excise tax of 9 cents per gallon generally is imposed on certain special motor fuels (e.g., benzol, benzene, naphtha, and liquefied petroleum gas) used as fuel in a motor vehicle or motorboat (sec. 4041(a)(2)).

Special reduced excise tax rates are applicable to certain alcohol fuel mixtures. One gallon of gasohol (i.e., any mixture of gasoline containing at least 10 percent alcohol) is subject to a reduced excise tax of 3 cents per gallon, rather than the general rate imposed upon gasoline of 9 cents per gallon (sec. 4081(c)); an additional ⅛ of one cent per gallon is added for the LUST tax. Diesohol (i.e., any mixture of diesel fuel containing at least 10 percent alcohol) is subject to a reduced excise tax of 9 cents per gallon, rather than the general rate imposed upon diesel fuel of 15 cents per gallon (secs. 4091(c) and 4041(k)(1)(A)). Methanol and ethanol fuels (i.e., any liquid at least 85 percent of which consists of methanol, ethanol, or other alcohol produced from a substance other than petroleum or natural gas) are subject to a reduced excise tax of 3 cents per gallon (sec. 4041(b)(2)).

An excise tax rate of 3 cents per gallon also applies to special motor fuels otherwise subject to tax under section 4041(a)(2)(e.g., benzol, benzene, naphtha, and liquefied petroleum gas) if the fuel contains at least 10 percent alcohol (sec. 4041(k)(1)(B)). The excise tax rate is 4½ cents per gallon in the case of any liquid at least 85 percent of which consists of methanol, ethanol, or other alcohol produced from natural gas (sec. 4041(m)).

Alcohol fuels credit

An income tax credit is provided for alcohol used in certain mixtures of alcohol and gasoline (e.g., gasohol), diesel fuel, or any other liquid fuel which is suitable for use in an internal combustion engine if the mixture is sold by the producer in a trade or business for use as a fuel or is so used by the producer (sec. 40). The credit also is permitted for alcohol (e.g., qualified methanol fuel) which is not in a mixture with gasoline, diesel, or other liquid fuel which is suitable for use in an internal combustion engine, provided that the alcohol is used by the taxpayer as a fuel in a trade or business or is sold by the taxpayer at retail to a person and placed in the fuel tank of the purchaser's vehicle (sec. 40(b)(2)). The credit is equal to 60 cents for each gallon of alcohol (at least 190 proof) used as fuel; the credit is 45 cents per gallon of 150 to 190 proof alcohol fuel. The credit is scheduled to expire after December 31, 1992.

The amount of any taxpayer's credit under section 40 is reduced to take into account any benefit received with respect to the alcohol under the special reduced excise tax rates for alcohol fuels mixtures or alcohol fuels (described above). For purposes of the credit, the term alcohol includes methanol and ethanol, but does not include alcohol produced from petroleum, natural gas, or coal (including peat), or alcohol with a proof less than 150.

Ethanol imports

1. Tariff provisions: Currently, there is applied to imported ethanol an additional tariff of 15.85 cents per liter to offset the domestic alcohol fuels tax credit. The tariff is scheduled to expire on December 31, 1992.

2. Caribbean Basin imports: Under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act of 1983 (CBERA; also known as the Caribbean Basin Initiative, or CBI), articles imported from CBI countries, including ethanol, are entitled to duty-free treatment, if they are produced in the region and at least 35 percent of their value was added in the CBI countries. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 amended the 1983 CBI legislation to require that increasing amounts of feedstock indigenous to the Caribbean basin be used in order for Caribbean producers to be eligible for duty-free treatment of their ethanol exports to the United States. Several companies were "grandfathered"; and the grandfather clause was extended, with a cap on imports, until December 31, 1989, by the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988.

A compromise provision, establishing several different criteria for the duty-free entry of ethanol from CBI countries and U.S. insular possessions, was enacted as part of H.R. 3275, the Steel Trade Liberalization Program Implementation Act. Under this provision, there is no feedstock requirement for imports up to a level of 60 million gallons or 7 percent of the domestic ethanol market, whichever is greater. A feedstock requirement of 30 percent (by volume) applies to the next 35 million gallons of imports and a 50 percent (by volume) feedstock requirement applies to all additional imports. This is referred to as the CBI ethanol compromise.

The CBI ethanol compromise is effective for all calendar years after 1989. Although this appears to be a permanent provision on its face, the duration of this provision is linked to the effective date of the existing additional tariff applicable to imported ethanol, which is scheduled to expire on December 31, 1992. Thus, it too is scheduled to expire on December 31, 1992.

3. ETBE imports: Under current law, imports of ethyl tertiary-butyl ether (ETBE) enter the United States with columns 1 and 2 rates of duty of 6.66 cents per liter through December 31, 1992, or the date on which Treasury regulation 1.40-1 is withdrawn or declared invalid.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that the national effort to develop renewable fuel alternatives should be sustained, and the alcohol fuels credit and alcohol fuels excise tax exemption should be extended and modified in order to provide meaningful incentives to producers of alcohol fuels.

In addition, the committee believes that alcohol fuels, by displacing some gasoline, contribute to enhancing automobile performance by reducing accumulation of petroleum-source deposits on engine parts, reducing emissions of oxides of nitrogen and hydrocarbons.

The committee also believes that more of the benefit of the ethanol tax incentives should be targeted to small producers who make ethanol for use as a fuel or in a fuel mixture.

Explanation of Provision

The committee action to extend the following items beyond their specified expiration dates is contingent upon continuation of the excise taxes that finance the Highway Trust Fund. Those taxes currently are scheduled to expire after September 30, 1993. The provisions in the committee bill are extended through September 30, 1995.

Alcohol fuels excise tax rates: The bill extends the various special, reduced Highway Trust Fund tax rates related to alcohol fuels. Specifically, the reduced tax rate on gasohol (sec. 4081(c)) expires with respect to removals or sales after September 30, 2000. In addition, the special tax rates related to diesohol (secs. 4091(c) and 4041(k)(1)(A)), qualified methanol and ethanol fuels (sec. 4041(b)(2)), special motor fuels consisting of at least 10 percent alcohol (sec. 4041(k)(1)(B)), and any liquid at least 85 percent of which consists of methanol, ethanol, or other alcohol produced from natural gas (sec. 4041(m)) remain applicable through September 30, 2000, during any period when the motor fuels excise taxes are in effect.

Alcohol fuels credit: The bill extends the alcohol fuels credit (sec. 40) through the year 2000 in modified form. Thus, the bill provides that this modified credit does not apply to any sale or use of qualifying alcohol mixtures after December 31, 2000. In addition, the bill provides that, at any time prior to December 31, 2000, the alcohol fuels tax credit for producers and blenders will terminate, or will be reinstituted, at the same time that the motor fuels excise taxes expire, are terminated, or are reinstituted. Furthermore, the alcohol fuels tax credit will be extended if other motor fuels taxes are substituted for the motor fuels taxes in present law.

The 60 cents per gallon tax credit for ethanol used as a fuel, or in an alcohol fuel mixture is reduced to 55 cents per gallon, and the 45 cents per gallon credit for 150 to 190 proof ethanol is reduced to 40 cents per gallon. In addition, the 6-cents-per-gallon excise tax exemption from the motor fuels excise tax is reduced to 5.5 cents per gallon for gasohol or diesohol. A reduction to 4 cents per gallon also applies to the exemption under sec. 4041(m) for qualified ethanol fuels which are at least 85 percent ethanol.

A new 10 cents-per-gallon income tax credit is allowed to an eligible small ethanol producer. For this purpose, a small producer is defined as any fuel ethanol producer with productive capacity to produce less than 20 million gallons of alcohol per year. The new credit is limited to the first 15 million gallons of ethanol for use as a fuel produced per year by such small producer. The committee intends that production means making ethanol from raw materials, and it does not include those producers increasing the proof of purchased alcohol through additional distillation. To prevent abuse of this incentive, all members of the same groups of corporations under common control shall be treated as one person. A similar aggregation rule applies to partnerships and other related parties. With respect to partnerships, Subchapter S corporations, trusts, and other pass-through entities, the 15 million gallon limitation applies at the entity and the interest holder level. The Secretary is given regulatory authority to enforce these rules in all relevant situations and to prevent the benefit of the credit from going directly or indirectly to large ethanol producers or persons with large alcohol production capacity. The committee intends that these regulations will include rules generally disallowing the credit in the case of a subchapter C corporation to the extent that a significant interest in such corporation is held by a large producer but the controlled group rules do not apply.

Ethanol imports: The Committee bill also would reduce the existing additional tariff on imported ethanol to 14.53 cents-per-liter. As stated above, the Committee bill would reduce the existing 60 cents-per-gallon tax credit for ethanol used as a fuel or in a mixture to produce gasohol to 55 cents-per-gallon. Since the ethanol tariff is imposed to offset this credit, the Committee bill reduces the ethanol tariff by a proportionate amount to 14.53 cents-per-liter.

The bill also would extend the tariff on imported ethanol and, consequently, the CBI ethanol provision, so that the tariff and provision would remain in effect during any period the motor fuels taxes are in effect through September 30, 2000.

ETBE imports: The bill would extend the tariff on imported ETBE so the tariff would remain in effect during any period the motor fuels taxes are in effect through September 30, 2000. As under current law, the tariff and provision would not apply if Treasury regulation 1.40-1 is ever withdrawn or declared invalid.

Effective Date

These provisions are effective after December 31, 1990.

c. Tax credit for costs attributable to enhanced oil recovery projects and qualified exploratory costs (sec. 7203 of the bill and new sec. 43 of the Code)

Present Law

Enhanced oil recovery

In general

Under present law, no tax credit is allowed for costs related to enhanced oil recovery projects (generally these projects are referred to as tertiary recovery projects). However, taxpayers are permitted to deduct costs paid or incurred for tertiary injectants which are used as a part of a tertiary recovery method (Code sec. 193).

Prior law

Tertiary recovery methods were defined in Code section 4993, prior to its repeal (related to the Windfall Profit Tax), to include nine specified methods: miscible fluid displacement, steam-drive injection, microemulsion flooding, in situ combustion, polymer-augmented water flooding, cyclic-steam injection, alkaline flooding, carbonated water flooding, and immiscible non-hydrocarbon gas displacement, or any other method approved by the IRS. To qualify for a reduced rate of windfall profit tax, a method had to be applied in accordance with sound engineering principles and the use of the method had to be expected to significantly increase the amount of crude oil ultimately recoverable. Certification from a petroleum engineer or from the appropriate jurisdictional authority was required.

Until repealed by the Tax Reform Act of 1986, an investment credit was allowed to taxpayers who placed in service tangible property. Rules for determining the costs eligible for this credit limited these costs to the amount the taxpayer was at risk with respect to such property.

Exploratory drilling costs

Under present law, an operator who pays or incurs intangible drilling or development costs ("IDCs") in the development of a domestic oil or gas property may elect either to expense or capitalize such amounts. For this purpose, IDCs include all expenditures made by an operator for wages, fuel, repairs, hauling, supplies, etc., incident to and necessary for the drilling of wells and the preparation of wells for the production of oil and gas. Generally, IDCs do not include expenses for items which have a salvage value (such as pipes and casings), or items which are part of the acquisition price of an interest in the property.

If a taxpayer elects to expense IDCs, the taxpayer deducts the amount of the IDC as an expense in the taxable year the cost is paid or incurred. Generally, if IDCs are not expensed, but are capitalized, they can be recovered through depletion or depreciation, as appropriate, or under a special election, they may be amortized over a 60-month period. In the case of a nonproductive well ("dry hole"), IDCs may be deducted, at the election of the operator, as an ordinary loss in the taxable year in which the dry hole is completed. In the case of an integrated oil company, 30 percent of the IDCs on productive wells must be capitalized and amortized over a 60-month period.

IDCs in excess of the amount which would have been currently deductible if IDCs had been capitalized and recovered through cost depletion or amortization over a 10-year period are an item of tax preference for purposes of the alternative minimum tax to the extent that this difference exceeds 65 percent of the taxpayer's net income from oil and gas for the taxable year.

Under present law, no distinction is made between IDCs incurred with respect to oil and gas exploratory drilling or any other category of drilling.

Reasons for Change

Enhanced oil recovery

The committee believes that enhanced oil recovery (EOR) projects have the potential to recover substantial amounts of oil from known United States reserves.[9] Significant portions of this oil are potentially recoverable through the use of EOR methods (one study estimates that with prices for crude oil around $28 per barrel, tax incentives, and technological advances, more than 20 billion additional barrels of oil could be recoverable through tertiary methods).[10]

The committee further believes that tax incentives would be instrumental in encouraging the expanded use of EOR production methods. To the extent these methods increase the proven reserves of oil in the United States, energy security would be enhanced.

Exploratory drilling costs

The committee views the expansion of domestic energy reserves as essential to national energy security. Accordingly, the committee believes it appropriate to encourage taxpayers to engage in certain domestic oil and gas drilling enterprises. The committee understands that the degree of risk associated with exploratory drilling for oil and gas is significantly greater than the degree of risk associated with other types of drilling (e.g., development drilling). The committee believes that an increased level of domestic exploratory drilling will result in the discovery of a significant amount of additional proven U.S. oil and gas reserves. Thus, the committee believes it necessary to target certain drilling incentives to exploratory drilling.

In general

The bill adds a new domestic energy exploration and production tax credit as a component of the general business credit. The exploration and production credit is equal to 15 percent of qualified costs attributable to qualified enhanced oil recovery projects and to certain exploratory drilling in the United States.[11] To the extent that a credit is allowed for these costs, the taxpayer must reduce the amount otherwise deductible or required to be capitalized and recovered through depreciation, depletion, or amortization, as appropriate, with respect to these costs. That is, both a credit and a deduction are not permitted for the same costs, thereby eliminating the potential for a taxpayer to receive a double benefit from the same item.

As is the case under present law, the general business credit for any taxable year may not exceed the excess (if any) of the taxpayer's net income tax over the greater of (a) the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax for the taxable year, or (b) 25 percent of so much of the taxpayer's net regular tax liability for the taxable year as exceeds $25,000. Generally, any unused general business credit is permitted to be carried back three years and carried forward 15 years. However, as a transition rule, any unused portion of the taxpayer's general business credit attributable to the exploration and production credit may not be carried back to a taxable year that began prior to January 1, 1991.

The amount of the exploration and production credit is to be reduced in a taxable year following a calendar year during which the average price of crude oil exceeds $28. The credit will be reduced ratably over a $6 phaseout range. For example, if the price of oil in the calendar year preceding the taxable year is $29, the exploration and production credit for qualified costs incurred in that year would be 12.5 percent (computed as (($34–$29) / ($34–$28)) x 15% = 12.5%). The $28 figure will be adjusted for inflation using the GNP implicit price deflator.

For purposes of this provision of the bill, the average price of crude oil with respect to a calendar year will be estimated and published by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary's estimate will be based on the average wellhead price per barrel for all domestic crude oil.

The exploration and production credit is subject to the passive activity loss and credit rules contained in section 469, including the special rules under that section for working interests in oil and gas property.

One component of the exploration and production credit base consists of qualified enhanced recovery costs. This term includes the following costs which are paid or incurred with respect to a qualified enhanced oil recovery project: (a) the cost of tangible property which is an integral part of the project and with respect to which depreciation or amortization is allowable; (b) intangible drilling and development costs with respect to which a taxpayer may make an election to deduct under section 263(c); and (c) the cost of tertiary injectants with respect to which a deduction is allowable under section 193.

Qualified enhanced oil recovery projects generally include the application (in accordance with sound engineering principles) of a qualifying tertiary recovery method to a domestic property where the application of the method can reasonably be expected to result in more than an insignificant increase in the amount of crude oil which will ultimately be recovered from the property. Tertiary recovery methods qualifying for the EOR credit are defined as in the prior law section 4993 described above. These include miscible fluid displacement, steam-drive injection, microemulsion flooding, in situ combustion, polymer-augmented water flooding, cyclic-steam injection, alkaline (or caustic) flooding, carbonated water flooding, and immiscible gas displacement (e.g., carbon dioxide or other immiscible non-hydrocarbon gas) or any other method approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The committee anticipates that the Secretary will add to the above list of qualifying tertiary recovery methods to take into account advancements in EOR technology which might occur (or have occurred) subsequent to the issuance of the June 1979 Department of Energy regulations.

A project will not be treated as a qualified enhanced oil recovery project unless the operator of the project submits to the Secretary a certification from a petroleum engineer that the project meets the requirements detailed above. Certifications will be required to be filed at such times and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

EOR project costs eligible for the credit will be limited to the amount for which the taxpayer is at risk with respect to such project. That is, the credit base of any item generally will be reduced to the extent that it was financed with nonqualified nonrecourse financing.

The committee wishes to make clear that if any property may qualify as an integral part of more than one qualifying EOR project, the taxpayer may include the cost of that property in the credit base only once.

Exploratory drilling costs

The second component of the exploration and production credit base includes qualified exploratory costs attributable to domestic exploratory drilling. For purposes of this provision of the bill, the term qualified exploratory costs generally means intangible drilling and development costs of a taxpayer other than an integrated oil company that the taxpayer may elect to deduct as expenses under Code section 263(c), and that are paid or incurred in connection with the drilling of an exploratory well located in the United States. However, qualified exploratory costs do not include any cost related to the acquisition, construction, transportation, erection, or installation of an offshore platform. Nor do they include costs incurred after the commencement of the installation of the production string of casing.

The bill establishes special qualification rules for determining whether a well is an exploratory well for purposes of the credit.[12] In general, a well (the "new well")

[9] The Committee on Finance, Subcommittee on Energy and Agricultural Taxation, conducted hearings on August 3, 1989 and on July 27, 1990, testimony during which underscored the magnitude of recoverable EOR reserves.

[10] This estimate is from J.P. Brashear, A. Becker, K. Biglarbigi, and R.M. Ray, "Incentives, Technology, and EOR: Potential for Increased Oil Recovery at Lower Oil Prices", Journal of Petroleum Technology, February 1989.

[11] The United States for this purpose includes the seabed and subsoil of those submarine areas which are adjacent to the territorial waters of the United States and over which the United States has exclusive rights, in accordance with international law, with respect to the exploration and exploitation of natural resources.

qualifies as an exploratory well if at the time it is completed (or if not completed, at the time drilling operations cease), there is no completed oil or gas well that is capable of production in commercial quantities within a 1.25 mile radius of the new well. If the new well is drilled within 1.25 miles of a completed well capable of production in commercial quantities of oil or gas, it may still qualify as an exploratory well if it is drilled to a depth at least 800 feet below the completion depth of the deepest completion depth of any oil or gas well capable of production in commercial quantities within that 1.25 mile radius. If the new well fails both the distance and the depth tests, it nevertheless will be considered an exploratory well if it is drilled into a new reservoir of oil or gas. The committee intends that a new well will qualify under the new-reservoir test if the taxpayer is able to establish with a reasonable degree of certainty that the reservoir has not previously been penetrated by a productive well.

Under the bill, a taxpayer is required to submit to the Secretary of the Treasury (at such time and in such manner as required by the Secretary) a certification from a petroleum engineer that the new well qualifies as an exploratory well as defined in this provision.

A well is presumed to be capable of production in commercial quantities if it has been completed and either a "christmas tree," storage tank or battery, or pipeline has been installed. The committee anticipates that the Secretary may issue regulations necessary to prevent taxpayers from attempting to manipulate the definition of exploratory well.

Except as provided in regulations, a well generally will not qualify as exploratory if it is completed after the completion of a nearby well that is capable of production in commercial quantities. It is anticipated that any such regulations would grant relief from this rule only in certain situations where it can be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the taxpayer bore a true exploratory risk in drilling the well and did not undertake drilling of the well as part of a plan to qualify multiple wells as exploratory. For example, if at the time a taxpayer is drilling a well another person is drilling a nearby well that is completed first as a commercially productive well, the taxpayer's well might nonetheless qualify as exploratory if the taxpayer demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the taxpayer (i) is not related to the other person and (ii) had committed to drill the well prior to learning that the nearby well was to be drilled.

If a well is tested or completed at different depth intervals, and if considered separately, drilling to or completing at any of those intervals would not qualify the well as an exploratory well, then the IDCs paid or incurred with respect to the well shall be allocated to the drilling relating to each separate depth interval. In such a case, only IDCs attributable to depth intervals that would have qualified as exploratory if considered separately will qualify for the credit. For example, if a well is drilled and tested at the completion depth of another well capable of production in commercial quantities that is less than 1.25 miles away, then IDCs paid or incurred with respect to drilling the well to that depth would not be treated as exploratory IDCs. However, if the well is then further drilled to a depth that is at least 800 feet deeper than the commercially productive well, the IDCs paid or incurred with respect to the further drilling would qualify for the credit.

Effective Date

Enhanced oil recovery

The enhanced oil recovery portion of the exploration and production credit is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990, with respect to costs paid or incurred in enhanced oil recovery projects begun or significantly expanded after that date. For this purpose, the committee intends that an EOR project be treated as beginning on the first date on which the tertiary injectant is injected into the reservoir. A significant expansion of any project is to be treated as a separate project. A project will be considered significantly expanded if tertiary activities are taken to recover oil from areas not substantially affected by the project's previously implemented tertiary activities. Except as provided in regulations, a project will not be considered as substantially expanded to the extent it affects acreage to which an EOR method has previously been applied.

Exploratory drilling costs

The exploratory drilling portion of the exploration and production credit is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990, for costs paid or incurred after that date.

d. Modification of percentage depletion rules (secs. 7204-7206 of the bill and sec. 613A of the Code)

Present Law

In general

Under present law, persons owning economic interests in oil and gas producing properties may deduct an allowance for depletion in computing taxable income. Independent producers and royalty owners are permitted to claim the greater of cost or percentage depletion on the production of domestic crude oil and domestic natural gas. The percentage depletion allowance for oil and gas is computed as a fixed percentage (i.e., 15 percent) of the taxpayer's gross income from the oil or gas property.

Net income limitation

The allowance for percentage depletion is subject to several limitations. First, an independent producer or royalty owner may only claim percentage depletion on its combined average daily production of domestic crude oil and domestic natural gas that does not exceed 1,000 barrels (or equivalent amount of natural gas). Second, percentage depletion is further limited (on a property by property basis) to an amount not in excess of 50 percent of the taxpayer's net taxable income from the property, computed without a deduction for depletion (the "net income limitation"). Finally, a taxpayer's overall deduction for percentage depletion is limited to an amount that is equal to 65 percent of the taxpayer's pre-depletion taxable income for the taxable year (the "taxable income limitation").

Transferred property limitation

The allowance for percentage depletion generally does not apply to interests in oil or gas properties (including interests in partnerships or trusts) that were transferred after December 31, 1974 by one taxpayer to another if, at the time of the transfer, the principal value of the property had been demonstrated by prospecting, exploration or discovery work. Exceptions to the transferred property limitation generally include transfers of property at death, certain tax-free transfers of property to controlled corporations under Code section 351, transfers resulting from changes in beneficiaries of trusts, transfers of property between members of a controlled group of corporations, transfers of property between commonly controlled business entities or between certain individuals who are members of the same family, and certain transfers of property between trusts and individuals who are members of the same family. In addition, the transfer rule does not apply to a transfer of certain property by an electing individual to a qualified corporation.

Reasons for Change

The committee is concerned about the steadily increasing dependence of the United States on oil imported from abroad. In light of this concern, the committee believes it is necessary to take steps to maintain and encourage the production of oil and gas in the United States.

The committee understands that in many cases the gross income generated from marginally producing oil and gas property is offset to a significant degree by associated operating costs. By operation of the 50-percent net income limitation, owners of interests in such property often receive little or no benefit from the percentage depletion deduction under present law. The committee understands that as a result of the minimal net income and lack of percentage depletion deduction which occur with respect to some marginal properties, taxpayers have contended that it is not economically feasible to continue the operation of such properties. The committee further understands that once the operation of an oil or gas property is shut down, it is unlikely that production from that property will be restored in the future.

The committee believes that certain incentives should be provided for oil and gas properties so that the extraction of oil and gas reserves from such properties will continue. In particular, the committee believes that it is appropriate to permit a percentage depletion deduction for up to 100 percent of the net income from an oil or gas property in order to permit greater percentage depletion deductions with respect to marginally profitable properties. In the committee's view, the percentage depletion deduction should be limited to 100 percent of net income from the property, as opposed to completely repealing the net income limitation, in order to prevent the percentage depletion deduction from offsetting a taxpayer's income in excess of the net income from the property subject to depletion. Although the application of the amendment to the net income limitation is not limited to a specifically defined group of properties, it is the belief of the committee that most of the benefit of this repeal will inure to owners of interests in marginally producing oil and gas properties.

The committee believes that it is appropriate to encourage the continuing production from oil and gas properties in an efficient and economic manner. The committee believes that the present law rules which prevent a transferee of a proven oil or gas property from claiming percentage depletion with respect to production from that property may discourage the transfer of oil and gas properties that are uneconomic in the hands of their current owners (and thus are likely to be abandoned) to those who may be more efficient, who may be more willing to bear current losses, or who may be better able to use the tax benefits of percentage depletion (and thus who would be able to continue operation of the properties).

The committee also believes that it is appropriate to enhance the benefits of the percentage depletion deduction with respect to marginal properties by increasing the percentage depletion rate during periods in which the price of crude oil or natural gas is sufficiently low to make the profitable operation of marginal properties unlikely.

Explanation of Provision

In general

The bill provides three amendments to the oil and gas percentage depletion rules.

Net income limitation

First, the net income limitation on oil and gas percentage depletion is increased from 50 percent to 100 percent of the net income from the property. The 100-percent net income limitation applies to all oil and gas properties with respect to which percentage depletion is allowed.

To illustrate this rule, consider the following example. Assume that a domestic property owned by an independent producer produces crude oil that generates $200 of gross income during a taxable year and has operating costs (before depletion) of $150. Under the present-law percentage depletion rate of 15 percent, the maximum amount of depletion which could be claimed on such property is $30 ($200 of gross income multiplied by 15 percent). However, under present law, the allowable percentage depletion deduction is limited to $25 because of the 50-percent net income limitation ($50 net income multiplied by 50 percent). Under the bill, the taxpayer would be allowed to claim a percentage depletion deduction of $30 (prior to considering other applicable limitations).

As another example, assume that the same independent producer owns an interest in another domestic oil-producing property, the gross income from which during the taxable year is $100. Further assume that expenses other than depletion for that property are $90, resulting in pre-depletion net income of $10. The 15-percent depletion rate yields a maximum amount of percentage depletion on the property of $15. Because of the 100-percent net income limitation, however, the taxpayer would be limited to a percentage depletion deduction of $10 with respect to that property.

Transferred property limitation

The bill's second amendment repeals the prohibition on claiming percentage depletion on transferred proven oil and gas properties. The repeal of the transfer rule applies to all domestic oil and gas producing properties.

Percentage depletion on marginal production

The bill's third amendment to the percentage depletion rules applies only to interests in marginally producing oil and gas wells held by independent producers or royalty owners. Under this amendment, the statutory percentage depletion rate will be increased by one percent for each whole dollar that the average price of crude oil for the immediately preceding calendar year is less than $20 per barrel (not to be adjusted for inflation). The increased rate will apply for the taxpayer's taxable year which immediately follows a calendar year for which the average crude oil price falls below the $20 floor. Thus, for example, if in a calendar year, the average price of a barrel of crude oil is $19, then the percentage depletion rate for production from marginal wells would be increased by one percent (to 16 percent), for taxable years beginning in the succeeding calendar year.

The bill places a limit on the amount by which the percentage depletion rate can be increased under this provision. The bill specifies that in no event may the rate of percentage depletion exceed 25 percent for any taxable year.

Under the bill, the term marginal production includes (1) crude oil and natural gas produced from a domestic stripper well, and (2) heavy oil (oil that has a weighted average gravity of 20 degrees API or less corrected to 60 degrees Fahrenheit) produced from a domestic property. For purposes of this provision of the bill, a stripper well is any oil or gas producing well which produced a daily average of 15 or less equivalent barrels of oil and gas in the calendar year during which the taxpayer's taxable year begins.[13]

The determination of whether a well qualifies as a stripper well under the bill shall be made separately for each calendar year. The fact that a well does or does not qualify as a stripper well for one year shall not affect the determination of the status of that property for a subsequent year. The stripper well determination is to be made based on the total amount of production from the well for the calendar year. In the case of a person who owns a partial interest in an oil or gas producing well, that person must take into consideration total production from the well for the year, including the portion of such production which is attributable to ownership interests other than his own, in determining whether the well is a stripper well. If the well satisfies the requirements of a stripper well, then that person would receive the benefits of this provision of the bill with respect to his allocable share of the production from the well for his taxable year that begins during the calendar year in which the well so qualifies.

If a taxpayer owns an interest in a depletable property which consists of both stripper wells and non-stripper wells, the benefits of this provision apply only to the portion of the production from that property that is attributable to the stripper wells.

Under the bill, the allowance for percentage depletion remains subject to a 1,000 barrel-per-day limitation. The bill provides, however, that unless a taxpayer elects otherwise, its marginal production shall be given priority over other production for purposes of utilization of the 1,000 barrel-per-day limitation. Any limitation remaining for a taxable year after all marginal production is taken into consideration shall be allocated among the taxpayer's non-marginal production under present-law allocation rules. If a taxpayer elects not to use this special allocation rule, then production will be allocated under present-law rules for purposes of the 1,000 barrel-per-day limitation. Such an election may be made for any taxable year for which this provision of the bill applies.

For purposes of this provision of the bill, the average price of crude oil with respect to a calendar year will be estimated and published by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary's estimate will be based on the average wellhead price per barrel for all domestic crude oil.

[13] Equivalent barrels is computed as the sum of (1) the number of barrels of crude oil produced, and (2) the number of cubic feet of natural gas produced divided by 6,000. If a well produced 10 barrels of crude oil and 12,000 cubic feet of natural gas, its equivalent barrels produced would equal 12 (i.e., 10 + (12,000 / 6,000)).

Effective Date

The provisions related to the net income limitation and the percentage depletion rate for marginal properties are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990. The provision repealing the transfer rule is effective for property transfers occurring after October 11, 1990.

e. Alternative minimum tax relief for oil and gas operations (sec. 7207 of the bill and sec. 56 of the Code).

Present Law

In general

Under present law, corporations and individuals are subject to an alternative minimum tax which is payable, in addition to all other tax liabilities, to the extent that it exceeds the taxpayer's regular income tax owed. The tax is imposed at a flat rate of 20 percent (21 percent in the case of individuals) on alternative minimum taxable income in excess of the exemption amount. Alternative minimum taxable income is the taxpayer's taxable income increased by tax preferences and adjusted by determining the tax treatment of certain items in a manner which negates the deferral of income resulting from the regular tax treatment of those items.

Net operating losses and foreign tax credits generally cannot be used to offset, in the aggregate, more than 90 percent of the pre-foreign tax credit tentative minimum tax which would otherwise be determined.

Preferences relating to oil and gas

The items of tax preference relating to oil and gas operations for which additions are made to taxable income to arrive at alternative minimum taxable income are as follows:

(1) The deduction for percentage depletion is limited to the adjusted basis of the property. To the extent that a percentage depletion deduction for regular tax purposes represents depletion in excess of the taxpayer's basis in the depletable property, that deduction constitutes an item of tax preference (the "percentage depletion preference").

(2) The amount of intangible drilling costs (IDCs) that are expensed in excess of the amount that would have been allowable if the costs had been capitalized and recovered through cost depletion or amortized ratably over a 10-year period and that are in excess of 65 percent of the amount of net oil and gas income is an item of tax preference (the "excess IDC preference").

Adjusted current earnings

For taxable years beginning after 1989, the alternative minimum taxable income of a corporation is increased by an amount equal to 75 percent of the amount by which adjusted current earnings (ACE) exceed pre-net operating loss alternative minimum taxable income. In general, adjusted current earnings means alternative minimum taxable income with additional adjustments. These adjustments generally follow the rules presently applicable to corporations in computing their earnings and profits.

The adjustments specifically relating to oil and gas operations are described below:

(1) The allowance for depletion for any property placed in service in a taxable year beginning after 1989 shall be computed using the cost depletion method (the "ACE depletion adjustment").

(2) Intangible drilling costs deductible under section 263(c) in taxable years beginning after 1989 are capitalized and amortized over the 60-month period beginning with the month in which such costs are paid or incurred (the "ACE IDC adjustment").

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to provide relief to certain taxpayers with oil and gas operations from the various alternative minimum tax preferences and adjustments that specifically relate to such operations. The committee believes the effectiveness of oil and gas incentives is softened to the extent that taxpayers in the oil and gas industry are subject to the alternative minimum tax (in addition to the regular income tax). Moreover, the committee believes that a large segment of oil and gas independent producers have significant amounts of tax preference items and accordingly are subject to the alternative minimum tax. Consequently, to increase the effectiveness of certain oil and gas incentives, the committee desires to make these incentives applicable, to some extent, to the alternative minimum tax.

Explanation of Provision

In general

The bill provides a special energy deduction for purposes of the alternative minimum tax. The deduction is based on a specified portion of the various oil and gas related tax preference items. In addition, for corporations, the deduction generally includes a specified percentage of the energy-related portion of the adjusted current earnings adjustment.

Specifically, the special energy deduction is initially determined by determining the taxpayer's (1) intangible drilling cost preference and (2) the marginal production depletion preference. The intangible drilling cost preference is the amount by which the taxpayer's alternative minimum taxable income would be reduced if it were computed without regard to the excess IDC preference and the ACE IDC adjustment. The marginal production depletion preference is the amount by which the taxpayer's alternative minimum taxable income would be reduced if it were computed without regard to the excess depletion preference and the ACE depletion adjustment attributable to marginal production. The intangible drilling cost preference is then apportioned between (1) the portion of the preference related to qualified exploratory costs and (2) the remaining portion of the preference. The portion of the preference related to qualified exploratory costs generally is multiplied by 75 percent and the remaining portion generally is multiplied by 15 percent. The marginal production depletion preference generally is multiplied by 50 percent. The three products described above are added together to arrive at the taxpayer's special energy deduction (subject to certain limitations).

The application of these general rules to corporate and noncorporate taxpayers, limitations and phase-outs of the special energy deduction, allocation and apportionment rules, and other special rules are described below.

Taxpayers other than corporations

In the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, the special energy deduction is generally equal to the sum of the following items: (1) 75 percent of the portion of the excess IDC preference (as determined under Code section 57(a)(2)) which is attributable to exploratory IDCs, (2) 15 percent of the portion of the excess IDC preference (as determined under Code section 57(a)(2)) which is attributable to developmental IDCs, and (3) 50 percent of the portion of the percentage depletion preference (as determined under Code section 57(a)(1)) which is attributable to marginal production of oil and gas.[14] The special energy deduction is not allowed, however, to the extent that it exceeds 40 percent of alternative minimum taxable income determined without regard to either this special energy deduction or the alternative tax net operating loss deduction. Any special energy deduction amount limited by the 40-percent threshold may not be carried to another taxable year.

For purposes of this provision of the bill, a taxpayer is required to determine the portion of domestic IDCs which are attributable to the drilling of exploratory wells, and the portion which is attributable to the drilling of development wells. The taxpayer's IDC preference attributable to exploratory IDCs is an amount equal to the total IDC preference multiplied by the ratio of domestic exploratory IDCs to total domestic IDCs for the taxable year. For this purpose, exploratory IDCs are IDCs paid or incurred with respect to the drilling of an exploratory well as that term is defined under section 7203 of the bill relating to the exploratory drilling credit. That provision of the bill establishes special qualification rules for determining whether a well is an exploratory well. In general, an oil or gas well (the "new well") qualifies as an exploratory well if at the time it is completed, there is no oil or gas well capable of commercial production within a radius of 1.25 miles of the drilling site of the new well. If the new well is drilled within 1.25 miles of another well capable of producing oil or gas in commercial quantities, it may still qualify as an exploratory well if it is drilled to a depth at least 800 feet below the deepest commercial production depth within the 1.25 mile radius. If the new well fails both the distance and the depth tests, it nevertheless will be considered an exploratory well if it is drilled into a new reservoir of oil or gas.

The taxpayer's IDC preference attributable to developmental IDCs is an amount equal to the total IDC preference less the portion of that preference attributable to exploratory IDCs as defined above.

With respect to the portion of the special energy deduction related to the percentage depletion preference, marginal production of oil and gas has the same meaning as it has under section 7203 of the bill for purposes of providing an increased rate of percentage depletion in taxable years when the price of crude oil is sufficiently low. That is, the term marginal production includes (1) crude oil and natural gas produced from a domestic stripper well, and (2) heavy oil (oil that has a weighted average gravity of 20 degrees API or less corrected to 60 degrees Fahrenheit) produced from a domestic property. For purposes of this provision of the bill, a stripper well is any oil or gas producing well which produced a daily average of 15 or less equivalent barrels of oil and gas in the calendar year during which the taxpayer's taxable year begins.

The portion of a taxpayer's percentage depletion preference attributable to marginal production shall be determined based on an identification of the component of the percentage depletion preference that is specifically attributable to percentage depletion from marginal wells. For example, if a taxpayer has both marginal and non-marginal oil and gas wells, but only the production from non-marginal wells produces percentage depletion in excess of basis, then the taxpayer would have no marginal production depletion preference. To the extent that a depletable property consists of both marginal and non-marginal wells, the committee intends the property's basis will be allocated between those two classifications of wells in a reasonable manner for the purpose of determining whether excess percentage depletion from the property relates to marginal or non-marginal wells.

Corporations

Generally, the special energy deduction for corporations is computed similarly to the deduction for non-corporate taxpayers, except that the corporate deduction takes into consideration the portion of the adjusted current earnings adjustment that is related to percentage depletion attributable to marginal production and IDCs. Thus, in the case of a corporation, the special energy deduction is generally equal to the sum of the following items: (1) 75 percent of the portion of the intangible drilling cost preference which is attributable to exploratory IDCs, (2) 15 percent of the portion of the intangible drilling cost preference which is attributable to developmental IDCs, and (3) 50 percent of the portion of the marginal production depletion preference.

The intangible drilling cost preference is treated as being attributable to exploratory and developmental drilling under the same formula that applies for non-corporate taxpayers. The marginal production depletion preference amount is treated as being attributable to marginal producing properties under rules similar to the rules that apply for non-corporate taxpayers.

As in the case of non-corporate taxpayers, the special energy deduction for corporations is not allowed to the extent that it exceeds 40 percent of alternative minimum taxable income determined without regard to either this special energy deduction or the alternative tax net operating loss deduction. Any special energy deduction amount limited by the 40-percent threshold may not be carried to another taxable year.

The special energy deduction may not be claimed by integrated oil companies.

Phase-out of special energy deduction

The special energy deduction will be phased out in taxable years that follow calendar years in which the price of crude oil exceeds a specified level. The amount of the special energy deduction (determined without regard to the phaseout) is to be reduced for any taxable year that immediately follows a calendar year during which the average price of crude oil exceeds $28 per barrel (adjusted for inflation using the GNP implicit price deflator) and will be completely phased out if the average price of oil exceeds such inflation adjusted amount by $6 or more in such year. The amount of the deduction would phase out ratably over the $6 phaseout range. That is, for example, if in a year the average price of oil exceeded the inflation adjusted base level by $4, then the amount of the otherwise allowable deduction would be reduced by two-thirds ($4 over $6) for the immediately following taxable year.

For purposes of this provision of the bill, the average price of crude oil with respect to a calendar year will be estimated and published by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary's estimate will be based on the annual average wellhead price per barrel for all domestic crude oil production.

[14] Taxpayers other than corporations generally are not subject to the ACE adjustments described in section 56.

Regulations and other rules

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to develop regulations to provide for appropriate adjustments in computing taxable income, alternative minimum taxable income, and adjusted current earnings for any taxable year following a taxable year for which a deduction was allowed under this provision to ensure that no double benefit is allowed by reason of such deduction.

In addition, the combination of the special energy deduction, the alternative minimum tax net operating loss and the alternative minimum tax foreign tax credit cannot generally offset, in the aggregate, more than the 90 percent of a taxpayer's alternative minimum tax determined without such attributes.

Effective Date

The special energy deduction is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

2. Small Business Incentives

a. Revision of estate freeze rules (secs. 7209-7210 of the bill and sec. 2036(c) of the Code)

Present Law and Background

Overview of transfer tax system

In general

Generally, a Federal gift tax is imposed on transfers by gift during life, and a Federal estate tax is imposed on the taxable estate at death. The Federal estate and gift taxes are unified, so that a single progressive rate schedule is applied to an individual's cumulative lifetime and death time transfers.

Valuation of property

The value of property transferred by gift or includable in the decedent's gross estate generally is its fair market value at the time of the gift or death. Fair market value is the price at which the property would change hands between a willing buyer and willing seller, neither being under any compulsion to buy or sell and both having reasonable knowledge of relevant facts (Treas. Reg. sec. 20.2031-1(b)). This standard looks to the value of the property to a hypothetical seller and buyer, not the actual parties to the transfer.[15] Accordingly, courts generally have refused to consider familial relationships among co-owners in valuing property. For example, courts allow corporate stock to be discounted to reflect minority ownership even when related persons together own most or all of the underlying stock.[16] In addition, a transfer made in the ordinary course of business which is bona fide, at arm's length, and without any donative intent, will be deemed to be for full and adequate consideration and, therefore, not result in a taxable gift. See Treas. Reg. sec. 25.2512-8.

Statute of limitations

Generally, any estate or gift tax must be assessed within 3 years after the filing of the return. No proceeding in a court for the collection of an estate or gift tax can be begun without an assessment within the 3-year period. If no return is filed, the tax may be assessed, or a suit commenced to collect the tax without assessment, at any time. If an estate or gift tax return is filed, and the amount of unreported items exceeds 25 percent of the amount of the reported items, the tax may be assessed or a suit commenced to collect the tax without assessment, within 6 years after the return was filed. (Code sec. 6501.)

Selected transfer tax consequences of estate freeze transactions without regard to section 2036(c)

An "estate freeze" is a technique that has the effect of limiting the estate tax value of property held by an older generation at its value at the time of the freeze and passing any appreciation in the property to a younger generation. Generally, the older generation retains income from, or control over, the property.

In order to effect a freeze, the older generation transfers an interest in a business or other property that is likely to appreciate while retaining an interest in the property that is less likely to appreciate. Because the value of the transferred interest increases while the value of the retained interest remains relatively constant, the older generation has "frozen" the value of the property in the transferor's estate.

Preferred interests in corporations and partnerships

Description.—In one common estate freeze transaction, the "preferred interest freeze", a person owning preferred and residual interests in a corporation or partnership transfers the residual interest to a younger generation while retaining the preferred interest.

The preferred interest may enjoy preferred rights as to income or management. It also may carry discretionary rights regarding the amount, timing or fact of payment. Such discretionary rights include: (1) a right to "put" the frozen interest for an amount equal to the liquidation preference of the frozen interest; (2) a right to liquidate an entity and receive assets; or (3) a right to convert the nonappreciating retained interest into an appreciating interest.

Gift tax consequences: The transfer of a residual interest in a corporation or partnership for less than full and adequate consideration is a gift. The value of the residual interest is generally determined by subtracting the value of the preferred interest from the value of all interests in the corporation or partnership. The value of preferred stock then is determined by looking to comparable stocks. The Internal Revenue Service has ruled that the most important factors in determining the value of preferred stock generally are its yield, dividend coverage, and protection of its liquidation preference.[17] Voting, redemption, liquidation, and conversion rights also may add to the value of the preferred interest. Under the "willing buyer, willing seller" valuation standard, it is assumed that rights will be exercised so as to maximize the value of the owner's retained interests without regard to the actual likelihood of exercise.

For example, in Snyder v. Commissioner,[18] a grandmother transferred publicly traded shares of a growing corporation to a newly created holding company in exchange for preferred stock and common stock of the holding company. The preferred stock had a par value equal to the value of the holding company less $1,000, was callable at the election of the preferred shareholders, and, in effect, could be put to the company at par. The grandmother then transferred the common stock to a trust for the benefit of her grandchildren and valued the common stock at $1,000. Although finding that the grandmother did not expect to exercise the put option in the absence of unanticipated and extraordinary financial need, the U.S. Tax Court nonetheless held that the value of the common stock was $1,000, because a willing buyer would pay more only with some assurance that the option would not be exercised.

The failure to exercise rights in an arm's-length manner after the initial transfer of common stock may give rise to a gift. The Internal Revenue Service has held in several private letter rulings that the failure to exercise rights with respect to an equity interest can give rise to a gift.[19]

Trusts and term interests in property

Description: Another common estate freeze transaction involves the retention of a term of years or life estate in a trust or property. For example, a parent may transfer property or money to an irrevocable trust for the ultimate benefit of a child in which the parent retains an income interest for a term of years. Or, an owner of property may sell a remainder interest in the property to a child. Or, older and younger generations may jointly purchase term and remainder interests in property from a third party. All these transactions effectively shift future appreciation in the property to the younger generation.

Gift tax consequences: The above transfers result in a taxable gift if the value of the remainder interest exceeds the value of any consideration paid for such interest. The value of the remainder interest is the value of the entire property less the value of rights in the property retained by the grantor. Rights retained by the grantor generally are valued pursuant to Treasury tables that assume a rate of return on the underlying property equal to 120 percent of the applicable Federal midterm rate (Code sec. 7520, Treas. Reg. sec. 20.2512-5(f)). Use of the Treasury tables is allowed even when they do not accurately predict the actual rate of return from the property. For example, in 1977, the Internal Revenue Service ruled that the application of tables based on an interest rate of 6 percent per year was appropriate in valuing a trust whose corpus consisted of stock that had paid an average dividend of 3 percent for the preceding ten years.[20] According to the ruling, "departure from strict application of the tables is permissible in exceptional cases where use of the tables would violate reason and fact; for example, where transferred property may yield no income at all or the income is definitely determinable by other means."[21]

Options and buy-sell agreements

Description: Under another common freeze device, a member of an older generation grants a member of a younger generation an option to purchase property at a fixed or formula price. Such an option may be part of a buy-sell agreement under which the survivor (or the corporation) has the right to purchase stock from the estate of the first to die. An option may freeze the value of property at the strike price which in turn may be below the fair market value of the property at the date of death.

Estate tax consequences: A restriction upon the sale or transfer of property may reduce its fair market value. Treasury regulations issued in 1958 acknowledge that the existence of an option or contract to purchase may affect the estate tax value of stock. Those regulations provide that the restriction is to be disregarded unless the agreement represents a bona fide business arrangement and not a device to pass the decedent's stock to natural objects of his bounty for less than full and adequate consideration.[22]

Some courts have gone beyond the Treasury regulations and held that the price contained in a buy-sell agreement will limit fair market value for estate tax purposes if the price is fixed or determinable, the estate is obligated to sell, the agreement contains restrictions on lifetime transfers, and there is a valid business purpose for the agreement.[23]

In applying this standard, a number of courts have held that maintenance of family control and ownership is a business purpose that precludes the possibility that the agreement serves as a testamentary device.[24] Continuation of family ownership and control has been found sufficient even when the "control" being preserved is only the right to participate as a limited partner.[25] It also has been held sufficient when one party to the agreement has already contracted a terminal illness.[26]

In Saint Louis County Bank v. United States, 674 F.2d 1207 (8th Cir. 1982), the Eighth Circuit held that the maintenance of family ownership and control of the business standing alone to be an insufficient ground for giving effect to a buy-sell agreement. Conceding that such purpose established the existence of a business purpose, the court went on to consider whether the agreement was a tax avoidance device. In finding evidence that might establish a tax avoidance motive notwithstanding a business purpose, the court considered the health of the decedent when the agreement was made, the disparity of the sale price from fair market value, and the enforcement of the agreement against other parties.

Lapsing rights

Estate freezes often involve the creation of a right that terminates over time or lapses at death. In Estate of Harrison v. Commissioner,[27] however, the United States Tax Court held to the contrary. In that case, a father retained both a limited and general partnership interest after forming a partnership in which his sons received limited partnership interests. Held in conjunction with the general partnership interest, the father's limited partnership interest was worth $59 million (because the general partnership interest carried with it the right to liquidate the partnership); held alone, the limited partnership interest was worth $33 million. The father died owning both interests, but the general partnership interest was immediately sold to the sons for $700,000 pursuant to a buy-sell agreement taking effect at death. The United States Tax Court held that the limited partnership interest was includable in the father's gross estate at a value of $33 million. The IRS has privately ruled that the value of a voting right that lapses on the decedent's death is includable in the gross estate under section 2031.[28]

Estate tax inclusion relating to estate freezes: section 2036(c)

In the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, the Congress addressed the estate freeze transaction by including the value of the transferred appreciating interest in the decedent's gross estate and crediting any gift tax previously paid (Code sec. 2036(c)). Section 2036(c) generally provides that if a person in effect transfers property having a disproportionately large share of the potential appreciation in an enterprise while retaining an interest, or right in, the enterprise, then the transferred property is includable in his gross estate. Dispositions of either the transferred or retained property prior to the transferor's death result in a deemed gift equal to the amount that would have been includable had the transferor died at the time of the transfer.

Repeal of section 2036(c)

The committee believes that an across-the-board inclusion rule is an inappropriate and unnecessary approach to the valuation problems associated with estate freezes. The committee believes that the amount of any tax on a gift should be determined at the time of the transfer and not upon the death of the transferor.

Moreover, the committee is concerned that the statute's complexity, breadth, and vagueness posed an unreasonable impediment to the transfer of family businesses. The committee also is concerned that many taxpayers have refrained from legitimate intrafamily transactions because of uncertainty about the scope of its rules. Moreover, the current rules are over inclusive because they apply if the transferor retains virtually any interest in the income from, or rights in, the enterprise.

Accordingly, the committee bill repeals section 2036(c) retroactive to the date of its enactment.

Replacement for section 2036(c)

While the committee believes that section 2036(c) is not the appropriate method of taxing freeze transactions, the committee nonetheless is concerned about potential estate and gift tax valuation abuses. Accordingly, the committee bill generally substitutes for section 2036(c) a series of targeted rules generally designed to assure a more accurate determination of the value of the property subject to transfer tax.

In developing a replacement for current section 2036(c) the committee sought to accomplish several goals: (1) to provide a well defined and administrable set of rules; (2) to allow business owners who are not abusing the transfer tax system to freely engage in standard intrafamily transactions without being subject to severe transfer tax consequences; and (3) to deter abuse by making unfavorable assumptions regarding certain retained rights.

The committee is concerned about the potential transfer of wealth through the use of discretionary rights in a partnership or corporation. For example, wealth may pass from a preferred shareholder to a common shareholder if the corporation fails to pay dividends to the preferred shareholder. Even if the preferred stock is cumulative, such failure results in a transfer equal to the value of the use of the money until the dividend is paid. Or, by exercising conversion, liquidation, put or call rights in other than an arm's-length fashion (or by not exercising such rights before they lapse), the transferor may transfer part or all of the value of such rights.

Accordingly, the committee adopts certain rules designed to eliminate the potential for transferring wealth through nonexercise of discretionary rights. The bill values at zero certain discretionary rights on the assumption that they will not be exercised in an arm's length manner. The bill also assures a full transfer tax from the failure to exercise cumulative distribution rights in a timely fashion by compounding unpaid distributions.

The committee believes that the residual interest in a corporation or partnership may have value in excess of current projected cash flows because it carries with it the right to future appreciation. The market often gives substantial value to this "option value". Accordingly, the committee bill provides for a minimal value for the residual interests in a corporation or partnership. This minimum value, in effect, sets a floor on the discount rate used in valuing the preferred interests in a corporation or partnership that is not dramatically below the market rate. This floor reflects the minimal coverage that a purchaser of the preferred stock might require in the market for traded securities.

The committee also is concerned about the difficulty experienced by the Internal Revenue Service in auditing estate freeze transactions. Many estate freeze transactions are unreported because the taxpayer takes the position that the transfer was for full and adequate consideration or for less than the annual gift tax exclusion. Moreover, even reported freeze transactions are seldom detected. Indeed, it is virtually impossible for the IRS to monitor all post-transfer action or inaction with respect to such rights.

To assist the Internal Revenue Service in this audit problem, the bill extends the statute of limitations for transfers not reported on a gift tax return.

Trusts and term interests in property

In addition, the committee is concerned about the undervaluation of gifts valued pursuant to Treasury tables. Based on average rates of return and life expectancy, those tables are seldom accurate in a particular case, and therefore, may be the subject of adverse selection. Because the taxpayer decides what property to give, when to give it, and often controls the return on the property, use of Treasury tables undervalues the transferred interests in the aggregate, more often than not.

Therefore, the committee determines that the valuation problems inherent in trusts and term interests in property are best addressed by valuing retained interests at zero unless they take an easily valued form—as an annuity or unitrust interest. By doing so, the bill draws upon present law rules valuing split interests in property for purposes of the charitable deduction.

Options and buy-sell agreements

The committee believes that buy-sell agreements are common business planning arrangements and that buy-sell agreements generally are entered into for legitimate business reasons that are not related to transfer tax consequences. Buy-sell agreements are commonly used to control the transfer of ownership in a closely held business, to avoid expensive appraisals in determining purchase price, to prevent the transfer to an unrelated party, to provide a market for the equity interest, and to allow owners to plan for future liquidity needs in advance. However, the committee is aware of the potential of buy-sell agreements for distorting transfer tax value. Therefore, the committee establishes rules that attempt to distinguish between agreements designed to avoid estate taxes and those with legitimate business agreements. These rules generally disregard a buy-sell agreement that would not have been entered into by unrelated parties acting at arm's length.

Lapsing rights

The committee is concerned about the use of lapsing rights to transfer value free of transfer tax. Such rights are difficult to value when created and may not be exercised in an arm's length manner.

Accordingly, the committee does not believe it appropriate to give value to lapsing voting rights carried by preferred interests. In addition, it believes that property transferred at death is more accurately valued by disregarding lapsing restrictions and by adding back the value attributable to a lapsing right to the value of the transferor's interest in the business.

Explanation of Provisions

In general

The bill repeals section 2036(c) retroactively and provides in its place rules generally intended to assure more accurate gift tax valuation of the initial transfer. These rules modify the valuation of specific retained rights in corporations and partnerships, the valuation of split temporal interests in property, the effect of buy-sell agreements and options upon value, the transfer tax consequences of lapsing rights, and the gift tax statute of limitations.

Preferred interests in corporations and partnerships

The bill provides rules for valuing certain rights retained immediately after the transfer of an interest in a corporation or partnership by the transferor or applicable family members. The rules rely on present law principles regarding the valuation of residual interests, with an adjustment to reflect the actual fragmented ownership. The rules apply to the transfer of a residual interest to (or for the benefit of) a family member. In applying the rules, an individual is treated as holding amounts held through a corporation, partnership, trust or other entity. The bill does not affect minority discounts or other discounts available under present law.

Retained rights affected by the bill

A retained liquidation, put, call, or conversion right is valued at zero, unless such right must be exercised at a specific time and amount. For instance, a liquidation right that is required to be exercised at a fixed date for a sum certain is unaffected by the bill.

A retained distribution right that is noncumulative or lacks a preference upon liquidation is valued at zero if the transferor and applicable family members control the entity. For a corporation, control is defined as holding, before the transfer, at least 50 percent (by vote or value) of the stock of the corporation. For a partnership, control generally is defined as holding at least 50 percent of the capital or profits interest in the partnership. In addition, any general partner in a limited partnership is deemed to have control. In determining control, an individual is treated as holding any interest held by a brother, sister, or lineal descendent.

Example 1: A father who holds convertible debt and 50 percent of the stock gives the stock to his daughter. The corporation has only a single class of stock. In valuing the gift, the conversion feature of the debt is valued at zero. Assuming that this conversion feature otherwise would have been valued at $1,000, the bill increases the value of the gift of the stock to the daughter by $500. If the father had only given half of the stock to the daughter, the gift would be increased by $250.

A cumulative distribution right having a preference upon liquidation is valued under a special standard under which the determination as to whether the cumulative distribution can reasonably be expected to be timely paid is made without regard to whether the transferor retains control.

Exceptions

The bill contains five exceptions to the above rules. First, the bill does not apply to any right conferred by a retained interest for which market quotations are readily available on an established securities market. The bill also does not apply if the market quotations are readily available for the transferred interest.

The second exception is for a retained interest that is of the same class as the transferred interest. Under this exception, the bill does not affect the valuation of a gift of common stock if the transferor only retains rights of that class of common. Likewise, the bill does not affect the valuation of a gift of a partnership interest if all interests in the partnership share equally in all items of income, deduction, loss and gain in the same proportion (i.e., straight-up allocations).

The third exception excludes a retained interest that would be of the same class as the transferred interest but for nonlapsing differences in voting power (or, in the case of a partnership, nonlapsing differences with respect to management and limitations on liability). Nonlapsing limitations on liability are permitted only if the transferor or applicable family member does not have the right to alter the transferee's liability. Under this exception, the bill does not affect the valuation of a transfer of nonvoting stock in an S corporation, coupled with the retention of voting stock in such corporation.

Except as provided in Treasury regulations, a right that lapses by reason of state law would be treated as nonlapsing for these purposes. The committee intends that the regulations exempt lapses occurring by reason of state law that do not have the effect of transferring value not contemplated by state law, as when a lapsing right to management effectively extinguishes a right to be redeemed at fair market value.

Fourth, the bill provides an exception in situations where the rights in the retained interests in the business are proportionally the same as all of the rights in the transferred interests in the business, other than voting rights. This exception would apply, for instance, if the retained and transferred interests consisted of two classes of common stock, which shared in all distributions, liquidation and other rights in a two to one ratio.

Fifth, the bill does not apply to a right to convert into a fixed number (or a fixed percentage) of the shares of the same class as the transferred stock, if such rights are nonlapsing, subject to proportionate adjustments for splits, combinations, reclassifications and similar changes in the capital stock, and adjusted for accumulated dividends not paid on a timely basis. A similar exception applies to rights in partnerships. This exception is provided because the full appreciated value of such right will be subject to later transfer tax.

Example 2: A mother holding all the common stock and preferred stock in a company sells one half of her common stock to her son. The preferred stock is cumulative and can be put to the corporation for its par value. In determining whether there is a gift, and the amount of the gift, the determination of whether cumulative dividends can reasonably be paid is made without regard to the mother's control, the put right is valued at zero, and the retained rights under the common stock are valued as under present law.

Example 3: The facts are the same as Example 2, above, except that the mother does not have control over the corporation. In determining whether there is a gift, and the amount of the gift, the put right is valued at zero. The right to distributions and the retained rights under the common stock are valued as under present law.

Example 4: F owns 25 shares of the 100 outstanding shares of noncumulative preferred stock in Company X. F's father, GF, owns the remaining 75 shares of the noncumulative preferred in Company X. F owns all of the 100 outstanding shares of the common stock in Company X. F gives 10 shares of common stock to his son. Under the provisions of the bill, the noncumulative preferred stock of both F and GF would be given a value of zero in determining the amount of the gift by F to his son. Thus, the amount of the gift would be the same amount as if F gave 10 shares of common to his son in a corporation that had only 100 shares of common stock outstanding.

Definitions

Liquidation, put, call or conversion right: A liquidation, put, call or conversion right is any liquidation, put, call or conversion or similar right the exercise or nonexercise of which affects the value of the transferred interest.

Distribution right: A distribution right generally is a right to distributions with respect to stock of a corporation or a partnership interest. A distribution right does not include any right in a junior equity interest.[29] Junior equity interests do not affect the value of the transferred preferred interests because the valuation of the preferred interests does not affect the value of the junior equity interests, i.e., the value of the preferred interests does not depend upon the value of the junior equity interests. In addition, a distribution right does not include any liquidation, put, call, or conversion right, or a guaranteed payment determined without regard to income.

Family: A "member of the family" is, with respect to any transferor, the transferor's spouse, a lineal descendent of the transferor or the transferor's spouse, and the spouse of any such descendant. An "applicable family member" is, with respect to any transferor, the transferor's spouse, ancestors of the transferor and the spouse, and spouses of such ancestors.

Transfer: Except as provided in Treasury regulations, any redemption, recapitalization, contribution to capital, or other change in the capital structure of a corporation or partnership is treated as a transfer of an interest in such entity if an individual or applicable family member thereby receives a retained right affected by the bill. Regulations also may provide that such an event results in a transfer if the individual or applicable family member thereafter holds such an interest.

Example 5: Mother and daughter together own all the common shares in a corporation. Mother redeems her shares for preferred stock. The provision applies in valuing the preferred stock received by mother for purposes of determining whether the redemption results in a gift to daughter.

Example 6: Father and son form a partnership to which each contributes capital and in which the father receives a preferred interest and the son receives a residual interest. The provision applies in determining whether, and the extent to which, the capital contributions result in a gift.

Transfer tax treatment of accumulated distributions

The bill increases the taxable gifts or taxable estate of a transferor who retained cumulative preferred stock valued under the rule described above. The amount of the increase is the excess of (1) the value of the distributions payable during the period beginning on the date of transfer and ending on the date of the taxable event determined as if all such distributions were paid on the date payment was due and all such distributions were reinvested by the transferor as of the date of payment at a yield equal to the discount rate used in determining the value of the applicable retained interest over (2) the value of the distributions paid during such period computed on the basis of the time when such distributions were actually paid.

Where the retained preferred cumulative stock is transferred to the transferor's spouse in a transfer that qualifies for the gift or estate tax marital deduction no adjustment is made with respect to taxable gifts or the taxable estate of the original transferor, but the spouse is then treated as the transferor. Any payment of any distribution prior to the end of the 4-year period beginning on its due date would be treated as having been made on such due date. The bill provides that a taxpayer may elect to treat payment of a distribution after the 4-year period as a taxable gift for purpose of chapter 12.

The amount of unpaid accumulated dividends and interest thereon that is subject in the gift or estate tax is capped at an amount equal to the excess of the fair market value of the common interests in the business at date of death over the fair market value of the common interests in the business at the date of the transfer multiplied by a fraction equal to the value of the preferred interests in the business held by the transferor divided by the value of all the preferred interests in the business. The purpose of this cap is to limit the amount of increase under the provision to the benefit adhering to the donee from the failure to pay dividends.

The bill provides that Treasury Regulations would provide for appropriate transfer tax adjustments for rights previously valued under the bill in order to prevent the double taxation of rights that were given a zero value under the provisions of the bill.

Minimum value of residual interest

The bill also establishes a minimum value for a junior equity interest in a corporation or partnership. This minimum is the value that would be determined if the total value of all the junior equity interests equaled 10 percent of the sum of the total equity in the corporation or partnership plus any debt which the corporation or partnership owes to the transferor or members of his family. This minimum value is intended to reflect the "option value" of the right of the residual interest to future appreciation.

Statute of limitations

Under the bill, the gift tax statute of limitations runs for transfers subject to the rules governing preferred interests in corporations and partnerships and to increases in taxable gifts with respect to cumulative preferred stock only if the transfer is disclosed on a gift tax return with sufficient detail to appraise the secretary of the nature of the transferred and retained interests. Thus, the statute would not run on an undisclosed or inadequately disclosed transfer, regardless of whether a gift tax return was filed for other transfers in the year in which the transfer occurred.

Trusts and term interests in property

The bill also provides rules for determining whether a transfer of an interest in trust to a member of the transferor's family is a gift, and the amount of the gift. These rules do not apply to the extent that the transfer is incomplete. Nor do they apply to a transfer of an interest in a personal residence inhabited by the holder of the term interest.

Valuation of initial transfer

The bill requires that the value of a remainder interest be determined by subtracting the value of the income interest from the value of the entire property. The bill provides that the value of an interest retained by the transferor or an applicable family member is zero unless such interest is a "qualified interest". A qualified interest is (1) a right to receive fixed amounts payable at least annually, (2) a right to receive amounts payable at least annually which are a fixed percentage of the trust's assets (determined annually), or (3) a non-contingent remainder interest if all the other interests in the trust are qualified payments.[30] A qualified interest generally would be valued under present law, e.g., by reference to section 7520.

Thus, a person who makes a completed transfer of nonresidential property in trust and retains (1) the right to the income of the trust for a term of years and (2) a reversionary right (or a testamentary general power of appointment) with respect to trust corpus is treated as making a transfer equal to the value of the whole property. The same result obtains if the transferor retains (1) the right to both income and appreciation for a term of years plus (2) a testamentary general power of appointment over trust corpus for that period. In contrast, the creation of a trust the only interests in which are an annuity for a term of years and a noncontingent remainder interest is valued under present law.

Sale of remainder interest and joint purchase of interests in property

Under the bill, the retention of a term interest (including a life estate) in property is treated like the retention of an interest in trust. Moreover, a joint purchase of property is treated as an acquisition of the entire property by the holder of the term interest, followed by a transfer of the remainder interest. Thus, for purposes of determining the amount of the gift, the bill effectively treats the purchaser of a life estate pursuant to a joint purchase as making a transfer of the entire property less the consideration paid by the remainderman.

A special rule applies to a term interest in tangible property where the non-exercise of the term-holder's rights does not substantially affect the value of the property passing to the remainderman. In that case, the value of the term interest is the amount for which the taxpayer establishes that the interest could be sold to an unrelated third party. Such amount is not determined under the Treasury tables, but by reference to market norms, taking into account the illiquidity of such interests.

For example, the rule could apply to the joint purchase of a painting or undeveloped real estate (the value of which primarily reflects future development potential). On the other hand, the rule would not apply to a joint purchase of depletable property. Treasury regulations would provide for the proper treatment of improvements or other changes in property governed by this special rule.

The bill provides that the value of property for transfer tax purposes is determined without regard to any option, agreement or other right to acquire or use the property at less than fair market value or any restriction on the right to sell or use such property, unless the option, agreement, right or restriction meets three requirements. These requirements apply to any restriction, however created. For example, they apply to restrictions implicit in the capital structure of the partnership or contained in a partnership agreement, articles of incorporation, or corporate bylaws or a shareholder's agreement.

The first two requirements are that the option, agreement, right or restriction (1) be a bona fide business arrangement, and (2) not be a device to transfer such property to members of the decedent's family for less than full and adequate consideration in money or money's worth. These requirements are similar to those contained in the present Treasury regulations, except that the bill clarifies that the business arrangement and device requirements are independent tests. The mere showing that the agreement is a bona fide business arrangement would not give the agreement estate tax effect if other facts indicate that the agreement is a device to transfer property to members of the decedent's family for less than full and adequate consideration. In making this clarification, it adopts the reasoning of Saint Louis County Bank and rejects the suggestion of other cases that the maintenance of family control standing alone assures the absence of a device to transfer wealth.

In addition, the bill adds a third requirement, not found in present law, that the terms of the option, agreement, right or restrictions be comparable to similar arrangements entered into by persons in an arm's length transaction. This requires that the taxpayer show that the agreement was one that could have been obtained in an arm's length bargain. Such determination would entail consideration of such factors as the expected term of the agreement, the present value of the property, its expected value at the time of exercise, and the consideration offered for the option. It is not met simply by showing isolated comparables but requires a demonstration of the general practice of unrelated parties. Expert testimony would be evidence of such practice. In unusual cases where comparables are difficult to find because the taxpayer owns a unique business, the taxpayer can use comparables from similar businesses.

The bill does not otherwise alter the requirements for giving weight to a buy-sell agreement. For example, it leaves intact present law rules requiring that an agreement have lifetime restrictions in order to be binding on death.

Treatment of lapsing rights

The bill also provides rules governing the transfer tax consequences of lapsing rights. These rules are intended to overturn the result and reasoning of Harrison v. Commissioner. Under these rules, the value of property is determined without regard to any restriction other than a restriction which by its terms will never lapse.

Example 7: Parent and child contribute capital to a newly formed partnership. The partnership agreement provides that the partnership cannot be terminated for a term of years. The determination of whether the contributions to capital constitute a gift is made without regard to the restriction on terminations.

In addition, any right held by the decedent with respect to property includable in the gross estate which effectively lapsed on the death of the decedent would, in valuing such property in the estate, be deemed exercisable by the estate.

Example 8: Parent and child form a corporation in which the parent obtains voting common stock and the child obtains nonvoting common stock. The voting feature of the parent's stock lapses on the parent's death. Under the bill, the parent's stock is valued under the assumption that the stock continues to vote.

Study

The bill requires that the Secretary of the Treasury conduct a study of the prevalence and types of options and agreements used to distort the transfer tax valuation of property and other methods using discretionary rights to distort the value of property for such purposes. The results of the study would be reported no later than December 31, 1992.

Effective Date

The rules regarding preferred interests in corporations and partnerships and trusts and term interests are effective generally for transfers after October 8, 1990. With respect to property transferred before October 9, 1990, any failure to exercise a right of conversion, any failure to pay dividends, and any failure to exercise other rights specified in regulations would not be treated as a subsequent transfer.

The rules governing trusts and term interests are effective generally for transfers after October 8, 1990. The rules governing buy-sell agreements would apply to agreements, options, rights or restrictions entered into or granted after October 8, 1990. The rules governing lapsing rights would be effective for restrictions and rights created after October 8, 1990. The modification in the statute of limitations would be effective for gifts after October 8, 1990.

b. Expand election to expense certain depreciable business property (sec. 7211 of the bill and sec. 179 of the Code)

Present Law

Under section 179 of the Internal Revenue Code, a taxpayer generally may elect to deduct the cost of up to $10,000 of qualifying property for the taxable year in which the property is placed in service, in lieu of recovering the cost of the property under the accelerated cost recovery system. For this purpose, qualifying property is generally defined as depreciable tangible property that is purchased for use in the active conduct of a trade or business.

The amount eligible to be expended for any taxable year is reduced by the amount by which the cost of qualifying property placed in service during the year exceeds $200,000.

In addition, the amount allowed as a deduction for any taxable year may not exceed the taxable income of the taxpayer for the year that is derived from the active conduct by the taxpayer of any trade or business (determined without regard to the deduction). Any amount that is not allowed as a deduction because of the taxable income limitation may be carried forward to succeeding taxable years (subject to similar limitations).

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to increase the amount of the cost of certain tangible property that is eligible for expensing in order to provide an incentive for small businesses to invest in such property.

Explanation of Provision

The bill amends section 179 to allow taxpayers to elect to deduct the cost of up to $14,000 of qualifying property for the taxable year in which the property is placed in service.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for property placed in service in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

c. Treatment of certain expenditures incurred to make public accommodations accessible to disabled individuals (sec. 7212 of the bill and sec. 190 and new sec. 30 of the Code).

Present Law

Under present law, a taxpayer may elect to deduct certain architectural and transportation barrier removal expenses for the taxable year in which paid or incurred rather than capitalizing such expenses. Architectural and transportation barrier removal expenses are defined for this purpose as expenditures that are paid or incurred by a taxpayer in order to make facilities or public transportation vehicles owned or leased in connection with the taxpayer's business more accessible to handicapped and elderly individuals. In order for such expenditures to be deductible under this provision, the taxpayer must establish to the satisfaction of the Treasury Department that the facility or public transportation vehicle to which the expenditures relate conforms to standards promulgated by the Treasury Department with the concurrence of the Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board. The amount of the deduction allowed under this provision for any taxable year is limited to $35,000.

Reason for Change

The Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 requires businesses to make structural changes to facilities to accommodate disabled and handicapped individuals. The committee is concerned that the requirements contained in the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 may impose a severe financial burden on certain small businesses. Consequently, the committee believes that it is appropriate to provide these small businesses with a nonrefundable income tax credit for a portion of the expenditures that are incurred in complying with the requirements of the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990. As a means of offsetting the cost of this new credit, the committee believes that it is appropriate to reduce the amount that is allowed as a deduction under section 190.

Explanation of Provision

Small business public accommodations access credit

Under the bill, an eligible small business that elects the application of the provision is allowed a nonrefundable income tax credit equal to 50 percent of the amount of the eligible public accommodations access expenditures for any taxable year that exceed $250 but do not exceed $10,250.[31]

The amount of the credit allowed for any taxable year is not to exceed the excess if any of (1) the regular tax for the taxable year reduced by the amount of the foreign tax credit, any nonrefundable personal credits, and certain other specified credits allowed for such taxable year, over (2) the tentative minimum tax for the taxable year. The amount of the credit that is not allowed under this limitation for any taxable year is to be carried back 3 years and forward 15 years, except that the amount of such credit is not to be carried back to any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1991. The amount of any credit that is carried to another taxable year is subject to the limitation described above for the year to which the credit is carried.

Definition of eligible small business

An eligible small business is defined for any taxable year as any person that is engaged in the trade or business of operating a public accommodation and is required by Federal law to make such accommodation accessible to, or usable by, individuals with disabilities, and that either (1) had gross receipts [32] for the preceding taxable year that did not exceed $4 million or (2) had fewer than 30 full-time employees [33] during the taxable year.

[31] Consequently, the maximum amount of the credit for any taxable year is $5,000.

[32] The gross receipts of a person for any taxable year are to be determined after reduction for returns and allowances made during the taxable year.

[33] For this purpose, a full-time employee is defined as any employee of the taxpayer who is employed at least 30 hours per week for 20 or more calendar weeks during the taxable year.

Definition of eligible public accommodations access expenditures

Eligible public accommodations access expenditures are defined as amounts paid or incurred by a taxpayer either (1) for the purpose of removing architectural, communication, or transportation barriers which prevent a public accommodation operated by the taxpayer from being accessible to, or usable by, an individual with a disability, or (2) for providing auxiliary aids or services to an individual with a disability who is an employee of, or using, a public accommodation operated by the taxpayer.

The amount of an expenditure is not to be considered an eligible public accommodations access expenditure unless the taxpayer establishes to the satisfaction of the Treasury Department that the removal of any barrier or the provision of any auxiliary aid or service to which the expenditure relates satisfies standards set forth in regulations promulgated by the Treasury Department with the concurrence of the Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board. In addition, amounts paid or incurred by a taxpayer for the purpose of removing architectural, communication, or transportation barriers do not qualify as eligible public accommodations access expenditures if the amounts are paid or incurred in connection with any facility that is first placed in service (i.e., the first occupancy of which occurs) after December 31, 1990.

Other definitions and special rules

For purposes of this provision, the terms "disability," "public accommodation," and "auxiliary aids and services" have the same respective meanings given such terms by the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990, as in effect on the date of enactment of this provision.

For purposes of determining the amount of the credit and in determining whether the $4 million gross receipts limitation and the 30 full-time employee limitation are satisfied, all members of the same controlled group of corporations (as defined in section 52(a)) and all persons under common control (as defined in section 52(b)) are treated as one person. Thus, for example, two or more corporations that are members of the same controlled group of corporations would be allowed a credit that is not to exceed $5,000 if, treating all such corporations as a single person, the $4 million gross receipts limitation or the 30 full-time employee limitation is satisfied.

In the case of a partnership, the $10,250 annual limitation on the amount of expenditures that are taken into account in determining the amount of the credit is to apply at both the partnership level and the partner level. Similarly, in the case of an S corporation, the $10,250 annual limitation on the amount of the expenditures that are taken into account in determining the amount of the credit is to apply at both the S corporation level and the shareholder level.

The bill also provides that no deduction or credit is to be allowed under any other provision of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code for any amount for which a credit is allowed and the adjusted basis of any property with respect to which a credit is determined is not to include the amount of the credit.

Finally, the bill requires the Treasury Department to prescribe such regulations as are necessary to carry out the purposes of the provision, including regulations that (1) adjust the $4 million gross receipts limitation and the 30 full-time employee limitation in the case of taxable years that are less than 12 months and (2) apportion the $10,250 annual limitation among two or more persons that are treated as a single person under the related-person rules described above.

Reduction of amount deductible as architectural and transportation barrier removal expenses

The bill also reduces the amount of architectural and transportation barrier removal expenses that may be deducted for any taxable year to $15,000.

Effective Date

The small business public accommodations access credit applies to eligible expenditures paid or incurred after the date of enactment.

The reduction in the amount of deductible architectural and transportation barrier removal expenses applies to taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Subtitle C. Modifications of Earned Income Tax Credit; Dependent Care Credit (secs. 7301-7303 of the bill and secs. 21, 32, and 3507 of the Code).

Present Law

Earned Income Tax Credit

An individual who maintains a home for one or more children is allowed an advance refundable tax credit based on the taxpayer's earned income (sec. 32 of the Internal Revenue Code). In 1990, the earned income tax credit (EITC) is equal to 14 percent of the first $6,810 of earned income.

The credit is phased out at a rate of 10 percent of the amount of adjusted gross income (or, if greater, earned income) that, in 1990, exceeds $10,730. The $6,810 and $10,730 amounts are adjusted annually for inflation, so that the maximum amount of credit and the maximum amount of income eligible for the credit increase with inflation.

The projected maximum amount of the credit in 1991 is $994. The actual maximum will depend on future inflation.

The earned income credit is available to: (1) married individuals filing a joint return who are entitled to a dependency exemption for a child, (2) a head of household, or (3) a surviving spouse. In order to qualify to file as a head of household or surviving spouse, a taxpayer must establish that he or she has provided over half of the cost of maintaining the household for the year. In order to be eligible to claim a dependency exemption, the taxpayer, in general, must provide over half of the support for the child, and the child must have the same principal place of abode as the taxpayer for at least half the year. Benefits under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program and other public assistance programs are not considered support provided by the taxpayer. Thus, if more than half of the taxpayer's income is from AFDC or sources other than the taxpayer's own income, the earned income tax credit generally is not available.

Tax provisions relating to individual health insurance

Expenses for medical care, including health insurance premiums, are deductible to taxpayers who itemize deductions to the extent the expenses exceed 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income (AGI).

Health insurance provided by an employer is excludable from gross income. Self-employed individuals are entitled to deduct 25 percent of the amount of health insurance expenditures; in general, the provision for self-employed individuals expires with respect to expenses for health insurance coverage for periods after September 30, 1990.[34]

There is no provision that provides a credit for health insurance.

Treatment of EITC for means-tested programs

The AFDC statute provides for the disregard of the EITC from income in determining eligibility and benefits for AFDC recipients. The food stamp statute provides for disregarding the EITC for purposes of determining eligibility and benefits if it is paid as an advance payment. EITC payments received as a lump sum are counted as assets. Some means-tested programs, including housing assistance programs, treat the EITC as income for determining eligibility and benefits.

Dependent care credit

A credit equal to 30 percent of employment-related dependent care expenses is provided to taxpayers who maintain a household for a qualified individual. The 30-percent rate is reduced for taxpayers with AGI greater than $10,000 so that the credit percentage is 20 percent for taxpayers with AGI greater than $28,000.

The maximum amount of expenses eligible for the credit is $2,400 for one qualifying individual, and $4,800 for two or more individuals. In addition, the amount of eligible expenses cannot exceed the lesser of the taxpayer's earned income or that of the spouse, if married.

A qualifying individual is one for whom the taxpayer is entitled to claim a dependency or spousal exemption and is (1) under the age of 13 or (2) mentally or physically incapable of caring for himself or herself.

The credit is nonrefundable.

Reasons for Change

The committee intends to address two important needs of low-income working families: child care and health insurance. The committee recognizes the financial strain that the costs of these items place on low-income families and is concerned that these families obtain financial assistance in obtaining child care and health insurance.

The committee modifies the present-law earned income tax credit (EITC) to accomplish its goals in this regard by adjusting the credit by family size and by providing a supplemental credit for health insurance coverage that includes coverage for the taxpayer's children. The EITC has been modified because the credit is intended to provide tax relief to low-income working families and to improve incentives to work. In addition, the EITC provides an important means by which overall progressivity under the tax system may be achieved.

Concerns have been expressed about the complexity of the EITC and potential taxpayer compliance problems. Accordingly, the committee has adopted modifications intended to both simplify and enhance compliance with the credit.

The bill also makes the existing dependent care credit 90-percent refundable. The committee believes that the credit should be refundable so that low-income families with children obtain financial assistance for necessary child care so the parents may be gainfully employed. The committee believes that refundability of the credit will remove an important barrier to the economic advancement of low-income families in that adequate child care for working parents will now be more affordable.

Explanation of Provision

The bill modifies the earned income tax credit (EITC) by providing an adjustment for family size and a supplemental health insurance credit. In addition, the treatment of the EITC is modified for purposes of certain means-tested programs. The bill makes the dependent care credit refundable. Finally, provision is made for a study of the advance payment system and a public awareness program.

Earned income tax credit

Family size adjustment: The bill increases the amount of the earned income tax credit, modifies the present-law phase-out percentage, and adjusts the credit for family size as follows:

	Credit percentage	Phase-out percentage
For 1991:
1 qualifying child	15.3	10.9
2 or more qualifying children	15.7	11.2
For 1992:
1 qualifying child	15.95	11.4
2 or more qualifying children	16.55	11.8
For 1993:
1 qualifying child	17.25	12.3
2 or more qualifying children	18.25	13.0
For 1994 and thereafter:
1 qualifying child	20.5	14.6
2 or more qualifying children	22.5	16.1

As under present law, a taxpayer may receive the EITC on an advanced basis. However, the amount of the credit that may be received on this basis is limited to the credit that the taxpayer could receive if the taxpayer had only one qualifying child. Of course, if the taxpayer is entitled to receive a larger credit under the bill (e.g., by reason of family size), the balance of the credit may be refunded after the taxpayer's income tax return has been filed.

Modification of rules relating to eligibility for EITC: In order to qualify for the EITC, the taxpayer must meet the present-law earned income and adjusted gross income thresholds (as modified by the bill). In addition, the taxpayer must have a "qualifying child."

In order to be a qualifying child, an individual must satisfy a relationship test, a residency test, and an age test. The individual satisfies the relationship test if the individual is a son, stepson, daughter or stepdaughter of the taxpayer, a descendent of a son or daughter of the taxpayer, or a foster or adopted child of the taxpayer. A foster child is defined as an individual whom the taxpayer cares for as the taxpayer's own child. An adopted child includes a child who is legally adopted, or who is placed with the taxpayer by an authorized placement agency for adoption by the taxpayer.

As under present law, if the individual is married at the close of the taxpayer's year, the taxpayer generally must be entitled to a dependency deduction for the taxable year with respect to such individual.

An individual satisfies the residency test if the individual has the same principal place of abode as the taxpayer for more than half the taxable year (the entire year for foster children). It is intended that the determination of whether the residency requirement is met is made under rules similar to those applicable with respect to whether an individual meets the requirements for head-of-household filing status. Thus, for example, certain temporary absences due to education or illness would be disregarded for purposes of determining whether the child had the same principal place of abode as the taxpayer for over half the year. As under present law, the residence must be in the United States.

An individual satisfies the age test if the individual (1) has not attained the age of 19 at the close of the taxable year; (2) is a full-time student who has not attained the age of 24 at the close of the taxable year; or (3) is permanently and totally disabled. Whether a child is a full-time student is determined under the rules relating to dependency exemption (sec. 151(c)(4)). An individual is permanently and totally disabled if such individual meets the requirements relating to the credit for the disabled (sec. 22(e)(3)).

If, with respect to a taxable year, an individual is a qualifying child with respect to more than one taxpayer, then only the taxpayer with the highest adjusted gross income may claim the EITC with respect to that child. In addition, a taxpayer may not claim the EITC if the taxpayer is a qualifying child.

As under present law, married taxpayers may only claim the EITC if they file a joint return.

Solely for purposes of the EITC, taxpayers are required to obtain and supply a taxpayer identification number (TIN) for each qualifying child who has attained the age of 1 as of the close of the taxable year of the taxpayer.

In order to claim the EITC, the taxpayer must complete and attach a separate schedule to his or her income tax return. In addition to the TIN requirement discussed above, this schedule will include the name and age of any qualifying children. The Secretary may also require adequate proof of the existence of health insurance where the taxpayer has claimed the supplemental EITC for health insurance (e.g., the policy number of the insurance or the employer identification number of the insurance company).

The Internal Revenue Service is to develop special procedures to notify taxpayers who have not claimed the EITC of their potential eligibility for the credit.

Credit for health insurance premiums: A credit is available to taxpayers for qualified health insurance expenses that includes coverage for a qualifying child. The taxpayer may elect not to receive the health credit. In addition, the health credit is refundable, but not on an advance basis.

Qualified health insurance expenses for which the credit is available are amounts paid during the taxable year for health insurance that includes coverage for one or more qualifying children (as defined for purposes of the EITC). These expenses include those relating to the cost of coverage (i.e., premium cost) only. Thus, expenses such as co-payments or deductibles under the insurance coverage, as well as other out-of-pocket medical expenses, are not eligible for the credit as qualified health insurance expenses. In addition, qualified health insurance expenses do not include amounts paid by an employee who contributes to his or her employer-sponsored health plan on a pre-tax basis (i.e., through a plan described in sec. 125). Qualified health expenses do include such employee contributions if made on an after-tax basis.

The calculation of the child health credit is generally the same as the calculation of the EITC. Thus, the same eligibility criteria and income phase-in and phase-out requirements apply. However, there is no family size adjustment with respect to the health credit.

The maximum amount of the credit is calculated based on a percentage of earned income. When fully phased in, the credit percentage of the credit is 5.5 percent of earned income (up to the maximum amount of creditable earned income in effect for the EITC) and the phaseout rate is 3.9 percent. The credit is phased in so that the credit percentage is 1.1 percent for 1991, 2.475 percent for 1992, 2.5 percent for 1993, and 5.5 percent for 1994 and thereafter. The phase-out percentage is 0.8 percent in 1991, 1.8 percent in 1992 and 1993, and 3.9 percent in 1994 and thereafter.

The maximum credit after application of the phase-out requirement is limited to no more than the actual cost of coverage to the taxpayer for family coverage. Thus, the credit is limited to the lesser of the maximum amount of the credit as phased out with respect to the taxpayer and the actual qualified health insurance expenses.

The amount of expenses against which the credit is allowed reduces the amount of expenses for which the medical expense deduction may be allowed (sec. 213). A similar rule applies with respect to the amount of health insurance expenses upon which the deduction for health insurance costs for self-employed individuals (sec. 162(l)) may be based.

Treatment of credit for means-tested programs: The EITC (including the child health insurance portion) shall not be taken into account as income (for the month in which such refund or payment is made or any month thereafter) or as a resource (for the month in which such refund or payment is made or the following month) for the purpose of determining the eligibility or amount of benefit of such individual for AFDC, Medicaid, SSI, and for low-income housing programs. In addition, effective January 1, 1991, the EITC may not be counted as income for purposes of applying the AFDC gross income limit for applicants and recipients of AFDC. A State may waive any AFDC overpayment based on the failure to count the EITC toward the gross income limit between October 1, 1989, and December 31, 1990.

The dependent care credit is made refundable, except that taxpayers with AGI in excess of $28,000 are not entitled to any refundable portion of the credit. As under present law, the full amount of credit is available to offset tax liability. Ninety percent of the remaining credit amount may then be received as a refund. Dependent care expenses paid, reimbursed, or subsidized by the Federal or a State and local government are generally not eligible for the credit.

For purposes of determining the amounts of credit that are refundable and nonrefundable, other credits and deductions are applied before the dependent care credit, except for the EITC which is applied after the dependent care credit.

For example, assume a taxpayer has tax liability of $70 after the application of all credits and deductions except the dependent care credit and the EITC. The taxpayer has $100 of dependent care credit (prior to application of the limit on refundability), and $150 of earned income tax credit. The taxpayer offsets $70 of tax liability with the dependent care credit. Of the remaining $30 of dependent care credit, $27 (90 percent of $30) may be obtained as a refund while all of the $150 of the EITC is refundable.

Public Awareness Program

The Secretary of the Treasury is to establish a taxpayer awareness program to inform the taxpaying public of the availability of the earned income, dependent care, and health insurance credit.

Study of Advance Payments

Require the Comptroller General of the United States, in conjunction with the Secretary of the Treasury, to conduct a study of an advance payment system for earned income, dependent care and health insurance premium credits to determine (1) the effectiveness; (2) the manner in which to alleviate complexity, if any, for small business; and (3) any other problems in administration. The study shall include an analysis of why there is a low rate of participation in the advance payment program.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

The public awareness program provision is effective for the first day of the first calendar year following date of enactment.

The study of the advance payment system is due to the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committee on Ways and Means no later than one year after enactment.

SUBTITLE D. REVENUE-RAISING PROVISIONS

Excise Taxes

1. Increase Excise Taxes on Distilled Spirits, Beer, and Wine (secs. 7401 and 7408 of the bill and secs. 5001, 5041, and 5051 of the Code).

Present Law

Under present law, the following alcoholic beverages are subject to excise taxes at the rates indicated:

Beverage	Tax imposed
Distilled spirits	$12.50 per proof gallon.
Beer	$9.00 per barrel generally[35]
Still wines:
Up to 14 percent alcohol	$0.17 per wine gallon.
14 to 21 percent alcohol	$0.67 per wine gallon.
21 to 24 percent alcohol[36]	$2.25 per wine gallon.
Artificially carbonated wines	$2.40 per wine gallon.

[36] Wines containing more than 24 percent alcohol are taxed as distilled spirits.

Reasons for Change

The committee determined that it is appropriate to increase excise taxes on distilled spirits, beer, and wine. The excise tax on distilled spirits was increased by $2.00 per proof gallon in 1985 (the only increase since 1951), and the excise taxes on beer and wine were last increased in 1955. Despite the 1985 increase in the distilled spirits rate, the effective rate of all of the alcoholic beverage excise taxes is significantly lower than it was in 1951 (distilled spirits) or in 1955 (beer and wine). Therefore, increases in these taxes are appropriate to restore the Federal excise tax base for alcoholic beverages. The committee also was aware of substantial differences among the different alcoholic beverages in the present-law effective tax rates on alcohol content. The increased rates are designed to ameliorate these differences in part.

In deciding to increase alcoholic beverage excise taxes, the committee took note of numerous studies demonstrating that the direct and indirect social costs from alcohol consumption are far greater than the revenues currently generated from alcoholic beverage excise taxes. Government spending for highway safety, public health, and welfare are all increased by alcohol consumption. Moreover, alcohol consumption imposes substantial costs on society from accidents, disease, and reduced worker performance. Thus, increasing the alcoholic beverage excise taxes could help to place some of the costs of alcohol consumption on alcohol users and could reduce consumption among teenagers.

Explanation of Provisions

Increase in tax rates

The bill provides for the following excise tax rate changes:

(1) Increase the distilled spirits tax rate by $1.20 per proof gallon, from $12.50 per proof gallon to $13.70 per proof gallon.[37]

(2) Double the tax rate on beer from $9.00 per barrel (16 cents per six pack) to $18.00 per barrel (32 cents per six pack).

(3) Increase the tax rate on wine with up to 14 percent alcohol content (commonly referred to as table wine) from $0.17 per wine gallon (3 cents on a 750-milliliter bottle) to $1.07 per wine gallon (21 cents on a 750-milliliter bottle).

(4) Increase the tax rate on wine with 14 to 21 percent alcohol content (commonly referred to as fortified wine) from $0.67 per wine gallon (13 cents on a 750-milliliter bottle) to $1.57 per wine gallon (31 cents on a 750-milliliter bottle).

(5) Increase the tax rate on wine with 21 to 24 percent alcohol content from $2.25 per wine gallon (45 cents on a 750-milliliter bottle) to $3.15 per wine gallon (63 cents on a 750-milliliter bottle).

(6) Increase the tax rate on artificially carbonated wine from $2.40 per wine gallon (48 cents on a 750-milliliter bottle) to $3.30 per wine gallon (66 cents on a 750-milliliter bottle).

Small producer exception

The bill provides that small domestic breweries may claim a credit of $11.00 per barrel (i.e., the difference between the $18.00 per barrel rate provided for by the bill and the present-law $7 per barrel rate) on the first 30,000 barrels of beer produced during a calendar year. The credit is phased out for breweries with total production during the calendar year between 45,000 and 75,000 barrels. Similarly, small domestic wineries are entitled to a credit of 90 cents per wine gallon (the difference between the increased tax rates on wines provided for by the bill and the present-law rates) on the first 100,000 gallons of wine produced during a calendar year. The credit is phased out for wineries with total production during the calendar year between 150,000 and 250,000 gallons.[38]

Effective Date

The rate increases are effective on January 1, 1991, with floor stocks taxes being imposed on that date (including articles in foreign trade zones).

2. Increase Tobacco Excise Taxes (secs. 7402 and 7408 of the bill and sec. 5701 of the Code).

Present Law

The following is a listing of the Federal excise taxes imposed on tobacco products under present law:

Article	Tax imposed
Cigars:
Small cigars	$0.75 per thousand.
Large cigars	8.5% of suggested wholesale price, up to $20 per thousand.
Cigarettes:
Small cigarettes	$8.00 per thousand (16 cents per pack of 20 cigarettes).
Large cigarettes	$16.80 per thousand.
Cigarette papers	$0.005 per 50 papers.
Cigarette tubes	$0.01 per 50 tubes.
Chewing tobacco	$0.08 per pound.
Snuff	$0.24 per pound.
Pipe tobacco	$0.45 per pound.

Reasons for Change

The committee determined that it is appropriate to increase excise taxes on tobacco products. The present tobacco excise taxes generally are imposed at flat rates rather than being adjusted to reflect inflation. Despite an increase in 1982 in cigarette excise tax rates (the only such increase since 1951), the effective rate of tobacco excise taxes is lower today than it was in 1951. Therefore, increases in these taxes are appropriate to restore the Federal excise tax base for tobacco products.

In deciding to increase tobacco excise taxes, the committee took note of the fact that the U.S. Surgeon General and the Department of Health and Human Services have identified cigarette smoking as the single most significant source of premature death in the United States.[39] In addition, studies have indicated that billions of dollars of additional health costs and lost income are smoking related. Thus, increasing the tobacco excise taxes could help to place some of the costs of tobacco consumption on tobacco users, is consistent with other Federal Government policies to discourage smoking because of the associated health hazards, and could reduce smoking by the young.

In general

The bill increases by 25 percent the current excise taxes on all tobacco products, including cigarettes, cigars, chewing tobacco, snuff, and pipe tobacco (e.g., increase the tax on a pack of 20 small cigarettes from 16 cents to 20 cents per pack), effective January 1, 1991. Further, the bill increases by the same dollar amount as the previous 25-percent increase the excise taxes on all tobacco products (e.g., increase the tax on a pack of 20 small cigarettes from 20 cents to 24 cents per pack), effective January 1, 1993. Floor stocks taxes are imposed at the time of each rate increase (including articles in foreign trade zones).

Specific tax rate increases

The following table shows the specific tobacco excise tax rates under the bill as of January 1, 1991:

Article	Tax rate (January 1, 1991)
Cigars:
Small cigars	$0.9375 per thousand.
Large cigars	10.625% of suggested wholesale price, up to $25 per thousand.
Cigarettes:
Small cigarettes	$10.00 per thousand (20 cents per pack of 20 cigarettes).
Large cigarettes	$21.00 per thousand.
Cigarette papers	$0.00625 per 50 papers.
Cigarette tubes	$0.0125 per 50 tubes.
Chewing tobacco	$0.10 per pound.
Snuff	$0.30 per pound.
Pipe tobacco	$0.5625 per pound.

[37] Conforming amendments are made to the tax as currently applied to certain other products (e.g., alcohol in imported perfumes).

[38] The Treasury Department is granted authority to prescribe regulations to prevent the small brewery and winery credits from benefiting any person who produces more than 75,000 barrels of beer or 250,000 gallons of wine.

Effective Date

The first rate increase described above is effective on January 1, 1991. The second rate increase described above is effective on January 1, 1993.

3. Expand ozone-depleting chemicals excise tax (sec. 7403 of the bill and sec. 4682 of the Code)

Present Law

In general

An excise tax is imposed on certain ozone-depleting chemicals sold or used by the manufacturer, producer, or importer. Imported products also are subject to tax if any ozone-depleting chemical was used as an input in the manufacture or production of such product. The amount of tax is determined by multiplying a base tax amount by an "ozone-depleting factor."

A reduced rate of tax is provided for chemicals used in rigid foam insulation, and for Halon-1211, Halon-1301, and Halon-2402, for calendar years 1990-1993. The tax does not apply to feedstock chemicals used in the production or manufacture of other ozone-depleting or non-ozone-depleting chemicals. The tax also does not apply to any ozone-depleting chemical which is diverted or recovered in the United States as part of a recycling process. Certain exports of ozone-depleting chemicals are exempt from tax.

Ozone-depleting chemicals

Ozone-depleting chemicals which are subject to tax are: CFC-11; CFC-12; CFC-113; CFC-114; CFC-115; Halon-1211; Halon-1301; and Halon-2402.

The chemicals subject to tax are those identified as ozone-depleting under the Montreal protocol as in effect on September 14, 1989. Subsequent changes to the list of ozone-depleting chemicals under the Montreal protocol will not change the list of chemicals subject to tax without Congressional action.

Base tax amount

For calendar years 1990 and 1991, the base tax amount is $1.37 per pound of ozone-depleting chemical; for 1992, the base tax amount is $1.67 per pound; and for 1993 and 1994, the base tax amount is $2.65 per pound. For calendar years after 1994, the base tax amount is increased by $0.45 per pound per year. A floor stocks tax applies upon each tax increase date occurring before 1995.

Reasons for Change

In June of 1990, the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer was amended to expand the list of controlled chemicals and to make other changes. The list of controlled chemicals was expanded to include carbon tetrachloride, methyl chloroform, CFC-13, CFC-111, CFC-112, CFC-211, CFC-212, CFC-213, CFC-214, CFC-215, CFC-216, and CFC-217. The committee believes it is appropriate to conform the list of taxable chemicals to the list of chemicals controlled under the Montreal protocol, as adjusted and revised.

Explanation of Provision

The bill adds carbon tetrachloride, methyl chloroform, CFC-13, CFC-111, CFC-112, CFC-211, CFC-212, CFC-213, CFC-214, CFC-215, CFC-216, and CFC-217 to the list of chemicals taxed under section 4681 effective January 1, 1991. Consequently, an excise tax is imposed on these chemicals when sold or used by the manufacturer, producer, or importer. The bill also imposes a tax on imported products if any ozone-depleting chemical was used as an input in the manufacture or production of such product. The amount of tax is determined by multiplying the base tax amount applicable to the calendar year by an "ozone-depleting factor."

The base tax rate is phased in for the newly taxed chemicals. For calendar years 1991 and 1992, the base tax rate is $1.37 per pound. For calendar year 1993, the base tax rate is $1.67 per pound. For calendar year 1994, the base tax rate is $3.00 per pound. For calendar year 1995, the base tax rate is $3.10 per pound. For calendar years after 1995, the base tax rate is to increase by $0.45 per pound as under present law.

The ozone-depleting factors of the newly taxed chemicals are:

Chemical	Ozone-depleting factor
carbon tetrachloride	1.1
methyl chloroform	0.1
CFC-13	1.0
CFC-111	1.0
CFC-112	1.0
CFC-211	1.0
CFC-212	1.0
CFC-213	1.0
CFC-214	1.0
CFC-215	1.0
CFC-217	1.0

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to promulgate regulations which provide a limited exception for exports of these newly taxed chemicals. Such exception is to be comparable to the present law export exemption for other taxable chemicals, except that it is to be based on production and consumption data from calendar year 1989 rather than 1986.

In addition, as under current law, newly taxed chemicals held for sale or use (including taxable chemicals in foreign trade zones) will be subject to a floor stocks tax on all tax increase dates prior to January 1, 1995, including January 1, 1991.

Effective Date

These amendments are effective for newly taxable chemicals sold or used on or after January 1, 1991.

4. Increase Highway and Motorboat Fuels Excise Taxes (sec. 7404 of the bill and secs. 4041, 4081, 4091, and 4101 of the Code).

Present Law

Federal excise taxes generally are imposed on gasoline (9 cents per gallon) and special motor fuels (9 cents per gallon) used in highway transportation and motorboats. In addition, a Federal excise tax is imposed on diesel fuel (15 cents per gallon) used in highway transportation. The 9-cents-per-gallon taxes on gasoline and special motor fuels and the 15-cents-per-gallon tax on diesel fuel are scheduled to expire after September 30, 1993.

Exemptions from some or all of these taxes are provided for fuels sold for export, for use in farming, for use by State and local governments, for use by nonprofit educational organizations, for use in off-highway business (e.g., in rail transportation), and for certain other uses.

A 6-cents-per-gallon exemption is provided from these taxes for certain fuels blended with alcohol, e.g., gasohol. The alcohol fuels exemption is scheduled to expire after September 30, 1993.

Amounts equivalent to the revenues from the highway fuels taxes and motorboat fuels taxes are dedicated to the Highway Trust Fund and the Aquatic Resources Trust Fund, respectively. Amounts equal to 1 cent per gallon of the highway motor fuels taxes are set aside for the mass transit account of the Highway Trust Fund.

Persons subject to the gasoline and diesel fuel taxes are required to register with the Secretary of the Treasury before they incur any tax liability (sec. 4101). The Secretary also may require such registrants to post bond.

Reasons for Change

In light of the continuing dependence of the United States on foreign petroleum products, and the volatility of petroleum prices recently, the committee believes domestic consumption of petroleum should be reduced. The committee believes that an increase in motor fuels taxes will reduce domestic consumption, which will both promote greater energy self-sufficiency and reduce atmospheric pollution.

The committee further is concerned about the continued presence of large federal deficits. Increasing these excise taxes has the combined benefit of raising revenue to reduce the deficit while encouraging energy self-sufficiency. In recognition of the country's infrastructure needs and the large budget deficit, the committee believes that the revenues from the increased rates should be divided between the appropriate trust funds and general revenues.

The committee recognizes that increasing the highway taxes will be a greater burden on those States that pay more into the Highway Trust Fund than they receive back in highway program funding. Therefore, the committee has agreed that the highway tax rate increases must be accompanied by an assurance that each State will receive each year highway account apportionments and allocations equal to 95 percent of its contributions to that account attributable to the rate increases.

The committee also believes that it is important to insure parity among fuels used by competing transportation industries. Thus, the committee believes that railroad fuel users should share in the deficit reduction portion of the tax increase.

In addition, the committee believes it is appropriate to use the additional funds dedicated to the Aquatic Resources Trust Fund to fund a Wetlands Restoration Account to be used to preserve, protect, enhance, and restore wetlands.

Finally, the committee believes that additional reporting and registration can improve compliance in gasoline tax collection. The committee is granting the Secretary expanded authority to require such reporting and registration.

Explanation of Provisions

The bill increases the present highway (including gasohol) and motorboat fuels taxes by 4 cents per gallon, effective on December 1, 1990, an additional 5 cents per gallon on July 1, 1991, and an additional 0.5 cents per gallon on January 1, 1992. It also imposes a 2-cents-per-gallon tax on fuels used in rail transportation, effective December 1, 1990, an additional 2.5-cents-per-gallon tax on July 1, 1991, and an additional 0.25 cents-per-gallon tax on January 1, 1992.

Except as indicated above for fuels used in rail transportation, fuels used in off-highway uses, use in farming, by States and local governments, by school buses, and by other persons whose use is fully exempt from the present highway and motorboat fuels taxes are not subject to the increased rates. Certain intercity buses are subject to a maximum fuels tax of 3.1 cents per gallon (including the tax for the Leaking Underground Storage Trust Fund). The excise tax exemption for gasohol made from ethanol and qualified fuel ethanol is reduced to 5.5 cents per gallon (4.0 cents in the case of partially exempt ethanol fuels), as described in part B. 1. b.

All of the revenues from the tax on fuels used in rail transportation and the amounts attributable to the reduction in the excise tax exemption for gasohol made from ethanol are retained in the general fund. The revenues derived each year from one-half of the increases in the highway and motorboat fuel tax rates are dedicated to the Highway Trust Fund and Aquatic Resources Trust Fund, respectively; the revenues derived from the remaining half of the increases in the highway and motorboat fuel rates are retained in the general fund. Twenty percent of the amounts attributable to increased revenues dedicated to the Highway Trust Fund are set aside for the mass transit account of that Trust Fund.

Revenues from the increased rates that are dedicated to the Aquatic Resources Trust Fund are to be deposited in a new Wetlands Restoration Account in the Aquatic Resources Trust Fund, to be expended to carry out the creation, restoration, protection, enhancement, and conservation, of wetlands upon enactment of, and as provided in, qualified authorizing legislation substantially identical to the Coastal Wetlands Planning, Protection and Restoration Act as passed by the Senate on August 2, 1990.

The bill provides that no amounts shall be expended from the Highway Trust Fund for the Federal-aid highway programs with respect to receipts attributable to the rate increases provided in this bill unless each State receives apportionments and allocations for certain Federal-aid highway programs equal to at least 95 percent of the percentage of estimated tax payments attributable to highway users in the State paid into the Highway Trust Fund, other than the Mass Transit Account, as a result of the increased rates.

The present-law motor fuels tax rates and exemptions are extended through September 30, 1995; the increases in the tax rates (both the Trust Fund and deficit reduction portions) also expire after that date. However, the present-law (October 1, 1993) expiration of Highway Trust Fund expenditure authority is retained.

Section 4101 is amended to require registration with the Secretary of such persons as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe. The Secretary is given authority to issue regulations which prescribe the manner, form, terms, and conditions of registration and to specify how the registration may be used. To the extent necessary to permit effective administration, the Secretary is authorized to disclose the name and registration number of each registrant and the address of each terminal owned by each registrant who is subject to tax under subtitle D of the Code.

Pursuant to regulations, the Secretary is authorized to require, as a condition of registration, that registrants post a bond in such sum as the Secretary determines appropriate and agree to the imposition a lien on such property (or rights to property) of such person as the Secretary determines appropriate. The Secretary must release a lien in connection with a transfer of the property if a bond in an appropriate amount is furnished. The Secretary must respond not later than 90 days after the request for release of a lien in connection with the transfer of the property.

Persons registered as terminal operators, and from whose terminal gasoline is removed, are required to make a return, at such time and in such form as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. The report must specify with respect to removals (a) the name, address, and registration number of the owner of the gasoline (or of the owner of record in such cases the Secretary deems appropriate), (b) the amount of gasoline removed, and (c) such other information as the Secretary may require.

Effective Date

The excise tax provisions are effective on December 1, 1990. The compliance provisions are effective on January 1, 1991. Floor stocks taxes are imposed on December 1, 1990, July 1, 1991, and January 1, 1992 on inventories (including inventories in foreign trade zones) held on those dates on which tax at the old rates has been paid or that previously were exempt but which are taxed under the bill, e.g., fuels held for use in rail transportation.

5. Increase Airport and Airway Trust Fund Excise Taxes (sec. 7405 of the bill and secs. 4261, 4271, 4283, 4091, 4041(c), 6427(f), and 9502 of the Code)

Present Law

Tax rates: Excise taxes which are imposed on air transportation for transfer to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund are (1) an 8-percent tax on air passenger transportation, (2) a 5-percent tax on air freight, (3) a $6 per passenger tax on international departures, (4) a tax of 12 cents per gallon on gasoline used in noncommercial aviation, and (5) a tax of 14 cents per gallon on nongasoline (jet) fuels used in noncommercial aviation. These taxes are scheduled to expire after December 31, 1990.

Tax reduction trigger: Under present law, the aviation excise taxes generally will be reduced by 50 percent (except for the departure tax and the gasoline tax)[40] beginning on January 1, 1991, if the appropriations from the Trust Fund for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 for airport improvements, facilities and equipment, and research, engineering, and development were less than 85 percent of the total amounts authorized for these programs. (The amounts actually appropriated for these programs for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 were 80.7 percent of the amounts authorized.) Thus, if the aviation excise taxes are extended, the tax reduction trigger will go into effect on January 1, 1991.

Limit on Trust Fund use for FAA operations and maintenance: Funding for Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) operations and maintenance from the Trust Fund is limited to 50-percent of the total amount appropriated for airport improvements, facilities and equipment, and research, engineering, and development (R&D) for fiscal years 1988-1990. In addition, if the fiscal year appropriated amount is less than the amount authorized for these programs, the amount available from the Trust Fund for operations and maintenance is limited further by 200 percent of the amount of such shortfall. This two-for-one penalty applies through fiscal year 1992. FAA operations and maintenance and other aviation-related expenses not specifically paid from the Trust Fund are financed by general revenues.[41]

Reasons for Change

The committee determined that the aviation excise taxes should be extended beyond 1990, that the aviation tax reduction trigger should be repealed, and that certain of the aviation excise taxes should be increased in order to continue to pay for the necessary Federal airport and airway capacity and safety expenditures.

Explanation of Provisions

Extension of current taxes: The bill extends the current Airport and Airway Trust Fund excise taxes for 5 years (January 1, 1991 through December 31, 1995).

Increase in tax rates: Also for the 5-year period, January 1, 1991-December 31, 1995, the bill increases the taxes on the air passengers and air freight to 10 percent and 6.25 percent, respectively. The taxes on noncommercial aviation fuels are increased to 15 cents per gallon for gasoline and to 17.5 cents per gallon for jet fuel. The international air departure tax, which was increased to $6 on January 1, 1990, remains at $6.

Tax reduction trigger: The aviation tax reduction trigger is repealed.

Use of revenues: Revenues from the current and increased aviation taxes will continue to go into the Airport and Airway Trust Fund through 1995.

Effective Date

The provisions are effective generally on January 1, 1991. For the air passenger and air cargo taxes, the increase in taxes are effective for transportation beginning after December 31, 1990, but only for tickets or fares paid after that date.

6. Increase the Harbor Maintenance Excise Tax (sec. 7406 of the bill and sec. 4461 of the Code).

Present Law

A harbor maintenance tax is imposed on the use of U.S. ports. The tax is 0.04 percent of the value of commercial cargo loaded or unloaded at U.S. ports. The tax generally applies to commercial ship passenger fares, except for certain ferry boats. Revenues from the tax are transferred to the Harbor [40] The tax on noncommercial aviation gasoline would be reduced from 12 cents to the basic Highway Trust Fund tax rate of 9 cents per gallon on gasoline (under sec. 4081).

[41] On October 11, 1990, the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation approved S. 3094 (Airport Capacity Act of 1990). S. 3094 provides increased Trust Fund authorizations for fiscal years 1991 and 1992. It provides no specific percentage limit from the Trust Fund for FAA operations and maintenance expenditures for fiscal years 1991 and 1992, and does not change the present-law two-for-one penalty for FAA operations and maintenance expenditures from the Trust Fund.

Maintenance Trust Fund to help pay for Federal harbor maintenance costs.

The tax does not apply to (1) cargo shipped between a U.S. mainland port and Alaska, Hawaii, or a U.S. possession for ultimate use or consumption therein; (2) cargo shipped between Alaska, Hawaii, or a U.S. possession (or between two possessions) for ultimate use or consumption therein; and (3) cargo loaded and unloaded within Alaska, Hawaii, or a U.S. possession. This exception does not apply to cargo destined for foreign consumption or to crude oil cargo shipped to or from Alaska. The tax also does not apply to cargo donated for foreign use.

The authorizing statute currently permits Trust Fund expenditures of up to 40 percent of eligible harbor maintenance and related costs.

Reasons for Change

The committee concluded that the increased harbor maintenance tax proposed in the President's fiscal 1991 budget should be enacted because revenues from the current 0.04-percent tax do not cover all the Federal expense relating to harbor maintenance and dredging.

Explanation of Provision

The bill increases the harbor maintenance tax to 0.125 percent of the value of commercial cargo or passenger fare. Also, the authorizing statute is modified to permit Trust Fund expenditures of up to 100 percent of eligible harbor maintenance and related costs.

Effective Date

The provision is effective on January 1, 1991.

7. Reimpose the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund Tax (sec. 7407 of the bill and sec. 4081(d)(2) of the Code).

Present Law

Prior to September 1, 1990, a tax of 0.1 cent per gallon was imposed on gasoline, diesel fuel, special motor fuels, aviation fuel, and fuels used on inland waterways. Amounts equivalent to the revenues from this tax were deposited in the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund. The 0.1 cent tax was terminated on August 31, 1990, after the Fund reached a statutory ceiling of $500 million of net revenue. If the ceiling had not been reached, the tax was scheduled to expire after December 31, 1991.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that the clean-up of underground storage tanks remains a high priority and that a 0.1 cent per gallon contribution to the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund continues to be warranted.

Explanation of Provision

The bill reimposes the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund tax, extends the tax through December 31, 1995, and eliminates the Trust Fund revenue ceiling.

Effective Date

The provision is effective on December 1, 1990.

8. Luxury Excise Tax (sec. 7409 of the bill and new secs. 4001-4011 of the Code).

Present Law

No luxury excise taxes are imposed under present law. Although a number of luxury items were subject to various excise taxes in the past, those excise taxes were repealed in the Excise Tax Reduction Act of 1965.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to impose an excise tax on certain luxury goods.

Explanation of Provision

Imposition of tax

The bill imposes a 10-percent excise tax on the portion of the retail price of the following items that exceeds the thresholds specified below:

(1) Automobiles above $30,000: An automobile is any passenger vehicle manufactured primarily for use (as well as sold primarily for use or actually used predominantly) on public streets, roads, and highways that is rated at 6,000 pounds unloaded gross vehicle weight or less. This includes trucks and vans, except that only trucks and vans with a loaded gross vehicle weight of 6,000 pounds or less are subject to this tax. Limousines are subject to this tax regardless of weight. Also, the tax does not apply to the sale or leasing of any passenger vehicle for use by the purchaser or lessee exclusively (other than a de minimis amount) in the active conduct of a trade or business of transporting persons or property for compensation or hire. Thus, for example, the tax will apply to a vehicle purchased by a business and used to transport its employees or officers. The trade or business of transporting persons or property for compensation or hire does not include the leasing or rental of an automobile without a hired driver.

(2) Boats and yachts above $100,000: Boats and yachts that are used exclusively (other than a de minimis amount) in a trade or business (except for entertainment or recreation purposes, including the trade or business of providing entertainment or recreation) are exempt from this tax. In addition, boats and yachts that are used exclusively in the trade or business of commercial fishing or of transporting persons or property for compensation or hire are exempt from this tax. The transporting of persons or property for compensation or hire includes transportation by a cruise ship (regardless of destination) or by a boat chartered with a pilot. These may be exempt from the tax provided that the other conditions for exemption are met.

(3) Aircraft above $250,000: The tax applies to aircraft above $250,000, with exceptions for: aircraft used exclusively (other than a de minimis amount) in the trade or business of transporting persons or property for hire; cropdusters; certain helicopters used exclusively in transporting individuals, equipment, or supplies in the exploration, development or removal of oil, gas, or hard minerals, or in planting or cutting of trees; and aircraft used exclusively for flight training purposes.

A special rule also applies to aircraft at least 80 percent of the use of which is in a trade or business. The tax must be paid upon the purchase of these aircraft; after a period of one full year, the taxpayer who purchased such an aircraft and who can demonstrate that at least 80 percent of the use of the aircraft was in a trade or business during the preceding 12 month period, may claim a refund for the tax that was paid.

(4) Jewelry above $5,000: The tax applies on an item-by-item basis. Custom fabrication of jewelry (from new or used materials) also is subject to this tax. Repairs and slight modifications to jewelry are not subject to this tax. Consequently, adding a clasp to a necklace is not subject to a tax. Watches are included as jewelry.

(5) Furs above $5,000: The tax applies to items made from fur or in which fur is a major component. The tax does not apply to leather or to artificial fur.

Special rules

Tax applicable only to newly manufactured items: This tax applies only to the first retail sale (for a purpose other than resale) after manufacture, production or importation of items subject to the tax. It does not apply to subsequent sales of these items. Thus, for example, if a jeweler sells a new brooch (or a new brooch manufactured from used materials) for $10,000, that item is subject to this tax. If, however, the jeweler sells an antique brooch for $10,000, that item is not subject to this tax.

Collection and deposit of tax: In general, the retailer must collect the tax and remit it to the IRS in accordance with the rules generally applicable to excise taxes.

Anti-abuse rules: An anti-abuse rule prevents businesses from briefly using items subject to this tax in their trade or business and then selling them (or converting them to personal use) a short time thereafter as a way of avoiding this tax. An additional anti-abuse rule prevents the avoidance of the tax on automobiles, boats, yachts and aircraft through separate purchases of major component parts. Thus, for example, if the taxpayer purchases a sailboat from a distant boatyard without an inboard motor or mast, and purchases and has installed locally the inboard motor and mast, those purchases would be aggregated for purposes of this tax. The installer must collect the tax due and remit it to the IRS.

Special rule for leases: A special rule applies to the leasing of boats and aircraft (as well as long-term leases of passenger vehicles) by a person in the trade or business of leasing. These lessors do not pay the tax on their purchase of these items; instead, their leasing of these items is treated as a sale (parallel to present law excise tax rules). Thus, a pro-rata portion of the tax is due on each lease payment, unless the lease payment is being made by a person who would be exempt from the tax (because of the nature of the use of the item) if the person owned the item.

Exemptions: In addition to the other exemptions from this tax, the tax on automobiles, boats, yachts, and aircraft does not apply to the sale of those items to the Federal government or a State or local government for use exclusively in police, firefighting, search and rescue, or other law enforcement or public safety activities or to any person for use exclusively in providing emergency medical services.

Determination of price: The retail sales price is the price paid by the retail customer, including any charge incident to placing the article in condition ready for use (such as preparation charges, dealer add-ons, and delivery charges). Retail sales taxes (if separately stated) are excluded. The retail sales price is determined without subtraction for any trade-in. Thus, the total price paid (whether paid in cash, in a trade-in, or otherwise) is the retail sale price. The manufacturer's suggested retail price (if any) is not the basis on which the price is computed. Significant variation from general retail market prices of comparable items may, however, be considered by IRS to be an indication of an attempt to avoid the tax. Similarly, the IRS may consider published guides to the value of used property (such as automobile "blue books") in considering whether the value of used property exchanged for the new items subject to tax was understated so as to reduce improperly the amount of luxury excise tax paid.

Tax applicable to imports: This tax applies to all items subject to the tax upon their importation into the United States (regardless of whether the item was used outside the United States prior to importation), unless the item is being imported by someone in the trade or business for subsequent retail sale or leasing (in which instance the subsequent retail sale or lease would be subject to tax). Thus, for example, the tax is imposed on the retail value of a passenger vehicle (whether new or used) that an individual imports for personal use.

Tax inapplicable to exports: This tax does not apply to exported items.

Effective Date

This tax applies to retail sales occurring on or after January 1, 1991. In general, the date on which a sale occurs is to be determined in accordance with existing rules for Federal excise taxes on heavy duty trucks. Thus, in general, a sale will be considered to occur upon the passage of title (regardless of when the contract for sale was or is executed or the purchase price was or is paid). The tax expires after December 31, 1999.

9. Extension of the telephone excise tax (sec. 7410 of the bill and sec. 4251 of the Code); Modification of collection period (sec. 7410 of the bill and sec. 6302 of the Code); Exemption Certificates (sec. 7410 of the bill and sec. 4253 of the Code)

Present Law

Imposition of tax

A 3-percent excise tax is imposed on amounts paid for local and toll (long-distance) telephone service and teletypewriter exchange service. The tax is collected by the provider of the service from the consumer (business and personal service). The tax is scheduled to expire after December 31, 1990.

Collection of tax

Under present law, the telephone tax billed to the customer in a semi-monthly period is considered to be collected from the customer during the second following semi-monthly period. Such tax must be deposited in a Federal Reserve Bank or other authorized depository within 3 banking days after the end of the semi-monthly period for which the tax is considered collected. (Rev. Proc. 76-45, 1976-2 C.B. 668).

Telephone tax exemption certificates

Exemptions from the telephone excise tax are provided for international organizations, the American Red Cross, servicemen in combat zones, nonprofit hospitals and educational organizations, State and local governments, and certain communications services furnished to news services for use in collection or dissemination of news services (except local telephone service to news services). Other exemptions include amounts paid for installation charges, certain calls from coin-operated telephones, and private communications systems (e.g., certain dedicated lines leased to a single business user (sec. 4253)).

Under regulations, those claiming exemption are generally required to file annual exemption certificates (Treas. Reg. 49.4253-11).

Reasons for Change

The committee believes it is inappropriate to permit an existing revenue source to expire when the Federal government's financing needs are great. In addition, the committee believes it is important to have timely deposit of tax receipts and that accelerating collection of the telephone excise tax imposes no significant additional cost burden on the service providers charged with collecting the tax.

Elimination of the requirement for certain exempt organizations to file annual exemption certificates will reduce the administrative burden of filing the exemption certificates.

Explanation of Provisions

Extension of tax

The 3-percent telephone excise tax is permanently extended.

Collection of tax

Under the bill, the tax for a semi-monthly period is considered collected during the first week of the second following semi-monthly period. The tax is required to be deposited within 3 banking days after the end of the week for which such tax is considered to be collected.

Telephone tax exemption certificates

Under the provision, those communications service recipients exempt from the tax on communications (telephone) services by reason of being a qualified international organization, the American National Red Cross, nonprofit hospital, nonprofit educational organization, or a State or local government are relieved of having to file a certificate of exemption annually. Instead, such communications service recipients are granted a continuing exemption, after providing to the service provider a new, one-time statement (in a manner provided by the Secretary) certifying that the service recipient is entitled to such exemption. Should the service recipient no longer qualify for exemption or should the information on which the original exemption was based change, the service recipient must inform the service provider (who would collect the tax) within 30 days of such change in circumstances.

Effective Dates

The extension of the tax is effective on January 1, 1991. The change in the collection of the tax is effective with respect to taxes considered collected for semi-monthly periods beginning after December 31, 1990. The change in filing of exemption certificates is effective for any claim for exemption made after the date of enactment. (Any annual exemption certificate effective on the date of enactment remains effective until the end of its annual period.)

Other Revenue-Increase Provisions

1. Amortization of Policy Acquisition Expenses of Insurance Companies (secs. 7411-7413 and 7415 of the bill and secs. 848, 56(g)(4)(F), 807(e), 832(b)(4) and 6655 of the Code).

Present Law

Treatment of life insurance companies

In general

A life insurance company is taxed at corporate rates on its life insurance company taxable income. Life insurance company taxable income is life insurance gross income reduced by life insurance deductions. A stock life insurance company is also taxed, at corporate rates, on any distributions from a pre-1984 policyholders' surplus account.

Life insurance gross income is the sum of (1) premiums, (2) decreases in certain reserves, and (3) other amounts generally includible by a taxpayer in gross income. For this purpose, premiums consist of the gross amount of premiums and other consideration received on insurance and annuity contracts reduced by return premiums paid to policyholders, such as on the cancellation of a policy, and premiums and other consideration paid to another insurer on indemnity reinsurance.

Life insurance companies are allowed deductions for (1) claims and benefits accrued and losses incurred (whether or not ascertained) during the taxable year on insurance and annuity contracts, (2) net increases in reserves, (3) policyholder dividends, (4) dividends received by the company (limited to the company's share), (5) operation losses, (6) consideration paid for assumption reinsurance, and (7) policyholder dividend reimbursements paid to another insurance company under a reinsurance agreement. In addition, life insurance companies are allowed other deductions generally allowable to corporate taxpayers in computing taxable income, subject to certain modifications.

Treatment of policy acquisition expenses

A life insurance company generally is required to compute its taxable income using an accrual method of accounting, or (to the extent permitted in Treasury regulations), using a combination of an accrual method of accounting with another permissible method (but not the cash method). To the extent not inconsistent with Federal income tax accounting rules and other Federal tax rules applicable to life insurance companies, all computations, however, are to be made in a manner consistent with the manner required for purposes of the annual statement approved by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

In determining net income from operations for purposes of the annual statement, in general, life insurance companies may deduct commissions and other selling expenses for the year in which incurred. Thus, for purposes of determining life insurance company taxable income under the regular tax, policy acquisition expenses generally are not subject to an amortization requirement.

In the case of certain reinsurance transactions, however, present law requires the reinsuring company to capitalize ceding commissions and amortize them over the useful life of the asset rather than permitting a current deduction for ceding commissions.[42]

Corporate alternative minimum tax treatment

Under the adjusted current earnings provision of the corporate alternative minimum tax, in the case of a life insurance company, acquisition expenses are capitalized and amortized generally in accordance with the treatment generally required under generally accepted accounting principles. In general, acquisition expenses that both vary with, and are primarily related to, the production of new business must be amortized under current generally accepted accounting principles (unlike under annual statement accounting rules).

Treatment of property and casualty insurance companies

In general

A property and casualty company (i.e., an insurance company other than a life insurance company) is subject to tax at corporate rates on its taxable income. A property and casualty insurance company calculates its taxable income by reducing gross income by allowable deductions. In general, allowable deductions include ordinary and necessary business expenses, interest, taxes, and certain other specified items.

In determining its gross income, in general, the company includes (1) investment income and underwriting income, (2) gains from the sale or disposition of property, and (3) all other items constituting gross income under rules of inclusion generally applicable to all taxpayers, with special rules for certain mutual fire or flood insurance companies.

Underwriting income of a property and casualty insurance company for Federal income tax purposes means the premiums earned on insurance contracts during the taxable year less losses incurred and expenses incurred.

Losses incurred generally include losses paid during the taxable year plus the increase in discounted unpaid losses for the year. The deduction for losses incurred is reduced by 15 percent of the company's tax-exempt interest and of the deductible portion of dividends received (with special rules for dividends from affiliates).

Expenses incurred means all expenses shown on the company's annual statement, and generally is calculated as the sum of expenses paid during the taxable year, plus the increase in unpaid expenses during the year.

Premiums earned generally means gross premiums written on insurance contracts during the taxable year (less return premiums and premiums paid for reinsurance), minus a portion of the increase in unearned premiums during the taxable year.

Reduction in unearned premium reserve

In determining premiums earned, the company's deduction for the increase in unearned premiums is reduced by 20 percent.[43] This amount is intended to represent the allocable portion of expenses incurred in generating the unearned premiums.

Life insurance reserves of property and casualty insurance companies that are included in unearned premium reserves are not subject to the 20 percent reduction rule. Such life insurance reserves include reserves for noncancellable or guaranteed renewable accident and health insurance contracts.

Treatment of policy acquisition expenses

Although property and casualty insurance companies are required to reduce the amount of the unearned premium reserve by a fraction intended to represent the allocable portion of expenses incurred in generating the unearned premiums, such companies are not subject to an amortization requirement (either for regular tax or for corporate alternative minimum tax purposes) with respect to policy acquisition expenses.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that the present-law treatment of expenses incurred in connection with the acquisition of insurance contracts causes mismeasurement of the income of insurance companies. Policy acquisition expenses arise in connection with acquiring a stream of premium and investment income that is earned over a period well beyond the year the expenses are incurred. It is a well-established principle of the tax law that costs of acquiring an asset with a useful life beyond the taxable year are amortized over the life of the asset.

One method of addressing this mismeasurement of income is to require insurance companies to (1) identify specifically each item of expense that relates to the acquisition or renewal of insurance contracts, (2) allocate each item of expense to particular contracts (or blocks of contracts), and (3) recover the expenses so allocated over the estimated life of the contracts in proportion to the total premium and investment income that is estimated to be realized under the contracts. This amortization method is used in determining income under generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP).

GAAP does not provide a specific period or method for amortizing identified expenses with respect to particular types of insurance contracts, but rather permits some flexibility (for example, GAAP does not require taking into account investment income under the insurance contract in all cases in determining the appropriate amortization schedule). This treatment leaves considerable flexibility to the taxpayer as to the proper GAAP treatment of particular items of expense and as to the proper amortization period and method.

The committee carefully considered such an amortization method but rejected it for several reasons. The committee determined that it would be extremely difficult to provide well-defined rules that would provide certainty and uniform treatment of similarly situated taxpayers. The committee was also concerned that such an amortization method would be inordinately complex. In addition, it would impose costly recordkeeping burdens on many insurance companies and would cause difficult administrative and enforcement problems.

The committee believes that substantial improvement in the accurate measurement of income of insurance companies could be accomplished while at the same time maintaining a simple system for determining amortizable policy acquisition expenses. Accordingly, the committee believes that policy acquisition expenses should be determined as a percentage of total premiums (net of reinsurance premiums) designed to approximate the expenses for each year that are attributable to new and renewed insurance contracts in each of several broad categories of business.

The committee recognizes that this approach to the amortization of policy acquisition expenses does not measure actual policy acquisition expenses. However, the committee believes that the advantage of retaining a theoretically correct approach is outweighed by the administrative simplicity of this proxy approach. Further, the committee believes that the levels of amortizable amounts obtained under this proxy approach should, in most cases, understate actual acquisition expenses and, therefore, taxpayers should not suffer an undue detriment through the use of a proxy approach such as that adopted in the bill.

The committee considered various alternative methods of determining the amount of acquisition expenses to be amortized by the parties to a reinsurance contract under a simplified amortization system that is based on total premiums. One alternative is to require only the ceding company in a reinsurance transaction to amortize acquisition expenses with respect to the reinsured contract (i.e., the amount of amortizable acquisition expenses would be determined as a percentage of gross premiums). This alternative may be criticized on the grounds that in certain reinsurance transactions the ceding company has transferred an income-producing asset to the reinsurer, and, consequently, acquisition expenses should not continue to be amortized by the ceding company. This criticism would apply to most assumption reinsurance transactions.

A second alternative is to reduce the amount of acquisition expenses to be amortized by the ceding company based on the amount of the reinsurance premium and to require the reinsurer to amortize acquisition expenses based on the amount of such reinsurance premium. (The reinsurance premium under this alternative could be determined net of policyholder dividends and return premiums receivable by the ceding company under the reinsurance contract or net of all payments receivable by the ceding company under the reinsurance contract (including ceding commissions and accrued claims)). This alternative may be criticized for imposing an amortization requirement on the reinsurer in certain reinsurance transactions where the income-producing asset has been retained by the ceding company, and, consequently, acquisition expenses should not be amortized by the reinsurer. This criticism would apply to most yearly renewable term reinsurance transactions.

Under a third alternative, different rules could apply based on the nature of the reinsurance agreement. For example, in the case of assumption reinsurance, the reinsurer could be required to amortize acquisition expenses based on the full amount of the reinsurance premium, while in the case of indemnity reinsurance, only the ceding company could be required to amortize all or a significant portion of acquisition expenses with respect to the reinsured contract. This alternative could be criticized as introducing complexity into an amortization system a principal advantage of which is its simplicity.

At least with respect to reinsurance agreements entered into after the effective date of the amortization provision, it can be argued that the parties to a reinsurance transaction will negotiate a price for the contract that reflects the relative burden of the amortization requirement borne by each party. Thus, in assessing the various alternatives for dealing with reinsurance under a simplified amortization system, consideration must also be given to the treatment of reinsurers that are not subject to the amortization requirement, especially if the amortizable acquisition expenses are transferred to the reinsurer in a reinsurance transaction.

For example, if the amortizable acquisition expenses are transferred to the reinsurer, a foreign reinsurer that is not subject to Federal income tax with respect to the reinsurance premium (or to foreign tax in its country of residence that is substantially similar) may be provided a competitive advantage over a domestic reinsurer that is subject to Federal income tax with respect to such reinsurance premium. This is similar to the competitive advantage enjoyed by a foreign primary insurer which also is not subject to Federal income tax on premiums received because it sells life insurance in the United States through independent agents. Furthermore, under such an alternative, a domestic insurance company may attempt to avoid the amortization requirement through purported reinsurance transactions entered into with foreign reinsurers that are not subject to the amortization requirement.

One method of addressing these potential problems is to adopt a special rule that requires the ceding company to amortize all of the acquisition expenses with respect to a reinsured contract if the reinsurer is not subject to Federal income tax on the premiums payable under the reinsurance contract. By treating reinsurance transactions entered into with domestic reinsurers more favorably than reinsurance transactions entered into with foreign companies that are not subject to Federal income tax, however, this approach may potentially be inconsistent with U.S. income tax treaties, in which case it must be determined whether the treaty or this provision is to control.

An alternative approach that may also address the problems raised by foreign reinsurers is to reduce the amount of acquisition expenses to be amortized by the ceding company based on the amount of reinsurance premiums payable net of all payments receivable by the ceding company under the reinsurance contract (including ceding commissions and accrued claims). Under such an approach, the reinsurer would be required to amortize acquisition expenses based on the amount of reinsurance premiums receivable net of all amounts payable by the reinsurer under the reinsurance contract (including ceding commissions and accrued claims). This approach may limit the competitive advantage afforded foreign reinsurers by reducing the amount of acquisition expenses that are transferred by the ceding company to the foreign reinsurer.

As an alternative, consideration could be given to increasing the one-percent excise tax on certain premiums paid to foreign reinsurers, insofar as that tax applies to the reinsurance of life, sickness, or accident insurance, or annuity contracts (sec. 4371(3)).[44] By not applying such an increase to treaty country residents, however, competitive disadvantages for domestic insurance companies would continue to inhere in a provision treating reinsurance premiums alike whether or not paid to companies subject to U.S. tax.

Assuming that any increase in the excise tax rate is not applied to treaty country residents, and in view of the absence of anti-conduit protection in the U.K. treaty, consideration could be given to the adoption of an anti-conduit rule by internal U.S. law. Absent such a rule, and given the absence of an excise tax on premiums paid to U.K. reinsurers, a significant amount of insurance placed with U.K. companies could effectively be reinsured with tax haven residents subject to significantly less tax than any U.S. company or any treaty country resident.[45] Therefore, consideration could be given to an anti-conduit rule under which the excise tax would be collected on premiums paid to residents of certain countries with a treaty waiver of the excise tax; the benefit of the treaty waiver would be obtained through a refund mechanism. Under this mechanism, the IRS could offset against the refund U.S. excise taxes owed on premiums paid by the treaty country resident to companies not resident in a treaty waiver jurisdiction. Alternatively, the company resident in the treaty country could obtain the present-law exemption (without the necessity of going through a refund procedure) if the company agreed to collect applicable U.S. excise taxes on premiums it pays to any resident of a country with no treaty waiver.

The committee believes that it is not appropriate to apply the amortization requirement to pension plan contracts, because such contracts are widely sold by companies other than those subject to the amortization provision. The committee determined that it would be unfair in this instance to treat sellers of the same products differently, especially if the result would be to give non-insurance company financial intermediaries a tax-created competitive advantage in what is considered an extremely competitive market.

In determining the treatment of accident and health insurance contracts under the provision, the committee believes that similar types of contracts should be treated similarly, regardless of whether the issuing company is a life insurance company or a property and casualty insurance company. Therefore, the committee bill provides that noncancellable or guaranteed renewable accident and health insurance contracts are subject to the amortization provision without regard to whether they are issued by a life insurance company or by a property and casualty insurance company.

Cancellable accident and health insurance contracts issued by a property and casualty company are subject to a present-law reduction of unearned premium reserves for such contracts by 20 percent, rather than requiring that policy acquisition expenses be amortized. Although the 20-percent reduction approach may be less accurate than amortization of policy acquisition costs over a longer period, the committee nevertheless believes that cancellable accident and health insurance contracts issued by a life insurance company should receive the same tax treatment under the bill as such contracts issued by a property and casualty insurance company already receive under present law.

The committee is concerned that some property and casualty insurance companies may be taking the position that their reserves for noncancellable or guaranteed renewable accident and health insurance contracts are neither calculated in accordance with the rules for calculating life insurance reserves, nor subject to the 20-percent reduction applicable to unearned premium reserves of property and casualty companies. The committee believes that it is appropriate to restate and clarify the rule of present law that such reserves for such accident and health insurance contracts are calculated under the rules for calculating life insurance reserves.

Finally, the committee believes that, in light of the addition of the requirement that policy acquisition expenses be amortized under the regular tax, the provision of present law requiring amortization of acquisition expenses of life insurance companies under the adjusted current earnings provision of the corporate alternative minimum tax creates unneeded complexity. The committee believes that this minimum tax rule should not be needed if the treatment of policy acquisition expenses is made more accurate by the bill's changes to the regular tax calculation of insurance company income with respect to policy acquisition expenses. Therefore, the complexity of retaining a second and different scheme for amortizing acquisition expenses outweighs any marginal additional accuracy of income measurement, and this minimum tax rule is repealed for future taxable years by the bill.

Amortization requirement in general

The bill requires insurance companies to amortize policy acquisition expenses on a straight-line basis over a period of 120 months beginning with the first month in the second half of the taxable year. Policy acquisition expenses are defined for each of several categories of insurance contracts as a percentage of total premiums (net of reinsurance premiums) for that category of contract. The bill provides separate categories for annuity contracts, for group life insurance contracts and noncancellable or guaranteed renewable accident and health insurance contracts, and for all other life insurance contracts. A reinsurance contract is treated in the same manner as the contract reinsured for this purpose. Both life insurance companies and property and casualty insurance companies are subject to the capitalization and amortization requirement with respect to specified insurance contracts.

Policy acquisition expenses

In general

The bill provides that policy acquisition expenses required to be capitalized and amortized are determined, for any taxable year, for each category of specified insurance contracts, as a percentage of the net premiums for the taxable year on specified insurance contracts in that category. The bill provides for three categories of specified insurance contracts: (1) annuity contracts, (2) group life insurance contracts (and noncancellable or guaranteed renewable accident and health insurance contracts), and (3) other specified insurance contracts that are not included in the other categories. The percentages for each of the categories are as follows:

	Percent
Annuities	1.85
Group life and noncancellable or guaranteed renewable accident and health	2.20
Other life	8.30

The bill provides that the amount of amortizable premium acquisition expenses for [44] This tax, as well as the excise tax on other premiums paid to foreign insurers and reinsurers, is waived in present U.S. treaties with the United Kingdom, Cyprus, France, Hungary, Italy, Romania, and the U.S.S.R., and is also waived in treaties expected shortly to enter into force with Finland, Germany, India, and Spain. Generally, these treaty waivers include an anti-conduit rule denying the benefit of the exemption to premiums covering risks that are reinsured with a person not entitled to a similar treaty exemption. Notably, however, the United Kingdom treaty has no anti-conduit rule.

[45] For example, Bermuda, a recognized insurance center, imposes no income tax. It is understood that, outside of underwriters at Lloyd's of London, a major U.K. insurance group, the IRS has not been effective in persuading U.K. insurers to enter into closing agreements under which they would assist the United States in collecting the U.S. excise tax on premiums paid by U.K. insurers to non-exempt reinsurers. In a recent report the Treasury Department stated:

"Although representatives of the U.K. insurance industry have asserted that U.K. companies do not "front" premiums for non-exempt companies in a significant volume, there is no practical way for the IRS to determine the extent of such foreign-to-foreign reinsurance activity or to collect tax in the absence of voluntary payments by U.K. insurers." Department of the Treasury, Report to Congress on the Effect on U.S. Reinsurance Corporations of the Waiver by Treaty of the Excise Tax on Certain Reinsurance Premiums 10 (March 1990).

any taxable year may not exceed the insurance company's general deductions for the year. General deductions are the deductions provided in part VI of subchapter B of the Code (generally, itemized deductions) and in part I of subchapter D of the Code (generally, deductions with respect to pension, profit-sharing or stock bonus plans).

In general: The amounts required to be capitalized and amortized under the provision are expressed as percentages of net premiums. Net premiums are defined under the bill as the excess of (1) the gross amount of premiums and other consideration on specified insurance contracts, over (2) return premiums on such contracts and premiums and other consideration incurred for reinsurance of such contracts.

The rules of section 803(b) apply for purposes of determining net premiums. Thus, the gross amount of premiums and other consideration includes advance premiums, deposits, fees, assessments, consideration in respect of assuming liabilities under contracts not issued by the taxpayer, and the amount of policyholder dividends reimbursable to the taxpayer by a reinsurer in respect of reinsured policies. Return premiums generally do not include policyholder dividends, except in the case of premiums or other consideration returned to another life insurance company in respect of indemnity reinsurance.

In determining net premiums under the proposal, section 808(e) (relating to policyholder dividends that increase cash surrender value or other benefits, or reduce the contract premium) does not apply. Thus, amounts described in section 808(e) that otherwise would be included in net premiums because they are treated as paid to the policyholder and returned by the policyholder to the company as a premium are not included in net premiums under the bill.

The bill also provides that other similar items that are treated as paid by the insurance company and returned by the policyholder as a premium, without the actual receipt or accrual of a new premium payment by the company, also are not included in net premiums. Similar items are waived premiums (where, under a rider, premiums otherwise payable are waived if the policyholder becomes disabled, but the company is treated as paying a benefit and receiving a premium equal to the waived premium), surrender of paid-up additions (where the policyholder surrenders paid-up additions to pay premiums due on the contract) and supplementary contracts (where the policyholder elects a settlement option other than lump sum and the election is treated as the payment of a death benefit by the company and payment of premiums to the company). In these cases, the policyholder has previously paid premiums that were included in net premiums (for the cost of the rider or of the paid-up additions or of the original contract), and the company does not receive new premiums (or incur new commissions or similar acquisition expenses) on the transaction. It is intended that the rule not be used as a mechanism to reduce artificially the amounts included in net premiums, and the Treasury Department is encouraged to provide appropriate anti-abuse rules in regulations.

Deduction for negative net premiums: The bill provides that, if the amount of net premiums is negative for a taxable year with respect to a particular category, the amount that must be capitalized for the taxable year with respect to the other categories is reduced (but not below zero). The amount of the reduction is the applicable percentage (for the category) of the amount by which net premiums for the category are negative for the year. If the amount of the reduction exceeds the amount required to be capitalized for the year in the other categories, the excess amount reduces (but not below zero) the unamortized balance of premium acquisition expenses, in all categories, required to be capitalized in prior taxable years (starting with the most recent year).

Treatment of reinsurance transactions: In determining the consideration incurred for reinsurance of specified insurance contracts, for purposes of calculating the ceding company's net premiums (as well as the reinsurer's net premiums), the bill provides that the rules of section 803(b) apply. Thus, the ceding company's net premiums include the amount of policyholder dividends reimbursable to the ceding company by a reinsurer in respect of reinsured contracts. As under present law, policyholder dividends include excess interest, premium adjustments and experience-rated refunds.

The committee is concerned about the use of reinsurance to avoid or lessen the impact of the amortization requirement. For this reason, a special rule is provided for certain reinsurance transactions. Under this rule, premiums and other consideration incurred for reinsurance are to be taken into account in determining net premiums only to the extent that the premiums and other consideration are includible in the gross income of a person subject to tax under Subchapter L or under Chapter 1 by reason of Subpart F of Part III of Subchapter N.

It is believed that this rule may generally be consistent with existing tax treaties. For example, the provision does not deny a deduction for reinsurance premiums paid to a foreign person. Rather, the provision affects the timing of a deduction for an amount of acquisition expenses, without regard to whether the costs are incurred by making a payment to a foreign or domestic person. It is intended that this rule not apply if there is found to be a conflict with a treaty.

In addition, it is intended that the Internal Revenue Service exercise the authority provided by section 845 to make adjustments that are necessary to reflect properly the income of any person that is a party to a reinsurance agreement. For example, the Internal Revenue Service is encouraged to exercise this authority to prevent an insurance company from transferring amortizable acquisition expenses to a reinsurer that has excess net operating losses.

Specified insurance contracts

In general: The bill defines specified insurance contracts as any life insurance, annuity, or noncancellable accident and health insurance contract (including any life insurance or annuity contract combined with noncancellable accident and health insurance). Guaranteed renewable accident and health insurance as defined under present law is treated in the same manner as noncancellable accident and health insurance. Term insurance is intended to be included in specified contracts. Reinsurance contracts generally are treated in the same manner as the reinsured contract, except as otherwise provided.

Specified insurance contracts do not include any pension plan contract (within the meaning of section 818(a)). Specified insurance contracts also do not include any flight insurance or similar contract.

The bill provides three categories of specified insurance contracts for purposes of determining the percentage of net premiums that constitute amortizable policy acquisition expenses.

Group life insurance contracts and noncancellable accident and health insurance contracts: A group life insurance contract is defined as any contract that (1) covers a group of individuals defined by reference to employment relationship, membership in an organization, or similar factor, (2) the premiums for which are determined on a group basis, and (3) the proceeds of which are payable to or for the benefit of persons other than the employer of the insured (or other institutional owner of the contract).

Premiums are considered to be determined on a group basis if, for example, there is a single contract covering the group and the premiums are not individually rated but rather are group rated. Merely waiving a requirement for individual medical histories does not cause a life insurance contract to be a group contract. It is also intended that group contracts not include an insurance contract providing coverage of members of the same family.

It is intended that credit life insurance contracts be included in the group life insurance category to the extent that such contracts qualify as group contracts under the definition provided in the bill. The fact that payments made under a credit life insurance contract are made directly to the creditor of the insured does not, by itself, mean that the contract is not a group contract, so long as the amount of the indebtedness is reduced by the insurance proceeds.

Noncancellable or guaranteed renewable accident and health insurance contracts are defined as under present law.

Annuity contracts: The category of annuity contracts includes all annuity contracts within the meaning of present law.

Other specified insurance contracts: All other specified insurance contracts are included in the remaining category of contracts. Generally, combinations of different types of specified insurance contracts are treated as other specified insurance contracts, unless the combination is of two types of insurance in the same category, in which case the combination contract is considered to be in that category.

Special rule for qualified foreign contracts: The bill provides an exception to the definition of specified insurance contracts for qualified foreign contracts. Qualified foreign contracts are consequently not subject to the capitalization and amortization requirement with respect to policy acquisition expenses under the bill.

Further, in the case of a qualified foreign contract, the repeal of the adjusted current earnings provision of the corporate alternative minimum tax with respect to capitalization and amortization of acquisition expenses of life insurance companies does not apply. Rather, the present-law adjusted current earnings rule requiring capitalization and amortization of such expenses generally in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles remains in effect.

A qualified foreign contract for this purpose is any contract issued by a foreign life insurance branch (which has its principal place of business in a foreign country) of a domestic life insurance company, if certain additional requirements are met. The additional requirements are that the contract is issued on the life or health of a resident of the foreign country, the domestic life insurance company was required by the foreign country (as of the time it began operations in that country) to operate there through a branch, and the foreign country is not contiguous to the United States. A reinsurance contract that reinsures a qualified foreign contract is not treated as a qualified foreign contract.

Special rules for certain small companies

The bill provides a shorter amortization period of 60 months, rather than the generally applicable 120 months, for the first $5 million of amortizable policy acquisition expenses of an insurance company. The availability of the 60-month amortization period is phased out ratably (on a dollar-for-dollar basis) as amortizable policy acquisition expenses increase from $10 million to $15 million. Thus, for example, an insurance company with $11 million of amortizable policy acquisition expenses for the taxable year may amortize $4 million of such expenses over a 60-month period. For purposes of determining the amount of amortizable policy acquisition expenses under this rule, all members of a controlled group of corporations (as defined in section 1563(a), with modifications) are treated as one. The 60-month amortization period does not apply to any policy acquisition expenses for any taxable year that are attributable to premiums or other consideration under any reinsurance contract.

In addition, for any company that meets the definition of a small life insurance company, the bill repeals the amortization requirement under the adjusted current earnings provision of the corporate alternative minimum tax for the entire period the requirement is in effect (taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989).

A small life insurance company is a life insurance company that has assets of less than $500 million at the close of the taxable year. Except for real property and stock, which are valued at fair market value, an asset is treated as having a value equal to its adjusted Federal income tax basis for purposes of determining gain. Interest in partnerships or trusts are not treated as assets of the company. Rather, a company is treated as owning its proportionate share of the assets of any partnership or trust in which it has an interest. For purposes of determining assets, all insurance companies that are members of the same controlled group (determined under section 1563(a) with certain modifications) are treated as one company.

Regulatory authority to adjust capitalization amounts

The bill provides regulatory authority to the Treasury Department to provide a separate category for a type of insurance contract, with a percentage applicable to the category, under certain circumstances. The authority may be exercised if the Treasury Department determines that the deferral of policy acquisition expenses for the type of contract which would otherwise result under the provision is substantially greater than the deferral of acquisition expenses that would have resulted if actual acquisition expenses (including indirect expenses) and the actual useful life for the type of contract had been used. In making this determination, it is intended that the amount of a reserve for a contract not be taken into account.

If the authority is exercised, the Treasury Department is required to adjust the percentage that would otherwise have applied to the category that included the type of contract, so that the exercise of the authority does not result in a decrease in the amount of revenue received under this chapter by reason of the amortization provision for any fiscal year.

Treatment of ceding commissions in reinsurance transactions

The bill repeals the present-law requirement that reinsurers amortize ceding commissions in certain reinsurance transactions.[46] Thus, ceding commissions incurred by a reinsurer on or after September 30, 1990, under any reinsurance contract are not required to be capitalized and amortized under the provisions of present law. Rather, the amortization rules contained in the bill apply.

Repeal of minimum tax treatment of acquisition expenses

The bill repeals the requirement, under the adjusted current earnings provision of the corporate alternative minimum tax, that life insurance companies capitalize and amortize acquisition expenses in accordance with the treatment generally required under generally accepted accounting principles.

Treatment of cancellable accident and health insurance contracts of life insurance companies

The bill requires life insurance companies to reduce by 20 percent their deduction for the increase in reserves for unearned premiums and premiums received in advance with respect to contracts other than life insurance, annuity and noncancellable accident and health insurance contracts. The contracts with respect to which the 20-percent reduction rule applies include cancellable accident and health insurance contracts. In the case of a decrease in reserves for unearned premiums and premiums received in advance with respect to such contracts, the resulting income inclusion is also reduced by 20 percent. This rule conforms the treatment of reserves for cancellable accident and health insurance contracts of life insurance companies with the treatment of such reserves with respect to the same type of contracts of property and casualty insurance companies.

The bill also provides for the inclusion in income of 20 percent of the closing balance of the life insurance company's unearned premium reserve and reserve for premiums received in advance, with respect to such contracts, as of the last day of the first taxable year beginning before September 30, 1990. This income is includible ratably (3⅓ percent per year) over the 6-year period beginning with the first taxable year beginning on or after September 30, 1990. If the taxpayer ceases to be a life insurance company, any such amount not yet included in income must be included in income in the year preceding the year of cessation.

Treatment of life insurance reserves of property and casualty insurance companies

The bill clarifies that reserves for noncancellable accident and health insurance contracts of property and casualty companies are to be determined under the present-law rules applicable to life insurance companies. Thus, reserves for such contracts are treated like reserves for other types of contracts of property and casualty companies that meet the definition of life insurance reserves, and are calculated under the life insurance reserve rules of section 807.

Waiver of estimated tax penalties

The bill also waives additions to tax under section 6655 with respect to any underpayment of estimated tax for any period before March 16, 1991, amortization requirement to the extent the underpayment was created or increased by the provisions described above.

Effective Date

Capitalization and amortization requirement

The requirement that policy acquisition expenses be capitalized and amortized applies to taxable years ending on or after September 30, 1990. The bill provides that the capitalization is not to be treated as a change in method of accounting. Accordingly, no amount is included in income and spread in accordance with the section 481(a) rules generally applicable to changes in method of accounting.

A transitional rule is provided in the case of a taxable year that includes September 30, 1990. The rule is intended to ensure that only net premiums attributable to that fraction of the taxable year that occurs on and after that date are subject to the capitalization and amortization requirement. The bill provides that the amount taken into account as the net premiums (or in determining negative net premiums) with respect to any category of specified insurance contracts is the portion of the net premiums that bears the same ratio to the net premiums for the taxable year as the ratio of the number of days in such taxable year that occur on or after September 30, 1990, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year.

Repeal of minimum tax treatment of acquisition expenses

The repeal of the adjusted current earnings rule under the minimum tax with respect to acquisition expenses of life insurance companies (other than certain small companies and qualified foreign contracts) generally applies to taxable years beginning on or after September 30, 1990. The minimum tax rule first became effective only for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990; the bill has the effect of applying it only for the acquisition expenses allocable to the portion of such a taxable year that occurs before September 30, 1990. The bill provides that in the case of a taxable year that includes September 30, 1990, the amount of acquisition expenses capitalized (and the amount amortizable) under the minimum tax rule is the amount that bears the same ratio to the total amount of acquisition expenses for the taxable year as the number of days in the taxable year before September 30, 1990, bears to the total number of days in the taxable year.

Treatment of cancellable accident and health insurance contracts of life insurance companies

The provision relating to the 20-percent reduction in certain reserves of life insurance companies applies to taxable years beginning on or after September 30, 1990.

Treatment of life insurance reserves of property and casualty insurance companies

The provision clarifying the treatment of reserves for noncancellable or guaranteed renewable accident and health insurance contracts of life insurance companies applies to taxable years beginning on or after September 30, 1990. No inference is intended with respect to prior law.

2. Treatment of Salvage and Subrogation of Property and Casualty Insurance Companies (secs. 7414 and 7415 of the bill and secs. 832(b)(5) and 6655 of the Code).

[46] Colonial American Life Insurance Co. v. Commissioner, supra, and Rev. Proc. 90-36 (indemnity reinsurance); Treas. Reg. sec. 1.817-4(d)(2) (assumption reinsurance).

Present Law

A property and casualty insurance company, in determining its underwriting income for Federal income tax purposes, may deduct losses incurred. The deduction for losses incurred includes losses paid during the year and the increase in discounted unpaid losses for the year. Present law requires paid losses to be reduced by the increase in salvage (including subrogation claims) recoverable. Since 1947, Treasury regulations have provided an exception to the requirement that paid losses be reduced by salvage, if under applicable State law or State insurance rules the salvage may not be treated as an asset for statutory accounting purposes. This regulatory exception was removed, in temporary Treasury regulations originally promulgated December 30, 1987, but the effective date of the temporary regulations has been deferred several times, and the temporary regulations at present are technically in effect for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that the income of a property and casualty company is mismeasured if estimated salvage is not taken into account in calculating both the unpaid loss reserve deduction and the deduction for paid losses. For unpaid loss reserve deductions, although the deduction is allowed for an estimated amount of the loss payment, when the loss has been incurred but not yet paid, the offsetting amount of salvage is not accounted for until a later time, when it is actually recovered. Thus, the loss deduction is overstated. The same mismeasurement of income occurs when a deduction for a paid loss is not reduced by the estimated amount of salvage that has not yet been recovered. Therefore, the bill requires estimated salvage to be taken into account in determining both paid and unpaid losses.

Explanation of Provision

Under the bill, the deduction allowed to property and casualty insurance companies for losses incurred, both paid and unpaid, is reduced by estimated recoveries of salvage (including subrogation claims) attributable to such losses, whether or not the salvage is treated as an asset for statutory accounting purposes. The bill provides that losses incurred by a property and casualty insurance company are computed as follows. First, the amount of paid losses is reduced by the amount of salvage recovered during the year. Second, the increase in unpaid losses on life insurance contracts, and the increase in discounted unpaid losses, for the taxable year is added to the first amount. Third, the increase in estimated salvage and reinsurance recoverable for the taxable year is subtracted from the sum of the first and second amounts.

The Treasury Department is required to issue regulations providing for discounting of salvage taken into account under the provision. In lines of business where the pattern of recovery of salvage generally resembles the loss payment pattern for the line of business (under the present-law rules for discounting of unpaid losses), an appropriate method of discounting salvage would be to apply the loss payment pattern for the line of business in determining a salvage recovery pattern. In certain lines of business, salvage will typically be recovered much later than the time of payment of losses. It is intended that in discounting estimated salvage recoverable in such lines of business, the period for the recovery of salvage in that line of business be used, rather than the period used in the loss payment pattern for that line of business. For example, if a company providing fidelity and surety coverage recovers salvage pursuant to a 10-year recovery pattern, the company would apply a 10-year discounting period in taking into account estimated salvage for that line of business.

In general, it is intended that discounting of estimated salvage recoverable follow industry-wide periods and patterns (as under the present-law rules for discounting unpaid losses), unless the Treasury determines that it is appropriate to allow the taxpayer to elect to use its historical experience in determining a salvage recovery pattern. Such an election should not be available except to taxpayers whose historical experience is statistically significant (within the meaning of the similar election provided under the loss discounting rules enacted in the 1986 Act).

Pending the issuance of regulations or other Treasury guidance with respect to discounting of estimated salvage recoverable, it is anticipated that taxpayers will compute discounted salvage in accordance with the foregoing principles, and the rules for determining the applicable interest rate for discounting unpaid losses.

The bill also waives additions to tax under section 6655 with respect to any underpayment of estimated tax for any period before March 16, 1991, to the extent the underpayment was created or increased by the treatment of salvage under the bill.

The provision applies for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

The bill provides a partial "fresh start", i.e., a permanent forgiveness of income that would otherwise be includable in gross income with respect to salvage recoverable as of the effective date of the provision. To accomplish this, the change is treated as a change in the taxpayer's method of accounting, but 23 percent of the amount of the adjustment that would ordinarily be included in income over a period of years is forgiven under the bill.

The amount of the adjustment is the discounted amount of estimated salvage recoverable as of the close of the last taxable year beginning before January 1, 1990.

The bill further provides a special income forgiveness rule for companies that have been taking estimated salvage into account in determining the deduction for losses incurred in taxable years beginning before January 1, 1990. For these companies, the bill provides that 23 percent of the discounted amount of estimated salvage recoverable as of the close of the last taxable year beginning before January 1, 1990, is allowed as a deduction ratably over the first 4 taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989. This income forgiveness is unrelated to accurate income measurement and is intended solely to treat companies that have been taking estimated recoverable salvage into account in determining losses incurred in the same manner as companies that have not been taking estimated salvage recoverable into account.

It is intended that taxpayers not be permitted to overstate the amount of the adjustment. Under the bill, if for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, the full amount of the adjustment determined without regard to discounting exceeds the sum of (1) the amount of salvage recovered taken into account for the taxable year and for any preceding taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, attributable to losses incurred for an accident year beginning before 1990, and (2) the undiscounted amount of estimated salvage recoverable as of the close of the taxable year on account of such pre-1990 losses, then a portion of the excess is included in gross income for such taxable year. The portion is determined by applying the ratio of the full amount of the adjustment (determined on a discounted basis) to the full amount of the adjustment (determined without regard to discounting).

A portion of the amount of the adjustment is required to be taken into account ratably over 4 taxable years, unless under the principles of Rev. Proc. 84-74, 1984-2 C.B. 736, the adjustment is required to be taken into account over a shorter period or at a different rate. This portion is 77 percent. The committee intends that with respect to this portion of the adjustment, net operating losses will be allowed to offset the adjustment, tax credit carryforwards will be allowed to offset any tax attributable to the adjustment, and, for purposes of determining liability for estimated taxes, the adjustment will be included in income ratably throughout the year in question.

The bill also provides that the earnings and profits of an insurance company for its first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, is increased by 77 percent of the amount of the adjustment. In addition, the bill provides that for purposes of sections 56, 902, 953(c)(1), and 960, 77 percent of the amount of the adjustment is taken into account under the general principles that apply under section 481 in determining earnings and profits.

3. Compliance Provisions

a. Suspension of statute of limitations during proceedings to enforce certain summonses (sec. 7421 of the bill and sec. 6503 of the Code)

Present Law

The statute of limitations for most tax returns (whether corporate or individual) is three years. The IRS and the taxpayer can together agree to extend the statute of limitations, either for a specified period of time or indefinitely. The taxpayer may terminate an indefinite agreement to extend the statute of limitations by providing notice to the IRS on the appropriate form. Because of the complexity of the issues involved, the IRS frequently cannot complete an audit of a corporate tax return within the statutorily specified three-year period.

During an audit, the IRS frequently requests informally that the taxpayer provide additional information necessary to arriving at a fair and accurate audit adjustment, if any adjustment is warranted. Not all taxpayers cooperate by providing the requested information on a timely basis. In some cases the IRS is compelled to seek information by issuing an administrative summons. Such a summons will not be enforced by judicial process unless the Government (as a practical matter, the Department of Justice) seeks and obtains an order for enforcement in Federal court. In addition, a taxpayer may petition in court to have an administrative summons quashed where this is permitted by statute (for example, under sections 6038A(e)(4) or 7609(b)(2)).

Reasons for Change

It is inappropriate for the statute of limitations to continue to run during the period of time that a taxpayer and the IRS are in court litigating the issue of whether the taxpayer must comply with an IRS summons. Continued running of the statute of limitations during the period of litigation over whether the taxpayer must comply with an IRS summons could, in some instances, cause taxpayers to prolong the litigation over a procedural dispute so that little or no time remains in the statute of limitations for examination of the substantive issues raised by positions taken on the tax return.

At the same time, it is also appropriate to provide safeguards to taxpayers attempting to comply with an IRS summons. Thus, the statute of limitations may only be suspended in limited circumstances.

Explanation of Provision

In general, the bill tolls the statute of limitations during the period of time that the taxpayer and the IRS are in court litigating the issue of whether the taxpayer must comply with a specific type of summons issued by the IRS (called, for purposes of this provision, a "designated summons").

The IRS may issue a designated summons, which must be issued at least 60 days before the day on which the period for assessment of tax for the year in question (including any extensions) would otherwise expire. A designated summons may be issued by the IRS only once for any taxable year of a taxpayer.

The statute of limitations is suspended for the period that commences when a lawsuit is brought in court to either enforce or quash the designated summons and ends on the date there is a final resolution of the summoned person's response to the summons. For these purposes, the term "final resolution" means the same as it does in section 7609(e)(2)(B). In general, this means that no court proceeding remains pending and that the summoned person has complied with the summons to the extent required by the court. If a court requires additional compliance to any extent with the summons, the statute of limitations is suspended for an additional 120 days after final resolution of the summoned person's response. If additional compliance is not required, the assessment period would in no event expire until the 60th day after that final resolution. This provision is designed to preserve the ability of the IRS to conclude the audit and assess any taxes that may be due regardless of the length of time that it might take to obtain judicial resolution of the summons enforcement lawsuit.

These rules for suspending the statute of limitations also apply with respect to any summons issued to any person during the 30-day period following the issuance of the designated summons, so long as the subsequent summons pertains to the same tax return as the designated summons. This is necessary because, for example, a designated summons may be issued to a corporation that cannot respond adequately on the grounds that the summoned information is in the control of a shareholder; a summons to the shareholder for the same information would be necessary to obtain the summoned information. Thus, the statute of limitations is tolled during the course of any enforcement litigation over the subsequent summons.

Effective Date

This provision applies to any tax (regardless of whether imposed before, on, or after the date of enactment) if the statute of limitations for the assessment of the tax has not expired on the date of enactment.

b. Apply accuracy-related penalty more effectively to section 482 adjustments (sec. 7422 of the bill and sec. 6662 of the Code)

Present Law

Valuation questions are frequently central to disputes between taxpayers and the IRS involving section 482. Substantial valuation overstatements are subject to penalty. A substantial valuation overstatement occurs if the value of any property claimed on a tax return is 200 percent or more of the amount determined to be correct. The penalty is 20 percent of the understatement of tax attributable to the substantial valuation overstatement. No penalty is imposed if it is shown that there was reasonable cause for the underpayment and that the taxpayer acted in good faith.

Reasons for Change

There are a number of difficulties in applying the present-law penalties in disputes involving section 482. First, the percentage of the value that is overstated is often not as high as 200 percent, although the total of the taxes in dispute because of valuation overstatements is often millions of dollars per taxable year. Second, valuation misstatements in the section 482 area are often attributable to services as well as property, even though only misstatements with respect to property are subject to the penalty. Third, some section 482 adjustments are attributable to undervaluations, although the present-law penalty applies only to overvaluations.

Several modifications are to be made to the present-law penalty to target it more effectively to situations involving section 482 issues.

Explanation of Provision

The present-law valuation overstatement penalty is extended to apply to specified valuation misstatements in connection with section 482. First, the penalty applies to the understatement of tax attributable to a net section 482 transfer price adjustment for the taxable year that exceeds $10,000,000. The net section 482 transfer price adjustment is the net increase in taxable income for a taxable year that results from all adjustments under section 482 in the transfer price of any property or services.

Second, the penalty also will apply in instances where the transfer price claimed on the return is 200 percent or more (or 50 percent or less) of the amount determined to be the correct transfer price under section 482.

Third, as under present law, the penalty is doubled in cases of gross valuation misstatements (where the dollar amount described above exceeds $20,000,000 or the percentages described above are 400 percent or more (or 25 percent or less)).

The reasonable cause exception in present law also applies to these modifications.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

c. Treatment of persons providing services (sec. 7423 of the bill and sec. 6103 of the Code)

Present Law

Tax returns and return information are confidential, and may not be disclosed without statutory authorization. Unauthorized disclosure is punishable upon conviction by a fine of up to $5,000, a prison sentence of not more than 5 years (or both) (sec. 7213), or, in addition, a private lawsuit for damages (sec. 7431).

The IRS is permitted to disclose returns and return information to other persons to the extent necessary in connection with the processing, storage, transmission, and reproduction of such returns.

Reasons for Change

It is important to safeguard the rights of all taxpayers by ensuring that everyone to whom the IRS discloses returns and return information be subject to penalty for unauthorized disclosures of that confidential information.

Explanation of Provision

The bill provides that persons who provide services to the IRS and to whom the IRS discloses returns and return information pursuant to section 6103, are subject to the same penalties for unauthorized disclosure as are IRS employees. No inference is intended that these persons were not subject to these penalties for unauthorized disclosure prior to this amendment.

Effective Date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

d. Application of 1989 information reporting and related amendments to open years (sec. 7424 of the bill and sec. 6038A of the Code)

Present Law

Information reporting and maintenance

Any corporation that is 25-percent owned by one foreign person and is either a domestic corporation or a foreign corporation that conducts a trade or business in the United States (a "reporting corporation") must furnish the IRS with such information as the Secretary may prescribe, with respect to taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989, regarding transactions carried out directly or indirectly with certain foreign persons treated as related to the reporting corporation ("reportable transactions") (sec. 6038A(a)). A related person for this purpose includes a 25-percent shareholder as well as any person that is treated as related within the meaning of sections 267(b), 707(b)(1), or 482. Current Treasury regulations require the annual filing of an information return reporting related-party transactions.[47]

A reporting corporation is also required to maintain (or cause another person to maintain), at the location, in the manner, and to the extent prescribed by regulations, any records deemed appropriate to determine the correct tax treatment of reportable transactions with respect to taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989 (sec. 6038A(a)).

Application of U.S. legal process to foreign persons

The statutory scope of general IRS summons authority extends to certain persons that are not themselves subject to tax in the United States. In addition, the Code provides that in order to avoid the consequences of the noncompliance rule (discussed below) with respect to certain reportable transactions for taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989, each foreign person that is a related party of a reporting corporation must agree to authorize the latter to act as its agent in connection with any request or summons by the IRS to examine records or produce testimony related to any reportable transaction, solely for the purpose of determining the tax liability of the reporting corporation (sec. 6038A(e)(1)). Thus, assuming authorization is given, an IRS examination request or summons with respect to related-party transactions involving a U.S. taxpayer (including a 25-percent foreign-owned foreign corporation engaged in a trade or business in the United States) can be served on related foreign persons through such a U.S. taxpayer.

Sanctions for noncompliance

Monetary penalty

Failure to furnish the IRS with information or to maintain records with respect to a taxable year beginning after July 10, 1989 as required under section 6038A(a) and (b) is subject to a monetary penalty of $10,000, and additional penalties are imposed if the failure continues more than 90 days after the IRS notifies the taxpayer of the failure (sec. 6038A(d)). The additional penalties are $10,000 for each 30-day period (or fraction thereof) during which the failure continues after the 90th day following IRS notification. An exception from liability for the monetary penalty exists in cases where the taxpayer demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that reasonable cause exists for the failure to furnish required information or maintain required records (sec. 6038A(d)(3)).

Noncompliance rule

Failure of a related party to designate a reporting corporation as its agent for accepting service of process in connection with reportable transactions (as discussed above), or, under certain circumstances, noncompliance with IRS summonses in connection with reportable transactions, can result in the application of the noncompliance rule in computing tax liability with respect to a taxable year beginning after July 10, 1989. For certain payments to related parties in connection with reportable transactions, this rule permits the IRS to allow the reporting corporation only those deductions and amounts of cost of goods sold as shall be determined by the Secretary in the Secretary's sole discretion, based on any information in the knowledge or possession of the Secretary or on any information that the Secretary may choose to obtain through testimony or otherwise (sec. 6038A(e)).

The information reporting and related requirements described above reflect provisions of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 ("the 1989 Act") amending the prior-law provisions of Code section 6038A. The 1989 Act amendments apply only to taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989. Therefore, for example, the IRS cannot use the provisions contained in those amendments to obtain information in a future examination of an open taxable year beginning before July 11, 1989.

The information reporting and related requirements applicable to taxable years beginning before July 11, 1989 are less extensive than those described above. For those years, the requirement to file an information return reporting all transactions with related foreign persons only applied to corporations that were 50-percent owned by a foreign person. Relatedness for those years is defined as relatedness only within the meaning of sections 267(b), 707(b)(1), or 482. Noncompliance with this reporting requirement is subject to an initial penalty of $1,000, plus additional $1,000 penalties (up to a maximum of $24,000) for each 30-day period (beginning 90 days after IRS notification) that the failure remains or remained outstanding. The provisions of section 6038A effective for those years do not include the record-maintenance requirement, the agency-designation requirement for service of process, or the special noncompliance rule discussed above.

The committee believes that, in future tax return audits of transactions between 25-percent foreign-owned companies and related parties, the IRS should have examination tools in addition to those available prior to the 1989 Act amendments. The committee believes that, equipped with only those prior-law tools, the IRS was often seriously overmatched by taxpayers and their representatives, and by related parties, who on occasion attempted to delay or defeat efforts to obtain foreign-based records or the testimony of foreign-based persons relevant to the examination. As more fully described in the committee's report on the 1989 Act, the 1989 amendments to the prior section 6038A provisions were highly desirable as a result of problems in several relevant areas.[48] These problems included the practical difficulties of enforcing summonses against foreign persons, the shortcomings of foreign record maintenance requirements (if any), the practical opportunities for engaging in non-arm's-length transactions with parties related below the 50-percent level, the inadequacy of applicable sanctions under prior law (as compared both to the amount of tax liability at stake and to the comparable penalties in the case of a foreign person claiming deductions against U.S. taxable income (see secs. 882(c)(2) and 874)), and the concern that some courts may not have given appropriate deference to the Secretary's determination of the proper allocation or apportionment of items of income and expense under section 482.

The committee believes that it is appropriate to provide the IRS with similar tools for all future examinations and disputes regarding transactions between corporations that file U.S. tax returns and their related parties, regardless of the taxable year involved. The committee generally does not believe that it would be appropriate to apply the sanctions of the 1989 Act amendments to acts (or failures to act) that occurred in good faith before the effective date of the 1989 Act. However, the committee believes that any future acts or failures to act should be subject to similar sanctions, regardless of whether they involve the examination or adjustment of tax liability for a taxable year beginning before, on, or after July 10, 1989.

The bill generally extends the application of the 1989 Act amendments to the information reporting and related provisions of section 6038A so that they apply to future acts (and failures to act) without regard to the taxable year involved.[49]

First, the bill applies the 1989 Act amendments to any requirement to furnish information under section 6038A(a) (as amended by the 1989 Act), if the time for furnishing such information is after the date of enactment of the bill, without regard to the starting date of the taxable year to which the information relates. Under the bill, therefore, the increased monetary penalty applies to a failure to furnish information that occurs after enactment of the bill.[50] For example, if Treasury regulations under section 6038A(a) and (b) require taxpayers to provide information about taxable years beginning before July 11, 1989, and the time for providing that information (under such regulations) is after the date of enactment of this bill, the monetary penalty for failure to comply with those requirements will be $10,000, rather than $1,000 as under present law.

The bill further provides that in the case of any failure with respect to a tax year beginning before July 11, 1989, which failure first occurs on or before the date of enactment of the bill but continues after date of enactment, the bill's $10,000 monetary penalty for continued failures, which applies to each 30-day period (or fraction thereof) during which such failure continues after the expiration of the 90-day period following notice by the Secretary of the initial failure, applies to such 30-day periods beginning after date of enactment. Thus, a failure to provide information required under the section 6038A(a) and (b) regulations currently applicable to taxable years beginning before July 11, 1989, which failure continues beyond expiration of the 90-day period following notice by the Secretary of the initial failure, will be subject to the $10,000 penalty for each 30-day period or fraction thereof that begins after date of enactment of the bill during which the failure continues. By contrast, the $1,000 penalty under current law would have applied only to the first twenty-four 30-day periods of the failure's continuation.

Next, the bill applies the 1989 Act amendments to any requirement under section 6038A(a) (as amended by the 1989 Act) to maintain records that were in existence at any time on or after March 20, 1990, without regard to the tax year involved. Under the bill, therefore, the increased monetary penalty applies to a failure to maintain records (as well as a failure to furnish information) that occurs after enactment of the bill, even if the records required to be maintained relate to taxable years beginning before July 11, 1989, so long as the records were in existence at any time on or after March 20, 1990.[51]

Under the bill the 1989 Act amendments apply, in addition, to any requirement to authorize a corporation to act as a limited agent under section 6038A(e)(1) (as amended by the 1989 Act) if the time for authorizing such action is after the date of enactment of the bill, without regard to the tax year involved. The bill also applies the 1989 Act amendments to the information reporting and related provisions of section 6038A to any summons issued after the date of enactment of the bill, without regard to the tax year involved. Thus, under the bill the Secretary may apply the noncompliance rule in computing tax liability with respect to a taxable year beginning before July 11, 1989. Failure to designate an agent in accordance with such rules as the Secretary may prescribe, or failure to substantially comply with a summons that calls for records the maintenance of which is required under section 6038A(a) and (b) regulations (unless the summons has been quashed), may therefore result, under the bill, in computation of taxable income for such a year using only those deductions and amounts of cost of goods sold as are determined by the Secretary in the Secretary's sole discretion, based on any information in the knowledge or possession of the Secretary or on any information that the Secretary may obtain through testimony or otherwise.

[49] The provision does not affect the application of section 6038A under present law (as amended by the 1989 Act) to taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989.

[50] As under current law as it applies to years covered by the 1989 amendments to section 6038A, the increased monetary penalty applies only if the taxpayer is unable to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Secretary that reasonable cause exists for the failure to furnish required information or maintain required records.

[51] Inasmuch as the bill does not affect the application of section 6038A under present law (as amended by the 1989 Act), the provisions of section 6038A continue to apply to taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989, irrespective of the date on which any summoned records were or were not in existence.

In the case of a taxable year beginning before July 11, 1989, the committee does not intend by this bill to authorize imposition of the noncompliance rule for a failure to produce summoned records that did exist prior to March 20, 1990, but no longer existed on March 20, 1990, where those records are shown to have been discarded in the ordinary course of business prior to March 20, 1990. The committee understands that this bill, unlike the 1989 Act, generally authorizes the Secretary to impose sanctions for failures to produce records necessarily created in years prior to the advent of the record maintenance rules of section 6038A(a) as amended by the 1989 Act and by the bill. The committee is aware that no regulations have yet been issued or proposed that would set forth those rules. The committee further understands that failures to produce records may be the result of prior acts that may be subject to existing sanctions under titles 18 or 26 of the U.S. Code. The committee does not intend, by this bill, to alter the Government's ability to impose such sanctions. Moreover, no inference is intended to be drawn from this bill with regard to what requirements or sanctions are in fact applicable under present law to the preservation or destruction of records prior to March 20, 1990. However, the committee does not intend to permit the Secretary to penalize taxpayers under the noncompliance rule of section 6038A(e) for acts with respect to prior years that would not have been subject to penalty at the time they were taken, either under enacted or pending legislation.

Effective Date

The provision is effective as described above.

e. Information reporting by foreign corporations engaged in U.S. business (sec. 7425 of the bill and sec. 6038C of the Code).

Present Law

In general

A foreign corporation that is engaged in a trade or business within the United States during the taxable year is subject to U.S. income tax on its taxable income which is effectively connected with the conduct of that trade or business (sec. 882(a)(1)). A foreign corporation is also subject to a flat 30-percent branch profits tax on its "dividend equivalent amount," which is a measure of the U.S. effectively connected earnings of the corporation that are removed in any year from the conduct of its U.S. trade or business.

In determining the taxable income of a foreign corporation, gross income includes only gross income which is effectively connected, whether derived from sources within or without the United States (sec. 882(a)(2)), and deductions generally are allowed only to the extent they are connected with such effectively connected gross income (sec. 882(c)(1)). For this purpose, deductible expenses (other than interest expense) are allocated and apportioned to effectively connected gross income under the same rules that are applicable for allocating and apportioning the expenses of U.S. persons between U.S. and foreign sources (Treas. Reg. sec. 1.882-4(c)). With respect to computing deductible interest expense, regulations generally require that the worldwide liabilities of the foreign corporation be taken into consideration in determining which liabilities are treated as "U.S.-connected liabilities," that amount being based on a specified percentage of the corporation's U.S. effectively connected assets. Deductible interest expense is determined by multiplying the amount of such U.S.-connected liabilities by one or more average rates of interest (Treas. Reg. sec. 1.882-5). A foreign corporation is also subject to a branch level interest tax, which amounts to a flat 30 percent of the interest deducted by the foreign corporation in computing its U.S. effectively connected income but not paid by the U.S. trade or business.

Information reporting and maintenance

Verification of deductible expenses

A foreign corporation may claim the benefit of deductions and credits only if it files or causes to be filed with the Secretary a true and accurate return in the manner prescribed in subtitle F of the Code, which return includes all the information deemed necessary by the Secretary for the calculation of those deductions or credits (sec. 882(c)(2)). A foreign corporation that claims deductions from effectively connected gross income is subject to certain rules for providing information with respect to those expenses. Under regulations, if a foreign corporation is requested to do so by the IRS district director, it must furnish information, in English if so requested, sufficient to establish that the corporation is entitled to the deductions in the amounts claimed. The information must be submitted in a form suitable to permit verification of the deductions claimed (Treas. Reg. sec. 1.882-4(c)(2)).

Transactions with certain related persons

Under present law, any foreign corporation that conducts a trade or business in the United States and that is 25-percent owned by one foreign person (in terms defined by the Code, a "25-percent foreign-owned" corporation that is also a "reporting corporation") must furnish the IRS with such information as the Secretary may prescribe, with respect to taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989, regarding transactions carried out directly or indirectly with certain foreign persons treated as related to the reporting corporation ("reportable transactions") (sec. 6038A(a)). A related person for this purpose includes a 25-percent shareholder as well as any person that is treated as related within the meaning of sections 267(b), 707(b)(1), or 482. Current Treasury regulations require the annual filing of an information return reporting related-party transactions.[52] A reporting corporation is also required to maintain (or cause another person to maintain), at the location, in the manner, and to the extent prescribed by regulations, any records deemed appropriate to determine the correct tax treatment of reportable transactions with respect to taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989 (sec. 6038A(a)).

Sanctions For Noncompliance

If a foreign corporation fails to sufficiently produce the information requested by the IRS for purposes of verifying its deductions under Treasury Regulation section 1.882-4(c)(2), the IRS may in its discretion disallow, in full or in part, any of the deductions claimed.[53]

Failure to furnish the IRS with information or to maintain records with respect to a taxable year beginning after July 10, 1989 as required under section 6038A(a) and (b) is subject to a monetary penalty of $10,000, and additional penalties are imposed if the failure continues more than 90 days after the IRS notifies the taxpayer of the failure (sec. 6038A(d)). The additional penalties are $10,000 for each 30-day period (or fraction thereof) during which the failure continues following the 90th day after IRS notification. An exception from liability for the monetary penalty exists in cases where the taxpayer demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that reasonable cause exists for the failure to furnish required information or maintain required records (sec. 6038A(d)(3)).

The information reporting and related requirements described above reflect provisions of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 ("the 1989 Act") amending the prior-law provisions of Code section 6038A. The 1989 Act amendments apply only to taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989.

The information reporting and related requirements applicable to taxable years beginning before July 11, 1989 are less extensive than those described above. For those years, the requirement to file an information return reporting all transactions with related foreign persons only applied to corporations that were 50-percent owned by a foreign person. Relatedness for those years is defined as relatedness only within the meaning of sections 267(b), 707(b)(1), or 482. Noncompliance with this reporting requirement is subject to an initial penalty of $1,000, plus additional $1,000 penalties (up to a maximum of $24,000) for each 30-day period (beginning 90 days after IRS notification) that the failure remains or remained outstanding.

The provisions of section 6038A effective for those years do not include the record-maintenance requirement.

Application of U.S. legal process to foreign persons

In general

The statutory scope of general IRS summons authority extends to records outside the United States,[54] and to persons that are

[52] Treas. Reg. sec. 1.6038A-1. However, the regulation has yet to be amended to reflect the broader definition of a related party resulting from the amendments to section 6038A contained in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989.

[53] An equivalent discretion applies under section 482; a determination by the Secretary as to that allocation or apportionment of items of income and expense among commonly controlled persons which clearly reflects income or prevents the evasion of taxes must be sustained absent a showing or abuse of the Commissioner's discretion. Paccar, Inc. v. Commissioner, 85 T.C. 754, 787 (1985), aff'd, 849 F.2d 393 (9th Cir. 1988).

[54] E.g., First National City Bank v. Internal Revenue Service, 271 F.2d 616 (2d Cir. 1959), cert. denied, 361 U.S. 948 (1960). However, judicial enforceability of such a summons depends on a variety of circumstances, such as the legality under foreign law of requiring the production of the documents. Id. at 619-20. In a case where a U.S. court obtains jurisdiction over a corporation by virtue of the location of a branch physically located within the court's geographical sphere of influence, another relevant circumstance may be whether any not themselves subject to tax in the United States. In addition, the Code provides that in order to avoid the consequences of the noncompliance rule (discussed below) with respect to certain reportable transactions for taxable years beginning after July 10, 1989, each foreign person that is a related party of a reporting corporation (as described above) must agree to authorize the latter to act as its agent in connection with any request by the IRS to examine records or produce testimony related to any reportable transaction, solely for the purpose of determining the tax liability of the reporting corporation (sec. 6038A(e)(1)). Thus, assuming authorization is given, an IRS examination request or summons with respect to related-party transactions involving a U.S. taxpayer (including a 25-percent foreign-owned foreign corporation engaged in a trade or business in the United States) can be served on related foreign persons through those U.S. taxpayers.

Failure of a related party to designate a reporting corporation as its agent for accepting service of process in connection with reportable transactions (as discussed above), or, under certain circumstances, noncompliance with IRS summonses in connection with reportable transactions, can result in the application of the noncompliance rule in computing tax liability with respect to a taxable year beginning after July 10, 1989. For certain payments to related parties in connection with reportable transactions, this rule permits the IRS to allow the reporting corporation only those deductions and amounts of cost of goods sold as shall be determined by the Secretary in the Secretary's sole discretion, based on any information in the knowledge or possession of the Secretary or on any information that the Secretary may obtain through testimony or otherwise (sec. 6038A(e)).

Reasons for Change

Introduction

The committee believes that for many purposes, a foreign corporation doing business in the United States (for example, through a U.S. branch) should be subject to tax treatment that is the same as, or analogous to, the tax treatment that would apply to a foreign corporation operating in the United States through a U.S. subsidiary. For example, a U.S. corporation (or a foreign corporation engaged in a U.S. business) that is wholly owned by a widely-held foreign corporation is subject to the section 6038A provisions with respect to transactions with parties related either to itself or to the foreign parent corporation. The committee believes that the 1989 Act significantly enhanced the effect of those provisions on compliance, and the committee believes that a U.S. branch of a widely-held foreign corporation (including a foreign corporation none of whose shareholders holds 25 percent or more of its stock), as well as any other foreign corporation, should be subject to those same compliance provisions with respect to transactions with parties related to the foreign corporation.

The committee further believes that the issues arising in connection with related party transactions of a 25-percent foreign-owned U.S. corporation are analogous to those arising in connection with the fundamental tax issues arising on the U.S. tax return of a foreign corporation: namely, which of the items of gross income of a foreign corporation are effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States; which deductions are connected with U.S.-effectively connected income; and the underlying amounts of the items that must be allocated and apportioned between the United States trade or business and the other trades or businesses of the taxpayer. Records underlying these issues can be expected to be located abroad, just as the records of foreign related parties that engage in reportable transactions with 25-percent foreign-owned U.S. corporations will typically be located abroad. The 1989 Act amendments to section 6038A should be particularly helpful, in the committee's view, in providing IRS access to books, records, or other information in the custody of a foreign person during the course of examining the related party transactions of the taxpayers to which section 6038A pertains. However, it has come to the committee's attention that the 1989 Act failed to fully address the problems of determining the tax liability of foreign corporations operating trades or businesses in the United States, and that absent additional statutory changes, these problems may continue to prevent the IRS from obtaining in a timely manner information relevant to determining the U.S. income tax liability of those branches. The committee considers it appropriate to provide the IRS similar tools to obtain relevant information in the case of foreign corporations operating trades or business in the United States as in the case of related party transactions that are subject to the provisions of section 6038A.

Computation of effectively connected taxable income

The IRS often needs to obtain foreign-based documentation or the testimony of foreign-based persons in order to properly apply substantive tax rules (e.g., section 482) to related party transactions on the U.S. tax return of a 25-percent foreign-owned U.S. corporation. The committee understands that the IRS also often needs such documentation or testimony in order to properly determine the amount, for example, of executive and general administrative expenses, research and development expenses, interest, or other expenses incurred outside the United States for the purposes of the foreign corporation as a whole, that is connected with U.S.-effectively connected income of the corporation. The committee understands that a large proportion of the U.S.-effectively connected income of all foreign persons is comprised of the U.S.-effectively connected income of foreign banks, and that the largest deduction of these taxpayers is the deduction for interest, which, under the applicable substantive tax rules (see Treas. Reg. sec. 1.882-5), must be computed on the basis of the corporation's worldwide liabilities, interest expense, and in some cases, assets.

As another example, foreign-based documentation or the testimony of foreign-based persons may be required by the IRS to properly determine the location of assets from which a particular item of income is derived, to determine the location of the activities that contributed to the realization of such income, or to determine the location of the trade or business through which assets or income were accounted for (see sec. 864(c)(2) through (5)). Such documentation or testimony also may be required by the IRS to properly examine a foreign corporation's U.S. tax return where the foreign corporation claims that income from the sale of personal property is foreign source income not subject to tax because an office or other fixed place of business of the taxpayer in a foreign country materially participated in the sale (see Code secs. 865(e)(2)(B) and 864(c)(4)(B)(iii)). Generally, in any case where documents or the testimony of persons located abroad bear on U.S.-effectively connected income, or relate to deductions or other items connected with that income, the IRS needs such documentation or testimony to determine the amounts of those items that are includible on the U.S. tax return of the foreign corporation.

Applicable procedural rules

The committee is concerned that present law governing the procedures for obtaining access to those foreign-based documents or testimony of foreign-based persons relevant to the foregoing substantive tax issues is not adequate to ensure access in a timely and effective manner. If the IRS is to rely on information reporting and record maintenance in such a case, then the committee believes that the penalty for failure to carry out those reporting and maintenance functions should be no less substantial than those applicable to analogous failures of 25-percent foreign-owned U.S. corporations regarding their related party transactions. Moreover, where the IRS is not provided with adequate data to properly discharge its examination function, even after issuance of an administrative summons, the committee believes that it is appropriate (as in the analogous case of a 25-percent foreign-owned corporation regarding its related party transactions) to permit the Secretary to draw the conclusions from the available data in his sole discretion.

The committee understands that a foreign corporation doing business in the United States will be subject to the jurisdiction of Federal courts. Thus, in seeking enforcement of a summons issued to such a corporation, the IRS may rely upon judicial orders (and associated contempt powers) of the Federal courts. Nevertheless, the committee is concerned that the theoretical existence of legal jurisdiction does not necessarily produce meaningful access to information as a practical matter.

When this committee considered amendments to section 6038A in 1989, it also recognized that the theoretical existence of legal jurisdiction to issue a summons does not guarantee the practical ability to enforce it successfully.[55] This recognition was based, in part, on the results of United States v. Toyota Motor Corp.[56] In Toyota, the court ultimately ruled that a Japanese parent corporation was subject to the jurisdiction of the court in a summons enforcement action because of its ties to the United States. However, the summons could not be enforced with respect to certain concededly relevant documents, because they had been discarded in the normal course of business[57]—a course of business presumably normal because their retention was no longer required under foreign recordkeeping standards. Subsequent to enactment of the 1989 Act, the committee learned of similar practical impediments to meaningful IRS access to documents and testimony relevant to the tax liabilities of foreign corporations on their U.S. operations.

First, one of the key problems presented by the Toyota case may be equally present in the case of the branch operation; that is, if foreign record retention practices differ from U.S. practices, a valid summons for documents held by a home office or foreign branch may be rendered useless to the IRS. Accordingly, it is necessary to ensure that foreign-based records relevant to the determination of U.S. tax liability remain available for U.S. tax purposes notwithstanding different retention practices otherwise applicable in the home country (or other countries in which the corporation operates).

Second, even if foreign-based records are not discarded, the practical ability of Federal courts to enforce compliance with a summons may be limited in the case of a corporation whose responsible employees are located outside the United States. In general, if a corporation fails to comply with a Federal court order, the court may seek to compel compliance by holding responsible corporate officers or employees in contempt.[58] In the case of a U.S. corporation, those responsible persons will typically be located within the United States. However, in the case of a U.S. branch of a foreign corporation, the responsible officers and employees will generally be located outside the United States, and thus as a practical matter beyond the contempt powers of a Federal court. While a court could choose to hold in contempt a lower-ranked employee present in the United States, a court might also balk at doing so, where that employee is acting under the direction of senior personnel. Moreover, a court could possibly choose not to enforce the summons against the corporation, on the same grounds.[59]

Third, the effect of contrary provisions of foreign law is highly uncertain. Where U.S. and foreign requirements conflict, courts have tended to engage in a balancing test, weighing the interests of the two sovereigns in the observance of their respective laws.[60] Under such an analysis, it is conceivable that a court might limit IRS access to necessary information based on foreign bank secrecy or similar rules.[61]

Fourth, the committee believes that just as section 882(c)(2) conditions the allowance to a foreign corporation of ordinary deductions and credits on full compliance with applicable filing requirements, it is appropriate to apply no less stringent sanctions in cases where the foreign corporation fails to comply with applicable requirements to support the correctness of the amounts shown on the return in the course of examination.

In light of the foregoing, the committee believes that the IRS should be equipped with the same information gathering tools and penalties in auditing the issues relating to the computation of effectively connected taxable income of a foreign corporation, as it does in auditing the related party transactions on the return of a 25-percent foreign-owned corporation. In particular, the committee believes that provisions of section 6038A, as enhanced by the 1989 Act amendments, are appropriate to apply in determining the U.S. effectively connected income of all foreign corporations.

In general

The bill adds new section 6038C to the Internal Revenue Code. The new provision subjects all foreign corporations that carry on trades or businesses in the United States to information reporting and record maintenance rules that are similar to the present-law rules contained in section 6038A applicable to certain 25-percent foreign-owned corporations.[62] While under section 6038A these rules are generally applicable only to furnishing information, maintaining records, and complying with summonses pertaining to related party transactions, and then only when the foreign corporation is 25-percent foreign-owned, under new section 6038C these rules apply to related party transactions in the case of any foreign corporation with a U.S. trade or business, whether or not the foreign corporation is 25-percent foreign-owned. In addition, under new section 6038C these rules apply to information, records, and summonses regarding such other information as the Secretary may prescribe by regulations relating to any item not directly connected with such a related party transaction. Thus, under the bill the gathering of information and the maintenance of records relevant to the computation of taxable income effectively connected with that U.S. trade or business are subjected to information reporting and record maintenance rules comparable to those of the 1989 Act that apply to certain related party transactions only.[63] Inasmuch as the purpose of the bill is to obtain generally equivalent access to relevant information irrespective of the location of the information, recognizing the unique tax administration problems presented where the location of the information, as well as the seat of management (as is often the case with a foreign corporation), is outside the United States, the committee believes that the provision does not discriminate against foreign corporations in violation of any treaties.

Information reporting and record maintenance

Under the bill, a foreign corporation that is engaged in a U.S. trade or business during the taxable year is required to furnish information at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe in regulations. This information includes the same information as is required to be furnished by 25-percent foreign owned corporations under section 6038A(b) with respect to related-party transactions, as well as other information as prescribed by the Secretary in regulations relating to any other item related to the determination of the foreign corporation's tax liability. For example, it is anticipated that this "other information" may include, but not be limited to, information regarding the allocation and apportionment of deductible expenses (including the computation of the deductible interest expense) to the U.S. branch of a foreign corporation. In addition, the bill requires all foreign corporations that carry on business in the United States to maintain (or cause another to so maintain) at the location, in the manner, and to the extent prescribed in regulations records necessary to determine the corporation's tax liability. The committee generally expects that the Secretary will use this authority to require furnishing of information, and maintenance of records, bearing on the allocation of amounts between the United States and foreign countries.

The bill specifies that the monetary penalty provisions of present-law section 6038A(d) shall apply to failures to furnish information or maintain records as described in the previous paragraph. That is, if a foreign corporation engaged in a U.S. trade or business fails to furnish information required by the Secretary or fails to maintain (or cause another to maintain) the records specified in regulations, then the corporation will be assessed a penalty of $10,000 per taxable year with respect to which a failure occurs. Moreover, if the Secretary notifies a foreign corporation of such a failure and the failure continues for more than 90 days after the notification, then an additional $10,000 penalty will be assessed for each 30-day period, or fraction thereof, during which the failure continues following the expiration of the 90-day period. Finally, a reasonable cause exception similar to the present-law section 6038A(d)(3) exception applies.

Enforcement of IRS requests for information

The bill provides that in order to avoid the consequences of the noncompliance rule (discussed below) with respect to transactions between any foreign corporation engaged in a U.S. trade or business and a foreign person related to that corporation, the related foreign person must agree to authorize the foreign corporation to act as its limited agent in the United States solely for purposes of applying Code sections 7602, 7603, and 7604 relating to any request by the Secretary to examine records of the related person or produce testimony by the related person with respect to any such transaction, or with respect to any summons issued by the Secretary for such records or testimony. The bill defines a related person as any person who is related within the meaning of section 267(b) or 707(b)(1) to the foreign corporation or to a 25-percent foreign shareholder of the corporation, and any other person that is related to the corporation under the rules of section 482. [62] The committee intends that the legislative history bearing on the meaning of 1989 Act amendments to section 6038A generally serve as guidance to the meaning of section 6038C.

[63] As a technical and conforming change, the bill removes foreign corporations engaged in U.S. trades or businesses from the application of Code section 6038A, effective with the effective date of new section 6038C, in order to prevent any overlapping application of the provisions of that section with the provisions of new section 6038C.

bill expressly limits the agency relationship between a foreign corporation and its related party so that any appearance of persons or production of records under this provision will not subject such persons or records to legal process for any purpose other than determining the correct U.S. income tax treatment of transactions between the foreign corporation and the related party.

The noncompliance rule provided under the bill permits the Secretary to determine, in his sole discretion, the treatment of the transaction or the amount and treatment of any such item, based on any information in the knowledge or possession of the Secretary or on any information that the Secretary may obtain through testimony or otherwise. This rule applies in cases where the following three conditions are met: the Secretary issues a summons to a foreign corporation to produce (either directly or as an agent for a related foreign person) any records or testimony with respect to any transaction or other item necessary to determine the corporation's proper income tax liability; the summons is neither quashed in a proceeding begun not later than the 90th day after issuance of the summons, nor determined to be invalid in an enforcement proceeding; and the foreign corporation fails to substantially comply with the summons in a timely manner (and has been informed of such noncompliance in the form of a notice from the Secretary sent via certified or registered mail). This sanction for noncompliance applies whether or not the Secretary has begun a judicial proceeding for enforcement of the summons. The noncompliance rule applies if the foreign corporation fails to maintain (or cause another person to maintain) the records required under the recordkeeping provisions of the bill and due to such failure, a summons for such information is quashed under a proceeding described above or the foreign corporation is unable to provide the records requested in a summons. The noncompliance sanction similarly applies to a case where a related foreign person fails to authorize the foreign corporation to act as its agent under the provisions discussed in the preceding paragraph.

To ensure that the noncompliance rules with respect to a summons are only applied when the summons is properly issued by the IRS, the bill permits prompt judicial review of a summons, as in the case of a summons concerning a related party transaction of a 25-percent foreign-owned U.S. corporation. The bill thus permits persons that receive a summons related to the examination of a reportable transaction to petition a Federal court to quash the summons, not later than the 90th day after such summons is mailed. In the event that the recipient does not file such a petition and also fails to comply with the summons, the IRS (as under present law) may bring an action to enforce the summons. If a summons in connection with an IRS examination of any reportable transaction is subject to a timely petition to quash, the statute of limitations on the taxable year(s) at issue will be suspended during the pendency of the judicial action to quash the summons, and will expire not earlier than 90 days after the conclusion of such action.

In order to establish with finality the validity of a summons, the obligations imposed on the recipient by the summons, and the applicability of sanctions for noncompliance with the summons, a taxpayer may file a timely petition to quash the summons or defend an IRS action to enforce the summons. Under the bill, these are a taxpayer's sole methods of preventing application of the noncompliance rule for noncompliance with a summons. Therefore, if a summons is not quashed (whether because a petition to quash was unsuccessful, an action to enforce was successful, or simply because no judicial action was initiated), the noncompliance rule may be applied by the IRS irrespective of any collateral or subsequent judicial opinion (e.g., in the U.S. Tax Court) concerning the validity of the summons.

The fact that compliance with the summons would lead to the imposition of civil or criminal penalties on the reporting corporation (or a related party) under any foreign law will not constitute grounds for either quashing or refusing to enforce the summons.

Effective Date

The bill generally applies the section 6038C provisions to future acts (and failures to act) without regard to the taxable year involved.[64]

First, the bill applies the section 6038C provisions to any requirement to furnish information under section 6038C(a), if the time for furnishing such information is after the date of enactment of the bill, without regard to the starting date of the taxable year to which the information relates. Under the bill, therefore, the monetary penalty applies to a failure to furnish information that occurs after enactment of the bill. For example, if Treasury regulations under section 6038C(a)(1) and (b) require taxpayers to provide information about a taxable year, and the time for providing that information is after the date of enactment of this bill, the monetary penalty for failure to comply with those requirements will be $10,000.

Next, the bill applies the section 6038C provisions to any requirement under section 6038C(a) to maintain records that were in existence at any time on or after March 20, 1990, without regard to the tax year involved. Under the bill, therefore, the $10,000 monetary penalty applies to a failure to maintain records (or a 30-day period of continued failure after lapse of the 90-day period following notice of the failure), as well as to furnish information, that occurs after enactment of the bill, so long as the records were in existence at any time on or after March 20, 1990.[65]

Under the bill the section 6038C provisions apply, in addition, to any requirement to authorize a corporation to act as a limited agent under section 6038C(d)(1) if the time for authorizing such action is after the date of enactment of the bill, without regard to the tax year involved. The bill also applies the section 6038C provisions to any summons issued after the date of enactment of the bill, without regard to the tax year involved. Failure to designate an agent in accordance with such rules as the Secretary may prescribe, or failure to substantially comply with a summons that calls for records the maintenance of which is required under section 6038C(a) and (b) regulations, may therefore result, under the bill, in computation of taxable income for any taxable year involved, applying to the transaction or item involved the treatment determined by the Secretary in the Secretary's sole discretion, based on any information in the knowledge or possession of the Secretary or on any information that the Secretary may choose to obtain through testimony or otherwise.

In the case of a taxable year not subject to the present law provisions of section 6038A, the committee does not intend by this bill to authorize imposition of the noncompliance rule for a failure to produce summoned records that did exist prior to March 20, 1990, but no longer existed on March 20, 1990, where those records are shown to have been discarded in the ordinary course of business prior to March 20, 1990. The committee understands that this bill generally authorizes the Secretary to impose sanctions for failures to produce records necessarily created in years prior to the advent of the record maintenance rules of either present law section 6038A(a) or new section 6038C as contained in this bill. The committee also is aware that no regulations have yet been issued or proposed that would set forth those rules. The committee further understands that failures to produce records may be the result of prior acts that were and are subject to existing sanctions under titles 18 or 26 of the U.S. Code. The committee does not intend by this bill to alter the Government's ability to impose such sanctions. Moreover, no inference is intended to be drawn from this bill with regard to what requirements or sanctions are in fact applicable under present law to the preservation or destruction of records prior to March 20, 1990. However, the committee does not intend to permit the Secretary to penalize taxpayers under the noncompliance rule of section 6038C(d) for acts with respect to prior years that would not have been subject to penalty at the time they were taken, either under enacted or pending legislation.

f. Studies and other administrative matters (sec. 7426 of the bill).

Present Law

In the Tax Reform Act of 1986, Congress stated that a comprehensive study of intercompany pricing rules should be conducted by the Internal Revenue Service and that careful consideration should be given to whether the existing regulations could be modified in any respect. Such a study was issued by the Treasury and IRS in October 1988. Changes to the regulations are yet to be proposed. In addition, in the Revenue [64] The bill does not affect the application of section 6038A under present law (as amended by the 1989 Act) to foreign corporations in the case of past acts (and failures to act).

[65] The committee is aware that there may be some foreign corporations, engaged in a U.S. trade or business, that for taxable years beginning prior to July 11, 1989 were subject to section 6038A(a) information reporting requirements under section 6038A as it existed prior to the 1989 Act, and to the accompanying $1,000 monetary penalties applicable to failure (and certain continued failures) to provide the required information. If any such corporation is subject to a monetary penalty for each relevant 30-day period (or fraction thereof) of continuation, after the date of enactment of this bill, of an original failure to provide information, the time for which was prior to the date of enactment of this bill, the committee intends that the provisions of the bill apply to each 30-day period beginning after date of enactment during which the failure continues. Thus, a failure to provide information required under the section 6038A(a) and (b) regulations currently applicable to taxable years beginning before July 11, 1989, which failure continues beyond expiration of the 90-day period following notice by the Secretary of the initial failure, will be subject to the $10,000 penalty for each 30-day period or fraction thereof that begins after date of enactment of the bill during which the failure continues. By contrast the $1,000 penalty under current law would have applied to only the first twenty-four 30-day periods of the failure's continuation.

Reconciliation Act of 1989, a legislative intention was expressed that the IRS report on its efforts to audit U.S. taxpayers that are subsidiaries of or otherwise related to foreign corporations. It was intended that such a report be submitted to Congress within five years after the 1989 Act amendments to section 6038A took effect.

Reasons for Change

Certain factual issues, and certain possible administrative or statutory improvements, regarding the administration of related party transfer pricing rules using the arm's length standard have been brought to the committee's attention. The committee believes these matters require further study or procedural revision by the Treasury Department and the Internal Revenue Service.

Explanation of Provision

The bill provides for a report to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate regarding the effectiveness of the compliance provisions contained in this part of the bill (described above) in increasing compliance with Code section 482, the use of advanced determination agreements with respect to section 482 issues, possible additional statutory provisions or administrative changes to assist the IRS in increasing compliance with section 482, and coordination of the administration of section 482 with the administration of similar provisions of foreign tax laws and of domestic non-tax laws.

The committee expects that in discussing levels of compliance with section 482, the IRS will report on the amounts of section 482 adjustments (proposed or collected), providing separate figures for adjustments in so-called "inbound" cases (generally, those involving deductions or other payments going to foreign persons) and adjustments in outbound cases. The committee intends that considerations of changes to assist IRS in increasing compliance with section 482 include in particular recommendations for affording the Service better access to, and more effective use of, data on comparable transactions between unrelated parties, including parties unrelated to the taxpayer. The committee also expects that such considerations may include an analysis of the impact that the Tax Court's practices concerning discovery have on compliance with section 482. With respect to coordination of section 482 administration with that of other laws, the committee expects that the report will describe coordination efforts between U.S. and foreign tax agencies, and those between the IRS and other Federal agencies that administer related, non-tax laws.

The committee expects that in connection with the study of administrative changes described above, the IRS will modify its current regulations with respect to priorities in applying the various regulatory methods (e.g., comparable uncontrolled price method, resale price method, cost plus method) for determining an arm's length price for tangible property transfers, to the extent such priorities are not reasonably justified. In addition, the committee expects that the IRS will modify its Forms 5471 and 5472 to the extent deemed appropriate to ensure that adequate documentation or other information regarding the taxpayer's related party pricing policy or methods are provided to the IRS on those forms or can be made available to the IRS in a timely manner.

Effective Date

The bill provides for this report, along with such recommendations as the Secretary may deem advisable, to be submitted to the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance no later than March 1, 1992.

4. Use of Excess Pension Plan Assets (secs. 7431-7435 of the bill and sec. 4980 and new sec. 420 of the Code).

Present Law

Under present law, pension plan assets generally may not revert to an employer prior to the termination of the plan and the satisfaction of all plan liabilities. Certain procedural requirements also must be met. Any assets that revert to the employer upon such termination are includible in the gross income of the employer and subject to a 15-percent excise tax (sec. 4980).

Subject to certain limitations, an employer may under present law make deductible contributions to a defined benefit pension plan up to the full funding limitation. The full funding limitation is generally defined as the excess, if any, of (1) the lesser of (a) the accrued liability under the plan and (b) 150 percent of the plan's current liability, over (2) the lesser of (a) the fair market value of the plan's assets, and (b) the actuarial value of the plan's assets.

Under present law, a pension plan may provide medical benefits to retirees through a section 401(h) account that is part of such plan. The assets of a pension plan may not be transferred to a section 401(h) account without disqualifying the pension plan, subjecting the amounts transferred to income tax and the reversion excise tax, and violating title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended (ERISA).

Reasons for Change

The committee believes it is appropriate to provide a temporary rule allowing employers to transfer assets set aside for pension benefits to a section 401(h) account for retiree health benefits as long as the security of employees' pension benefits is not thereby threatened.

The excise tax on reversions was originally enacted because the Congress believed that it was appropriate to limit the tax incentives available to an employer that maintains a pension plan. Congress recognized that contributions to such plans, as well as the earnings on such contributions, are intended to provide for the pension benefits of plan participants. To the extent that amounts in such plans are not used for pension purposes, Congress believed that the tax treatment of reversions should recognize that the tax on earnings on pension funds is deferred and, thus, the benefits of this treatment should be recaptured. In many cases, a 15-percent excise tax is not sufficient to recapture the tax benefits received. Therefore, the committee believes it is appropriate to increase the excise tax to better approximate the tax benefits of the income deferral. The committee also believes it is appropriate to structure the excise tax to provide an incentive for an employer terminating a defined benefit plan to maintain a qualified retirement plan following the termination or to provide benefit increases to plan participants before terminating the plan.

Explanation of Provisions

Reversions of excess pension assets

In general

Under the bill, the rate of the reversion excise tax is either 40 percent or 20 percent. The applicable rate depends, in part, on the actions of the employer in connection with the plan termination. The excise tax rate is 40 percent if the employer (1) does not establish or maintain a qualified replacement plan following the plan termination, or (2) provide certain pro-rata benefit increases in connection with the plan termination. If the employer maintains a qualified replacement plan or provides certain pro-rata benefit increases, the reversion excise tax rate is 20 percent. In addition, the excise tax is 20 percent in the case of an employer who, as of the plan termination date, is in bankruptcy liquidation under chapter 7 of title 11 of the United States Code or in liquidation under similar proceedings under State law.

Qualified replacement plan

The reversion tax is 20 percent if the employer establishes a qualified replacement plan in connection with the plan termination or maintains a qualified replacement plan following the plan termination. A qualified replacement plan is a qualified plan maintained by the employer which meets (1) a participation requirement, (2) an asset transfer requirement, and (3) in the case of a qualified replacement plan that is a defined contribution plan, certain allocation requirements. A qualified replacement plan can be either a defined contribution plan or a defined benefit pension plan. The Secretary of the Treasury may provide that 2 or more plans may be treated as 1 plan for purposes of determining whether there is a qualified replacement plan.

The participation requirement is satisfied if substantially all of the active participants in the terminated plan who are employees of the employer after the plan termination are active participants in the replacement plan. This requirement is designed to ensure that participants who were accruing benefits under the terminating plan continue to earn benefits under the replacement plan.

The asset transfer requirement is satisfied if, prior to any employer reversion, assets equal to 20 percent of the maximum reversion that could be received are transferred directly from the terminated plan to the replacement plan.

The amount required to be transferred is reduced by the amount of the present value of increases in participants' (including both active and nonactive participants) vested accrued benefits that are made pursuant to a plan amendment adopted during the 60-day period ending on the date of plan termination and which take effect on the termination date. Any such increases in vested benefits must, of course, comply with the normally applicable qualification requirements.

In the case of a replacement plan that is a defined contribution plan, the transferred assets (and income thereon) are required to be (1) allocated to participants and beneficiaries in the plan year in which the transfer occurs, or (2) credited to a suspense account and allocated from that account no less rapidly than ratably over a period not to exceed 7 years (including the year of the transfer). Income credited on assets in the suspense account is to be allocated no less rapidly than ratably over the remainder of the 7-year period.

cated to participant accounts for purposes of the limits on contributions and benefits (sec. 415). The 7-year allocation period can be extended only to the extent that such limits prevent the allocation from taking place during such period. In determining whether such limits preclude transferred assets from being allocated, it is intended that transferred assets are treated as the first annual additions allocated to participant accounts for any year. Amounts that cannot be allocated during such period due to the application of the section 415 limits on contributions and benefits are to be relocated to other plan participants at the end of the period. If all remaining amounts cannot be allocated due to application of the limits on contributions and benefits such amounts are to be allocated as soon as possible consistent with such limits and before any other amounts can be allocated.

In the event that the replacement plan terminates before the assets in the suspense account have been allocated, the remaining amount is to be allocated as of the termination date to participant accounts. Any amount that cannot be so allocated to a participant due to the limitations on contributions and benefits is to be reallocated to other participants. If such limits preclude the allocation of the entire amount remaining in the suspense account, then the amount that cannot be allocated is treated as an employer reversion and subject to the reversion excise tax and includible in gross income. Of course, in the case of a newly established plan, the present-law permanence requirement may in some circumstances adversely affect the qualified status of the plan if it is terminated before the end of the 7-year period.

Amounts transferred to a qualified replacement plan are not includible in the gross income of the employer and are not subject to the excise tax on reversions. The employer is not entitled to a deduction for amounts transferred to a qualified replacement plan.

The following example illustrates the application of the asset transfer rule. Assume that Employer A terminates a defined benefit pension plan and that, after satisfaction of all plan liabilities, the remaining assets in the plan are $100x. $20x is transferred to a defined contribution plan of the employer that qualifies as a qualified replacement plan. No benefit increases are provided in connection with the plan termination. The $20x transferred to the qualified replacement plan is not includible in the gross income of the employer nor subject to the reversion excise tax. The employer is liable for an excise tax of $16x [.20 x ($100x - $20x)], and $80x is includible in the gross income of the employer.

The reversion excise tax is also 20 percent if the employer provides certain pro-rata benefit increases to plan participants (including both active and nonactive participants) as part of the plan termination transaction. Under this rule, the vested accrued benefits of all participants under the terminating plan must be increased effective as of the termination date so that the total present value of increased benefits (determined on a termination basis) is at least 15 percent of the maximum employer reversion which could be received. The present value of the increase in the nonforfeitable benefit of each participant is to be equal to the amount which bears the same ratio to the total present value of benefit increases as the participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit bears to the total nonforfeitable accrued benefits under the terminated plan. In no event can the aggregate increase in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of nonactive participants as of the termination date exceed 40 percent of the minimum benefit increase possible under the provision. Benefit increases that would exceed this 40 percent limitation are to be allocated among the active plan participants on a pro-rata basis.

For purposes of the provision, a nonactive participant is (1) a participant in pay status as of the termination date, (2) a beneficiary who has a vested benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, or (3) a participant who has a vested right to a benefit under the plan as of the termination date and who separated from service during the period beginning 3 years before the termination date and ending on the date of final distribution of plan assets.

All benefit increases and allocations of transferred assets made in accordance with the provision are subject to the limitations on contributions and benefits (sec. 415) and the nondiscrimination rules (sec. 401(a)(4)), as well as other generally applicable qualification rules.

Under present law, the limitations on contributions and benefits are phased in over 10 years of plan participation. The Secretary of the Treasury has the authority to provide that this rule applies separately with respect to each change in benefit structure of a plan. The Secretary has provided that this rule generally applies to all changes in benefit structures, including benefit increases on plan termination (I.R.S. Notice 89-45). The bill provides that, except as provided by the Secretary of the Treasury in the future, the 10-year rule does not apply to benefit increases pursuant to the provisions of the bill, if the benefit increases do not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees. It is intended that the Secretary may apply a more stringent test under this provision than the general nondiscrimination rule (sec. 401(a)(4)).

The bill provides that certain of the reversion excise tax provisions create specific fiduciary obligations under ERISA if an employer elects to establish or maintain a qualified replacement plan or to increase benefits pursuant to the reversion excise tax rules. These specific duties are in addition to the generally applicable fiduciary obligations. These specific duties apply only if the employer elects to establish or maintain a qualified replacement plan or provide benefit increases under the excise tax rules; the employer may elect to pay the 40-percent excise tax.

Under the bill, if the employer elects to establish a qualified replacement plan, a fiduciary of the terminating plan is required to discharge his or her fiduciary duties under titles I and IV of ERISA in accordance with the asset transfer provisions (with respect to transfer of assets from the terminating plan). If the employer elects to increase benefits under the excise tax provisions, the fiduciary of the terminating plan is required to discharge his or her fiduciary duties in accordance with the benefit increase provisions of the excise tax rules. Similarly, a fiduciary of a qualified replacement plan is required to discharge his or her fiduciary duties under titles I and IV of ERISA in accordance with the participation requirement, the transfer provision with respect to receipt of assets from the terminating plan, and the allocation requirements with respect to participants in the qualified replacement plan. These duties relate to the excise tax provisions as in effect on January 1, 1991.

The bill also amends title IV of ERISA to provide that the ability of the employer to obtain residual assets is subject to the fiduciary requirements described above and the excise tax provisions.

Transfer of excess pension plan assets to retiree health accounts

Under the bill, qualified transfers of excess assets are permitted from the pension assets in a defined benefit pension plan (other than a multiemployer plan) to the section 401(h) account that is a part of such plan. The assets transferred are not includible in the gross income of the employer and are not subject to the excise tax on reversions. The defined benefit pension plan does not fail to satisfy the qualification requirements (sec. 401(a)) solely on account of the transfer and does not violate the present-law requirement that medical benefits under a section 401(h) account be subordinate to the retirement benefits under the plan. In addition, the transfer is not a prohibited transaction and does not violate other specific fiduciary requirements of title I of ERISA.

In order to qualify for the treatment described above (i.e., to be a qualified transfer): (1) except with respect to a special rule for 1990 expenses, a transfer of assets to a section 401(h) account may be made only once in any taxable year of the employer and may be made only in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990, and before January 1, 1996; (2) the transferred assets (and income thereon) are required to be used to pay certain retiree health benefit liabilities; (3) certain vesting requirements must be satisfied; (4) certain minimum benefit requirements must be satisfied; and (5) the amount transferred cannot exceed certain limits. Notice of the transfer must also be provided. The transfer may not contravene any other provision of law.

The special rule for 1990 provides that a transfer is treated as a qualified transfer if the transfer (1) is made with respect to current retiree health liabilities for the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, (2) is made before the earlier of (a) the due date (including extensions) of the employer's tax return for such taxable year or (b) the date the return is filed, and (3) does not exceed the employer's expenditures for current retiree health liabilities for such taxable year. The employer may make 2 qualified transfers in the 1991 taxable year if one of the transfers is for 1990 expenses. If an employer transfers assets for 1990 expenses, then additional vesting requirements apply. The employer's otherwise allowable deductions for the 1990 taxable year are reduced by the amount of the qualified transfer made to reimburse 1990 expenses.

Use of transferred assets

Assets transferred in a qualified transfer (and any income thereon) are required to be used to pay qualified current retiree health liabilities (either directly or through reimbursement) for the taxable year of the transfer. In general, qualified current retiree health liabilities are defined as the amount of retiree health benefits (including administrative expenses) which would have been deductible by the employer with respect to applicable health benefits provided during the taxable year, determined as if the benefits were provided directly by an employer on a cash accounting basis. Transferred amounts are generally required to benefit all participants in the pension plan who are entitled upon retirement to receive retiree medical benefits (other than key employees) through the section 401(h) account. Retiree health benefits of key employees (sec. 416(i)(1)) may not be paid (directly or indirectly) out of transferred assets.

Amounts not used to pay qualified retiree health liabilities for the taxable year of the transfer are to be returned at the end of the taxable year to the general assets of the plan. Amounts so transferred are not includible in the gross income of the employer, but are subject to the 20-percent excise tax on reversions. The 40-percent reversion tax does not apply.

Vesting requirements

In order for the transfer to be qualified, accrued retirement benefits under the pension plan must be nonforfeitable as if the plan terminated on the date of transfer. In addition, the benefits of plan participants who separated from service before the transfer but during the one-year period preceding the transfer also must be nonforfeitable as if the plan terminated immediately before the separation from service.

In the case of a transfer pursuant to the special rule for 1990, the vesting requirement is satisfied if, with respect to any participant who separated from service during the 1990 taxable year, the participant's vested benefits are recomputed as if the plan had terminated immediately before the participant's separation from service.

Minimum cost requirement

An employer that makes a transfer to a section 401(h) account under the proposal is to maintain employer-provided retiree health expenditures for covered retirees at a minimum dollar level for the taxable year of the transfer and the following 4 taxable years. The minimum level is equal to the higher of the applicable employer cost for each of the 2 taxable years preceding the year of the transfer. If a taxable year is in 2 or more overlapping minimum cost periods, the requirement is to be applied by taking into account the highest applicable cost.

The applicable employer cost for a year is generally determined by dividing (1) the qualified current retiree health liabilities for the year, by (2) the number of individuals who (immediately before the transfer or, if there was no transfer, as of the end of the taxable year) were entitled to pension benefits under the plan and retiree health benefits. For this purpose qualified current retiree health liabilities are determined without reduction for liabilities previously funded. Each health plan or arrangement under which applicable health benefits are provided are required to contain the minimum cost requirement. An employer is permitted to apply the minimum cost requirement under the bill separately with respect to those covered retirees who are eligible for medicare and those that are not.

The minimum cost requirement is illustrated by the following examples.

Example 1.—Assume Employer A maintains a defined benefit pension plan that contains a section 401(h) account, and the employer makes a qualified transfer to the 401(h) account in taxable year 1991. In taxable years 1989 and 1990, qualified current retiree health liabilities (determined as described above) were $200,000 and $250,000, respectively. In such years, the number of pension plan participants entitled to receive retiree health benefits was 200.

The applicable employer cost is $1,000 ($200,000 divided by 200) for the 1989 taxable year and is $1,250 ($250,000 divided by 200) for 1990. Thus, the minimum employer cost of health benefits that must be provided to covered retirees is $1,250, for taxable years 1991 through 1995 (if no further transfers occur).

Example 2.—Same as Example 1, except that the applicable cost for the 1991 taxable year is $1,500 and the employer makes a qualified transfer in 1992. The minimum benefit requirement for taxable years 1992 through 1996 is therefore $1,500 (unless further transfers occur that result in a higher applicable cost).

Limits on amounts transferable

The maximum amount of excess assets that may be transferred in a taxable year cannot exceed the amount reasonably estimated to be the amount the employer will pay out of the section 401(h) account during the taxable year for qualified current retiree health liabilities. In determining the amount that may be transferred, the employer is to consider earnings that will be attributable to such assets subsequent to the transfer.

The amount of qualified current retiree health liabilities is generally reduced to the extent that the employer has previously made a contribution to a section 401(h) account or a welfare benefit fund (e.g., voluntary employees' beneficiary association (VEBA)) relating to the same liabilities. The portion of existing reserves in a welfare benefits fund that relate to qualified current retiree health liabilities is determined on a pro-rata basis or in accordance with such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The retired employees who may be taken into account in calculating qualified current retiree health liabilities are limited to those who are eligible for retirement benefits under the defined benefit pension plan containing the separate account and eligible for retiree health benefits (other than key employees).

Definition of excess assets

Under the proposal, excess assets are defined to be the excess of the value of plan assets (calculated as under the full funding limitation) over the greater of (1) the lesser of (a) 150 percent of current liability or (b) the accrued liability under the plan, or (2) 125 percent of current liability. Thus, for example, in the case of a plan subject to the accrued liability full funding limitation, the value of assets remaining in the pension plan following a transfer must be at least the greater of the plan's accrued liability and 125 percent of current liability. The calculation of excess assets is generally made as of the most recent valuation date preceding the transfer. However, if the fiduciary knows or has reason to know that use of the most recent plan valuation date will not accurately reflect any increased liabilities the plan may experience during the year (e.g., if benefit increases will take effect or early retirement incentives may be offered) a transfer based on the most recent plan valuation date may not be consistent with the fiduciary duties of title I of ERISA.

Other limitations

The employer is not entitled to a deduction when amounts are transferred into the section 401(h) account or when such amounts (or income on such amounts) are used to pay retiree health benefits. No deduction or contribution is allowed the employer for the provision of retiree health benefits (whether directly, through a 401(h) account, or a welfare benefit fund) except to the extent that the total of such payments for qualified current retiree health liabilities exceed the amount transferred to the section 401(h) account (including any income thereon). An employer may not make after December 31, 1990, any contributions to a health benefits account or a welfare benefit fund with respect to qualified current retiree health liabilities for which transferred assets (and income thereon) are required to be used under the proposal until after such assets (and income) have been totally expended from the account.

Assets transferred after the valuation date for the plan year (and income thereon) are required to be treated, for purposes of the full funding limitation, as plan assets as of the valuation date for the next year. The transfer is to be treated as a net experience loss for funding purposes, except that the amortization period is 10 years rather than 5 years.

Fiduciary rules

A transfer made in accordance with the provision is not a violation of the fiduciary duties under ERISA.

Notice

The bill amends title I of ERISA to require that notice of a proposed transfer be provided to the Secretary of Treasury, the Secretary of Labor, plan participants, and employee representatives (if any) at least 60 days prior to the transfer.

Effective Date

The provision permitting the transfer of excess pension assets to pay current retiree health benefits is effective for transfers occurring in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990, and before January 1, 1996.

The provisions relating to reversions apply to reversions occurring after September 30, 1990, other than (1) in the case of plans subject to title IV of ERISA, reversions pursuant to a termination, notice of which was provided under such title to participants (or if no participants, the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation) on or before such date, and (2) in the case of plans not subject to title IV of ERISA, but subject to title I, a notice of intent to reduce future benefit accruals was provided to plan participants on or before such date.

5. Certain Corporate Tax Provisions.

a. Impose corporate tax on divisive transactions in connection with certain changes of ownership (sec. 7441 of the bill and sec. 355 of the Code).

Present Law

Tax-free divisive transactions in general

A corporation generally must recognize gain on the sale or distribution of appreciated property, including stock of a subsidiary. However, distributions of subsidiary stock in divisive transactions governed by section 355 are tax-free to both the distributing corporation and to the distributee shareholders.

A distribution generally is tax-free under section 355 if, among other requirements, the following principal requirements are met: (1) the transaction is not used as a device for the distribution of earnings and profits; (2) the distributing corporation and the controlled corporation each are engaged immediately after the distribution in the active conduct of a trade or business, and meet certain 5-year requirements regarding the active conduct of the business before the transaction; (3) all of the controlled corporation's stock is distributed, or at least 80 percent is distributed and the retention of the balance does not have as a principal purpose the avoidance of Federal income tax; (4) the transaction satisfies a corporate business purpose requirement; and (5) the shareholders have continuity of proprietary interest after the transaction.

If the applicable requirements are met, a corporation with one or more subsidiaries or divisions, each conducting active businesses, generally may distribute any or all of them as separate corporations to its shareholders under section 355 without recognizing corporate-level gain on the appreciation in the value (if any) of the subsidiaries or divisions incorporated for this purpose. The distribution is not required to be pro-rata to all shareholders; the distributee shareholders in a non-pro-rata distribution normally surrender stock of the distributing corporation equal in value to the stock they receive in the distribution.

The distributee shareholders apportion their basis in the stock of the distributing corporation that they held prior to the distribution between the new subsidiary stock received and any stock of the distributing corporation that they retain. As a result, subject to the continuity of proprietary interest requirement, a shareholder that has recently acquired stock of the distributing corporation may obtain a basis in the stock of any subsidiary distributed in a section 355 transaction that is significantly in excess of the distributing corporation's basis in such stock.

Present law imposes a 5-year holding period requirement for any corporate distributee that has acquired 80 percent of the stock of a corporation ("target"), unless the stock was acquired solely in nontaxable transactions. If the 5-year holding period is not met, distributions of lower-tier subsidiaries by the target corporation will not be tax-free under section 355.[66]

The five-year holding period rule does not apply, however, so long as the purchaser is not a corporation, or the purchaser acquired less than 80 percent of the distributing corporation's stock. It is unclear what circumstances will cause the transaction to be treated as if the purchaser of the stock had purchased the subsidiary directly in a taxable transaction.[67]

Reasons for Change

The committee is concerned that some corporate taxpayers may attempt, under present-law rules governing divisive transactions, to dispose of subsidiaries in transactions that resemble sales, or to obtain a fair market value stepped-up basis for any future dispositions, without incurring corporate-level tax. The avoidance of corporate level tax is inconsistent with the repeal of the General Utilities doctrine as part of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.[68]

Under the present-law rules, individual purchasers, or corporate purchasers of less than 80 percent, of the stock of a parent corporation may attempt to utilize section 355 to acquire a subsidiary (or a division incorporated for this purpose) from the parent without the parent incurring any corporate-level tax. The purchaser may acquire stock of the parent equal in value to the value of the desired subsidiary or division, and later surrender that stock for stock of the subsidiary, in a transaction intended to qualify as a non-pro-rata tax-free divisive transaction. Alternatively, the transaction might be structured as a surrender of the parent stock by all shareholders other than the acquiror, in exchange for a distribution (intended to be tax-free) of all subsidiaries or activities other than those the acquiror desires.

In addition, a non-corporate purchaser, or a corporate purchaser of less than 80 percent of the stock of another corporation, may attempt to utilize section 355 to obtain a stepped up fair market value basis in a subsidiary of an acquired corporation, enabling a subsequent disposition of that subsidiary without a corporate-level tax.[69]

The provisions for tax-free divisive transactions under section 355 were a limited exception to the repeal of the General Utilities doctrine, intended to permit historic shareholders to continue to carry on their historic corporate businesses in separate corporations. The committee believes that the benefit of tax-free treatment should not apply where the divisive transaction, combined with a stock purchase resulting in a change of ownership, in effect results in the disposition of a significant part of the historic shareholders' interests in one or more of the divided corporations.

The present-law provisions granting tax-free treatment at the corporate level are particularly troublesome because they may offer taxpayers an opportunity to avoid the general rule that corporate-level gain is recognized when an asset (including stock of a subsidiary) is disposed of. The committee is especially concerned about the possibility for the distributing corporation to avoid corporate-level tax on the transfer of a subsidiary. Therefore, although the provision does not affect shareholder treatment if section 355 is otherwise available, it does impose tax at the corporate level, in light of the potential avoidance of corporate tax on what is in effect a sale of a subsidiary.

The bill is not intended to limit in any way the continuing Treasury Department authority to issue regulations to prevent the avoidance of the repeal of the General Utilities doctrine through any provision of law or regulations, including section 355.

Explanation of Provision

In general

The bill generally requires recognition of corporate-level gain (but does not require recognition by the distributee shareholders) on a distribution of subsidiary stock qualifying under section 355 if, immediately after the distribution, a shareholder holds a 50-percent or greater interest in the distributing corporation or a distributed subsidiary that is attributable to stock that was acquired by purchase (as defined in the bill) within the preceding 5-year period. Thus, for example, under the provision, the distributing corporation will recognize gain on the stock of a distributed subsidiary, if a person purchases distributing corporation stock, and within 5 years, 50-percent or more of the subsidiary stock is distributed to that person in exchange for the purchased stock. The distributing corporation will recognize gain as if it had sold the distributed subsidiary to the distributee at its fair market value.

In determining whether a person holds a 50 percent or greater interest, related persons are treated as one person. Thus, for example, a corporation and its more than 50-percent-owned subsidiary (or a husband and wife) are treated as one person for this purpose. The related party rules applied for this purpose are the rules of sections 707(b)(1) and 267(b), substituting 10 percent for 50 percent.

In addition, persons acting pursuant to a plan or arrangement with respect to acquisitions of stock in the distributing or any controlled corporation are treated as one person for purposes of determining whether a shareholder holds a 50-percent or greater interest.

Attribution from entities and "deemed purchase" rule

In determining whether a person holds stock in any corporation, the rules of section 318(a)(2) shall apply, substituting 10 percent for 50 percent in section 318(a)(2)(C). If any person acquires by purchase an interest in an entity and any stock held by such entity is considered held by such person under the foregoing attribution rules, such person is treated as acquiring such stock by purchase on the date of the purchase of the interest in the entity. Under these rules, a person who is treated as holding stock by virtue of an interest in an entity is treated as acquiring such stock, for purposes of the 5-year rule of the provision, on the later of the date the stock is treated as acquired by the entity or the date the person acquired the interest in the entity.

Disqualified distribution

The bill provides for recognition of gain by the distributing corporation in the case of a disqualified distribution of stock or securities in a controlled corporation. For this [66] Congress enacted this provision in 1987 in connection with a provision explicitly denying the use of the consolidated return regulations by certain 80-percent corporate acquirors to obtain a fair market value basis for subsequent "bust-up" dispositions of target subsidiaries (so-called "mirror transactions").

[67] In certain situations, it has been held that a shareholder who recently purchased stock may not be treated as an historic shareholder in a tax-free reorganization, but rather as a purchaser in a taxable transaction. See, e.g., Yoc Heating v. Commissioner, 61 T.C. 168 (1973). On the other hand, in another context (under rule in effect prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1986, permitting certain nonliquidating distributions to be tax-free to the distributing corporation), it has been held that step transaction concepts need not always apply to cause a distribution of a subsidiary to a new stockholder, in exchange for his recently purchased stock, to be treated as a taxable sale of the subsidiary by the corporation to that new stockholder. Esmark, Inc. v. Commissioner, 90 T.C. 171 (1988), aff'd per curiam, 886 F.2d 1318 (7th Cir. 1989).

[68] The Tax Reform Act of 1986 (the "1986 Act") extended the rule requiring corporate recognition of gain on distributions or sales of appreciated property to liquidating and nonliquidating distributions to the extent they had not been taxed under prior law, thus repealing the so-called General Utilities doctrine (see General Utilities & Operating Co. v. Helvering, 296 U.S. 200 (1935)). Although the 1986 Act retained certain exceptions to the rule in the case of limited corporate restructurings, it also granted the Treasury Department regulatory authority to prevent the avoidance of the purposes of the rules taxing corporate sales or distributions of appreciated property through any provision of law or regulations (including section 355). The Treasury Department has issued certain regulations exercising this authority in connection with certain aspects of the consolidated return regulations. To date, however, no regulations have been issued addressing the application of the repeal of the General Utilities doctrine to the tax-free distribution provisions of section 355.

[69] Such transactions are similar to the so-called "mirror transactions" that Congress addressed in 1987.

purpose, a disqualified distribution is any section 355 distribution if, immediately after the distribution, any person holds disqualified stock in either the distributing corporation or any distributed controlled corporation constituting a 50-percent or greater interest in such corporation.

Disqualified stock

The bill defines disqualified stock to include any stock in the distributing corporation or any controlled corporation acquired by purchase (as defined in the bill) after October 9, 1990 and during the 5-year period ending on the date of the distribution. In addition, disqualified stock includes stock in any controlled corporation received in the distribution, to the extent attributable to distributions on stock in the distributing corporation acquired by purchase after October 9, 1990 and during the 5-year period ending on the date of the distribution.

Thus, for example, if a person acquires by purchase a 20 percent interest in the stock of a corporation and a 10 percent interest in the stock of its subsidiary, and 40 percent or more of the stock of the subsidiary is distributed to him within 5 years in exchange for his 20 percent interest in the distributing corporation, then under the provision the distributing corporation must recognize gain with respect to the distributed stock of the subsidiary because all 50 percent of the stock of the subsidiary held by such person is disqualified stock.

Fifty percent or greater interest

The bill provides that a 50-percent or greater interest means the ownership of stock possessing at least 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote or at least 50 percent of the total value of all shares of all classes of stock. Whether a shareholder owns a 50-percent or greater interest is determined immediately following the distribution of stock (whether to that shareholder, or to other shareholders). In applying the 50-percent or greater ownership test, all stock that the shareholder acquires after the effective date by purchase, as that term is defined for purposes of this provision, is taken into account

Stock is generally considered acquired by purchase for purposes of this provision if it is acquired in any transaction in which the acquiror's basis of the stock is not determined in whole or in part by reference to the adjusted basis of such stock in the hands of the person from whom acquired and is not determined under section 1014(a). Thus, for example, stock acquired in a section 1032 contribution to capital would be acquired by purchase. Further, stock acquired by a partner in a section 732(b) distribution from a partnership is acquired by purchase because the partner's basis in the stock is determined by reference to the partner's basis in the liquidated partnership interest.

Except as provided in regulations, stock is not generally considered acquired by purchase if it is acquired in an exchange to which section 351, 354, 355 or 356 applies. As one example, assume that A has owned stock of P for more than 5 years and acquires distributing corporation stock and boot in exchange for his P stock in a statutory merger qualifying under section 368(a)(1)(A). The committee intends that the Secretary may issue regulations providing that the distributing corporation stock acquired by A will be treated as acquired by purchase to the extent of the gain recognized by A in the merger. Similarly, if A had instead acquired the stock of P within 5 years of the merger by purchase, to the extent gain is not recognized in the merger, A may be treated as acquiring the distributing stock by purchase at the time A purchased his P stock (or, in appropriate cases, at the time of the merger).

Stock acquired in an exchange to which section 351 applies is treated as acquired by purchase to the extent that such stock is acquired in exchange for any cash, cash item, marketable security, or debt of the transferor.

If stock is acquired in a carryover basis transaction (including a gift, tax-free reorganization or liquidation, contribution to a partnership, or distribution of property from a partnership under section 732(a)) from a transferor who, directly or indirectly, acquired the stock by purchase, the acquiror is generally considered to have acquired the stock by purchase on the date that the transferor actually acquired it by purchase. However the time of the purchase could be later in some circumstances. As one example, the time of purchase could be later under the "deemed purchase" rules described above, if the stock is acquired in a carryover basis transaction from an entity whose holdings were attributed to the acquiror and the acquiror had acquired his interest in the entity by purchase at a date later than the date the entity was considered to have purchased the stock. As another example, to the extent gain is recognized in a carryover basis transaction any stock treated as purchased under regulations may be treated as acquired by purchase at the time of the transaction.

The Treasury department has authority to exclude transactions from the definition of a purchase to the extent consistent with the purposes of the provision.

Gain is recognized under the provision in the case of a section 355 distribution within 5 years after a shareholder acquires stock by purchase (if the shareholder meets the 50-percent or more ownership test immediately after the distribution). The 5-year period is consistent with the 5-year active business requirement and the 5-year limitation period applicable to 80-percent-or-more corporate acquirors, and reflects the committee's belief that an acquisition by purchase and a distribution of subsidiary stock within 5 years may reasonably be considered to be related transactions that, in economic substance, are the equivalent of the sale of the subsidiary stock.

Under the bill, for purposes of determining whether stock is acquired during the 5-year period ending on the date of the distribution, the holding period of such stock is reduced for any period in which the holder's risk of loss with respect to such stock is directly or indirectly substantially diminished by any device or transaction, including: a short sale; the holding by any person of a put, a call, or any other option; the use of any special class of stock; or any device limiting risk from any portion of the activities of the corporation. It is expected that all the facts and circumstances relating to the stock and the corporate activities, as well as any other arrangements related to the stockholdings, will be scrutinized to determine whether the holder's risk of loss has been diminished.

If stock grants special rights or bears special risks with respect to the earnings or the other aspects of less than all of the activities of a corporation, such stock shall be considered to diminish substantially the holder's risk of loss with respect to some of the activities of the corporation for purposes of this provision and the holding period of such stock shall be suspended. One example of such stock is so-called "tracking stock" that grants particular rights or bears particular risks with respect to the earnings or other attributes of less than all the activities of a corporation or any of its subsidiaries.

If a person acquires shares of more than one class of stock, some but not all of which has a suspended holding period, it is expected that the respective values of such shares will be closely scrutinized to assure that the purposes of this section are not avoided by allocation of more or less than fair market value to shares of any class of stock.

The Treasury Department has general regulatory authority to prevent the avoidance of the purposes of the provision through any means, including through the use of related persons, pass-thru or intermediary entities, options, or other arrangements.

In determining whether a shareholder has acquired by purchase a 50-percent or greater interest, it is intended that pursuant to the Treasury Department's general regulatory authority to prevent avoidance of the provision, an option to acquire stock may be treated as exercised if that would cause the shareholder to have a 50-percent or greater interest. Thus, as one example, if a person acquires 10 percent of the stock of a distributing corporation by purchase within five years prior to a pro-rata distribution of the subsidiary, and at the time of the distribution or immediately thereafter the person has an option to acquire another 40 percent of the distributed subsidiary, the person may be deemed to have acquired by purchase 50 percent of the stock of the subsidiary for purposes of the provision and the distribution would be a disqualified distributuion taxed at the corporate level. The same result would follow if the option were to acquire another 40 percent of the stock of the distributing rather than the distributed corporation.

The purposes of the provision are not generally violated if there is a distribution of a controlled corporation within 5 years of an acquisition by purchase and the effect of the distribution is neither (i) to increase ownership in the distributing corporation or any controlled corporation by persons who have directly or indirectly acquired stock within the prior five years, nor (ii) to provide a basis step-up with respect to the stock of any controlled corporation.

For example, assume that an acquiror acquires by purchase 60 percent of corporation P, which has a first-tier and a second-tier subsidiary. Further assume that within 5 years after the acquiror's 60-percent acquisition of P corporation, the first-tier subsidiary distributes all the stock of the second-tier subsidiary to P in a transaction otherwise qualifying under section 355. Although the distribution would be a disqualified distribution under the basic operation of the provision, it is expected that regulations will provide that the provision does not apply to require the first-tier subsidiary to recognize corporate-level gain on the distribution. However, if the second-tier subsidiary were further distributed pro-rata to all of P's shareholders, so that the 60-percent acquiror obtained a stepped-up basis in the stock of the subsidiary immediately after the distribution, then corporate level gain would be recognized on the distribution of the subsidiary to its shareholders. Similarly, if the second-tier subsidiary were distributed to the acquiror in redemption of its P stock, corporate level gain would be recognized on that distribution.

By contrast, assume that 50 percent of the P stock is owned by a corporation ("Newco"), the remaining P stock is owned by unrelated persons, and A purchases all the stock of Newco from the Newco shareholders. If within 5 years of A's purchase Newco exchanges its P stock for stock of the first-tier subsidiary of P, P would recognize corporate-level gain on the distribution because A's indirect interest in the P subsidiary was increased as a result of the distribution.

Effective Date

The provision applies to distributions of stock after October 9, 1990. In determining whether the distribution occurs within 5 years after stock is acquired by purchase, only stock acquired by purchase after October 9, 1990 is taken into account.

Transitional relief is provided if the acquisition of stock by purchase after October 9, 1990 (including the subsequent distribution to the holder of the stock) is pursuant to a binding written contract (including a binding contract evidenced through a corporate charter, stock certificate, or other corporate instruments governing the terms of stock) in effect on October 9, 1990, and at all times thereafter before such acquisition. Transitional relief is also provided if the acquisition of stock by purchase after October 9, 1990 is pursuant to a tender offer filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission before October 10, 1990, or pursuant to an offer the material terms of which were described in a written public announcement before October 10, 1990, which was the subject of a prior filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, and which is subsequently filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission before January 1, 1991. It is intended that such a tender offer be in effect at the time of the acquisition. Stock with respect to which transitional relief is provided under these rules is treated as acquired before October 10, 1990.

b. Modify treatment of preferred stock issued with a redemption premium (sec. 7442 of the bill and sec. 305 of the Code).

Present Law

Treatment of preferred stock issued with a redemption premium

A stockholder is deemed to receive constructive distributions with respect to preferred stock if the stock may be redeemed after a specified time at a price that exceeds the issue price by more than a reasonable redemption premium. Under the present regulations, a redemption premium is considered to be reasonable if it is in the nature of a penalty for a premature redemption and if such premium is not in excess of the amount the corporation would be required to pay for the right to make such premature redemption under market conditions existing at the time of issuance. In addition, the regulations state that a redemption premium not in excess of 10 percent of the issue price on stock that is not redeemable for 5 years from the date of issue is considered to be reasonable (Treas. Reg. sec. 1.305-5(b)(2)).

If preferred stock is considered to have an unreasonable redemption premium, the portion of the premium that is considered to be unreasonable is deemed to be distributed to the preferred stockholder ratably over the time during which such stock cannot be called for redemption. Thus, if preferred stock that is issued with an unreasonable redemption premium also is callable throughout its term, no part of the premium is included in the holder's income until redemption (even if such call right is never exercised).

Treatment of debt issued with original issue discount

If a debt instrument is issued with a stated redemption price at maturity in excess of its issue price, such instrument is considered to be issued with original issue discount (OID). An instrument is not considered to have OID if the stated redemption price at maturity of the instrument exceeds its issue price by an amount that is less than the product of: (1) one-quarter of one percent of the stated redemption price and (2) the number of complete years to maturity. The holder of an OID instrument includes the amount of OID in gross income over the term of the instrument on an economic accrual basis.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that income from a financial instrument that is payable on a deferred basis generally is better measured by requiring the accrual of such income on an economic basis over the period during which payment is deferred. Accordingly, the committee believes that the economic accrual rules applicable to debt instruments issued with OID also should generally apply to certain preferred stock issued with a redemption premium if the stock will be redeemed, or if it can reasonably be assumed that the stock will be redeemed, on a fixed date. Also, the committee believes that certain preferred stock issued with a redemption premium resembles debt issued at a discount.

The committee believes that it is appropriate to allow a higher threshold for purposes of determining whether callable preferred stock is subject to these new rules because the decision to redeem the stock rests with the issuer, and not the holder, of the stock.

Explanation of Provision

General rule

The bill generally requires the entire amount of a redemption premium on certain preferred stock to be treated as being distributed to the holders of such preferred stock on an economic accrual basis over the period that the stock is outstanding (the economic accrual rule). An instrument generally will be considered to have a redemption premium for this purpose if the redemption price at maturity exceeds the issue price by an amount that equals or exceeds the product of: (1) one-quarter of one percent of the redemption price and (2) the number of complete years to maturity (the OID de minimis rule).

The economic accrual rule and the OID de minimis rule apply to preferred stock that is subject to a mandatory redemption or that is puttable by the holder. The redemption premium on preferred stock that is subject to a mandatory redemption or that is puttable will not fail to be subject to the economic accrual rule and the OID de minimis rule merely because the stock is also callable at the issuer's option.

The committee understands that Treasury regulations will provide special rules consistent with the OID rules in order to determine the maturity date and price of puttable preferred stock.[70]

Special rules for callable preferred stock

In general, the OID de minimis rule will not apply to preferred stock that is callable solely at the option of the issuer (unless such stock is subject to a mandatory redemption or is puttable). Nonetheless, the economic accrual rule will apply to the entire call premium on such stock if such premium is considered to be unreasonable under regulations in effect without regard to this provision. In such cases, except as provided in regulations, the entire call premium will be accrued over the period of time during which the preferred stock cannot be called for redemption.

Stock that is subject to mandatory redemption (or is puttable) and is also callable would be tested under both the OID de minimis rule and the rule of the regulations in effect without regard to this provision (i.e., the mandatory redemption or put premium would be tested under the OID de minimis rule and the call premium would be tested under regulations in effect without regard to this provision). If one or more of the premiums is less than the amount considered de minimis under such tests, then accrual would not be required for such premium or premiums. If more than one premium exceeds the applicable de minimis rule, the committee intends that regulations will provide rules for appropriate accrual.

Other matters

The committee does not intend to limit the authority of the Secretary and the IRS regarding the proper treatment of redemption premiums on preferred stock. Thus, the Secretary may determine what constitutes a redemption premium (or a disguised redemption premium). For example, if at the time of issuance of cumulative preferred stock there is no intention for dividends to be paid currently, the IRS may treat such dividends as a disguised redemption premium. In addition, the Secretary may treat stock that, in form, is merely callable as being subject to a mandatory redemption or a put if the existence of other arrangements effectively require the issuer to redeem the stock.

The committee intends that the economic accrual and OID de minimis rules generally apply as described above as of the effective date of the bill without regard to when the regulations are amended to reflect such rules. Except as provided herein, the committee does not intend to limit the authority of the Secretary to promulgate regulations relating to the accrual of redemption premiums on callable preferred stock. The committee expects such regulations to be prospective.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for stock issued on or after October 10, 1990, unless issued pursuant to a binding written contract in effect on that date and at all times thereafter until such issuance, or pursuant to an SEC or similar state registration statement [70] For example, present proposed regulations provide that the holder of a debt instrument with a put option that was issued for cash or publicly traded property will be presumed to exercise such option if the total yield on the instrument determined assuming that the holder exercises the put option exceeds the total yield on the instrument determined assuming that the holder does not exercise the option. (Prop. reg. sec. 1.1272-1(f)(4)(iii)).

filed before such date and the stock is issued within 90 days of the filing.

c. Expand and clarify information reporting and allocation rules for certain acquisitions (sec. 7443 of the bill and secs. 1060 and 338 of the Code).

Present Law

Information reporting rules

Special allocation and information reporting rules apply to applicable asset acquisitions (sec. 1060). An applicable asset acquisition means any transfer (1) of assets which constitute a trade or business and (2) with respect to which the transferee's basis is determined wholly by reference to the consideration paid for the assets.

For purposes of determining the transferee's basis in the assets and the transferor's gain or loss, the transferee and transferor must allocate the consideration received among the classes of assets transferred in accordance with the residual method. Pursuant to this allocation method, any consideration paid in excess of the fair market value of all assets (other than goodwill and going concern value) is allocated to nonamortizable goodwill or going concern value. The transferor and transferee also must report information concerning the amount of consideration and its allocation among the assets transferred.

The information reporting rules of section 1060 do not apply to an acquisition of a trade or business which is structured as a stock acquisition if the transferee does not elect under section 338 to treat the stock purchase as an asset acquisition for tax purposes. It is unclear, however, whether these reporting rules would apply to such a stock acquisition if a section 338 election or a section 338(h)(10) election [71] is made.

Taxpayers required to report consistent positions

Courts apply different standards in determining whether a party to a sale of a business can assert an allocation of consideration to assets that is inconsistent with the allocation contained in a written agreement. The Third Circuit has held that a party to a contract allocating a portion of the purchase price to a covenant not to compete can "challenge the tax consequences of his agreement as construed by the Commissioner only by adducing proof which in an action between the parties to the agreement would be admissible to alter that construction or to show its unenforceability because of mistake, undue influence, fraud, duress, etc." Commissioner v. Danielson, 378 F.2d 771, 775 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 858 (1967). In a similar situation, the Second Circuit required the parties to adduce "strong proof" in order to refute the price assigned by the sale contract to a covenant not to compete. See Ullman v. Commissioner, 264 F.2d 305, 308 (2d Cir. 1959).

Reasons for Change

The committee is aware that the allocation of consideration among the assets transferred in a transaction continues to be a troublesome area of the tax law in those situations in which the existing reporting and allocation rules do not apply. The committee believes that extending the rules to certain situations to which they do not currently apply will tend to reduce controversies between the IRS and taxpayers. In addition, extending the rules may diminish some of the "whipsaw" potential that results when the parties' allocations for tax reporting purposes are inconsistent.

Furthermore, the committee believes that is necessary to clarify the application of the reporting and allocation rules of section 1060 to stock purchases that are treated as asset purchases under section 338.

Finally, the committee believes it is appropriate to bind the parties to a transaction to any written agreement they reach regarding the allocation of the consideration to, or fair market value of, any of the specific asset(s) transferred. In such cases, the committee believes that taxpayers should not be allowed to take positions that are inconsistent with their written agreements.

Explanation of Provisions

Information reporting rules

The committee intends that the reporting and allocation rules of section 1060 not apply in any case in which a stock purchase is treated as an asset purchase under section 338. Thus, except as noted below, section 1060 is inapplicable even if an actual asset purchase of the same assets would constitute an applicable asset acquisition.

The bill provides that in the case of a stock purchase where a section 338(h)(10) election is made, the purchasing corporation and the selling consolidated group must report information with respect to the consideration received in the transaction at such times and in such manner as may be provided in regulations promulgated under section 338. The reporting rules apply regardless of whether the transaction constitutes an applicable asset acquisition within the meaning of section 1060.

In addition, the bill provides that where a person holds at least 10 percent of the value of an entity (immediately before the transaction) and both transfers an interest in the entity and, in connection therewith, enters into an employment contract, covenant not to compete, royalty or lease agreement or other agreement with the transferee, such person and the transferee must report information concerning the transaction at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may require. These reporting rules apply regardless of whether the transaction constitutes an applicable asset acquisition within the meaning of section 1060 or whether, in the case of a stock purchase, a section 338 election is made. In determining whether a person holds at least 10 percent of an entity, the constructive ownership rules of section 318 (or similar principles in cases involving interests other than stock) will apply. In addition, the reporting rules will apply if a person who is related to the 10-percent owner (within the meaning of section 267(b) or section 707(b)(1)) enters into the agreement with the transferee.

Taxpayers required to report consistent positions

The bill provides that a written agreement regarding the allocation of consideration to, or the fair market value of, any of the assets in an applicable asset acquisition will be binding on both parties for tax purposes, unless the parties are able to refute the allocation or valuation under the standards set forth in the Danielson case. The parties are bound only with respect to the allocations or valuations actually provided in the agreement. Thus, the parties are bound to any written partial allocation or valuation. The committee intends that the Secretary may require reporting regarding any such agreements.

The committee does not intend to restrict in any way the ability of the IRS to challenge the taxpayers' allocation to any asset or to challenge the taxpayers' determination of the fair market value of any asset by any appropriate method, particularly where there is a lack of adverse tax interests between the parties.

Effective Date

The provisions are effective for acquisitions on or after October 10, 1990, unless pursuant to a binding written contract in effect before and on that date and at all times thereafter until the acquisition.

d. Expand the definition of a corporate equity reduction transaction for purposes of limiting certain NOL carrybacks (sec. 7444 of the bill and sec. 172(m) of the Code)

Present Law

The ability of a C corporation to obtain refunds of taxes paid in prior years by carrying back net operating losses (NOLs) is limited in cases where the losses are created by interest deductions allocable to a corporate equity reduction transaction ("CERT"). A CERT includes the acquisition of 50 percent or more of the vote or value of the stock of another corporation. However, a CERT does not include the acquisition of the stock of another corporation (1) that, immediately before the acquisition, was a subsidiary of an affiliated group, or (2) with respect to which an election under section 338 was made to treat the stock acquisition as an asset acquisition.

Reasons for Change

Corporations generally are allowed to carry back NOLs in order to smooth out the swings in taxable income that can result when business cycles overlap taxable yearends or from unexpected financial reverses. Present law limits the ability of an acquired corporation to carry back the interest expense component of an NOL arising after a CERT because the leveraging involved in the CERT substantially alters the nature of the corporation and is not related to a natural business cycle or an unexpected financial reversal. The committee believes that these aspects of leveraging are present in all debt-financed CERTs, including the acquisition of a subsidiary corporation of an affiliated group. In addition, where a subsidiary corporation is acquired from an affiliated group, the sale proceeds may not necessarily remain in corporate solution. This results because the selling group may distribute the proceeds to its individual shareholders, thus reducing aggregate corporate equity.

Explanation of Provision

The bill repeals the exception to the definition of a CERT relating to the acquisition of the stock of another corporation which, immediately the acquisition, was a member of an affiliated group (other than the parent of such group). Thus, the bill expands the definition of a CERT to include the acquisition of 50 percent or more of the vote or value of the stock of any corporation, regardless of whether the corporation was a member of an affiliated group (unless an election under section 338 was made to treat the acquisition as an acquisition of assets).

Effective Date

The provision is effective for acquisitions on or after October 10, 1990, unless pursuant to a binding written contract in effect

[71] Section 338(h)(10) permits a selling consolidated group to elect to treat a sale of its 80-percent-controlled subsidiary as a sale of the subsidiary's assets. The selling consolidated group recognizes gain or loss attributable to the deemed asset sale, but not with respect to the stock sale.

before and on such date and at all times thereafter until such acquisition.

e. Clarify treatment of debt exchanges (sec. 7445 of the bill and secs. 108 and 1275 of the Code).

Present Law

Income from the cancellation of indebtedness

In general: Gross income includes income from the cancellation of indebtedness (COD). Taxpayers in title 11 cases and insolvent debtors generally exclude COD from income but reduce tax attributes by the amount of COD created on the discharge of debt. The amount of COD excluded from income by an insolvent debtor not in a title 11 case cannot exceed the amount by which the debtor is insolvent. For all taxpayers, the amount of COD generally is the difference between the adjusted issue price of the debt being cancelled and the amount used to satisfy such debt. The COD rules generally apply to the exchange of an old obligation for a new obligation, including a modification of the old debt that is treated as an exchange (a debt-for-debt exchange).

Treatment of stock-for-debt exchanges: For purposes of determining COD, if a debtor corporation transfers stock to a creditor in satisfaction of debt, the corporation is treated as having satisfied the debt with an amount of money equal to the fair market value of the stock. However, taxpayers in title 11 cases and insolvent debtors generally may issue stock in satisfaction of debt without creating COD (the stock-for-debt exception).[72] The stock-for-debt exception does not apply in certain de minimis cases. Specifically, the exception does not apply to the issuance of nominal or token shares of stock or with respect to the issuance of stock to an unsecured creditor where the ratio of the value of the stock received by such creditor to the amount of the creditor's debt discharged by such stock in a workout is less than 50 percent of a similar ratio computed for all unsecured creditors participating in the workout. (Sec. 108(e)(8)).

Original issue discount rules

The issuer of a debt instrument with original issue discount (OID) generally accrues and deducts the discount, as interest, over the term of the instrument on an economic accrual basis. The holder of an OID instrument also includes the amount of OID in income on an economic accrual basis. Original issue discount is the excess of the stated redemption price at maturity over the issue price of a debt instrument. For purposes of the OID rules, the issue price of a debt instrument that is issued for property generally is determined by reference to fair market value if either the debt instrument or the property for which it was issued is publicly traded. (Sec. 1273(b)(3)). If neither the debt instrument nor the property for which it is issued is publicly traded, the issue price of the instrument generally is its stated principal amount, provided the instrument has adequate stated interest. If the debt instrument lacks adequate stated interest, the issue price of the instrument generally is determined by using the applicable Federal rate to discount all payments due under the instrument. (Sec. 1274). Finally, for debt-for-debt exchanges in a reorganization, the issue price of a new debt instrument is not less than the adjusted issue price of the old debt instrument. (Sec. 1275(a)(4)). In certain other cases, issue price is equal to stated redemption price at maturity. (Sec. 1273(b)(4)).

Reasons for Change

The committee is aware that taxpayers take various positions as to whether and how these OID and other rules apply for purposes of determining COD. With respect to exchanges that qualify as reorganizations, taxpayers with net operating losses, or in title 11 or similar proceedings, may take the position that the OID rules do not apply, so that COD is created. In such exchanges, taxpayers in other situations may take the position that the OID rules do apply, so that no COD is created.

The committee believes that the rules for determining the amount of COD created on a debt-for-debt exchange need to be clarified in order to provide guidance to taxpayers, to ensure similar treatment for taxpayers undertaking similar transactions, and to prevent taxpayers from selectively choosing the tax treatment for a transaction. The committee further believes that the amount of COD created on a debt-for-debt exchange is properly determined by comparing the adjusted issue price of the old obligations being discharged to the issue price of the new obligations, and that the OID rules, as modified by the bill, provide the appropriate framework for determining the issue price of a new obligation.

The committee also believes that the present-law stock-for-debt exception relating to the recognition of COD by bankrupt and insolvent taxpayers should not apply to the issuance of certain preferred stock that resembles debt. Accordingly, the committee believes that in such instances, rules similar to the rules applicable to debt-for-debt exchanges should apply.

Explanation of Provisions

Debt-for-debt exchanges

Treatment of issuers: The provision provides explicit rules for determining the amount of COD created in a debt-for-debt exchange and how the OID rules apply in such a situation. No inference is intended as to the proper treatment of debt-for-debt exchanges under prior law.

Under the provision, for purposes of determining the amount of COD of a debtor that issues a new debt instrument in satisfaction of an old debt, such debtor will be treated as having satisfied the old debt with an amount of money equal to the issue price of the new debt.[73] For this purpose, the issue price of the new obligation will be determined under the general rules applicable to debt instruments issued for property (i.e., secs. 1273(b) and 1274). For debt instruments subject to section 483 (rather than section 1274), the issue price as determined under section 1273(b)(4) is reduced to exclude unstated interest for purposes of determining COD.

In addition, the reorganization exception in section 1275(a)(4) of the OID rules is repealed. Thus, either or both COD or OID may be created in a debt-for-debt exchange that qualifies as a reorganization, so long as the exchange qualifies as a realization event under section 1001 for the holder. The provision does not change the present-law rules of sections 354, 355, or 356 regarding the amount of gain or loss recognized or not recognized in a reorganization.

Thus, if either the old or the new obligation in a debt-for-debt exchange is publicly traded, the issue price of the new obligation will be the fair market value of the publicly-traded obligation. If neither obligation is publicly traded, the issue price of the new obligation will be its stated principal amount, unless the new obligation does not have adequate stated interest. In such case, the issue price generally is determined by using the applicable Federal rate to discount all payments due under the new obligation.

Example 1: A corporation issued for $1000 a bond that provided for annual coupon payments based on a market rate of interest. The bond is publicly traded. Some time later, when the old bond is worth $600, the corporation exchanges the old bond for a new bond that has a stated redemption price at maturity of $750. The exchange is treated as a realization event under section 1001. Under the bill, the new bond will have an issue price of $600 (the fair market value of the old bond) and deductible OID of $150 ($750 stated redemption price at maturity less $600 issue price) and the corporation will have COD of $400 ($1000 adjusted issue price of the old bond less $600 issue price of the new bond). Such results will occur whether or not the exchange qualifies as a reorganization.

Treatment of the holder: The repeal of section 1275(a)(4) will be applicable to the holder as well as the issuer of the new debt instrument for purposes of determining the issue price of the new debt instrument received in a debt-for-debt exchange.

Example 2: Assume the holder of the old bond in Example 1 above had recently purchased such bond for $600. Even if the debt-for-debt exchange qualifies as a reorganization, the holder will have an issue price of $600 and includible OID of $150 with respect to the new bond.

Stock-for-debt exchanges

The provision also repeals the stock-for-debt exception for title 11 cases and insolvent debtors for taxpayers that issue disqualified stock in exchange for debt. For this purpose, disqualified stock is any stock with a stated redemption price and that either is subject to a fixed redemption date, is callable by the issuer, or is puttable by the holder. In addition, disqualified stock will not be considered to be stock for purposes of the de minimis rule of section 108(e)(8).

Thus, under the bill, taxpayers in title 11 cases or insolvent taxpayers that issue disqualified stock in discharge of debt generally will reduce their tax attributes by the amount by which the adjusted issue price of the debt discharged exceeds the fair market value of that stock. In the case of an insolvent taxpayer not in a title 11 case, the amount of COD in excess of the amount of insolvency, if any, will be included in gross income in accordance with present-law rules governing the taxation of COD.

Effective Date

The provision generally is effective for debt-for-debt or stock-for-debt exchanges occurring on or after October 10, 1990. The provision does not apply to an exchange that is pursuant to a binding written contract in effect before October 10, 1990, and [72] The IRS has recently published a ruling that holds that the stock-for-debt exception can apply only to the extent of the redemption price and liquidation preference of preferred stock issued for debt. (Rev. Rul. 90-87, issued October 2, 1990).

all times thereafter. The provision does not apply to an exchange that is pursuant to a tender offer or exchange offer filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission before October 10, 1990. The provision does not apply to an exchange that is pursuant to a transaction the material terms of which were described in a written public announcement before October 10, 1990, and which was the subject of a prior filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, and which is subsequently filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission before January 1, 1991.

In addition, the provision does not apply to an exchange resulting from a proceeding in a title 11 or similar case that had been filed before October 10, 1990.

6. Employment Tax Provisions

a. Increase dollar limitation on amount of wages and self-employment income subject to the Medicare hospital insurance payroll tax (sec. 7451 of the bill and sec. 3121 of the Code).

Present Law

As part of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA), a tax is imposed on employees and employers up to a maximum amount of employee wages. The tax is comprised of two parts: old-age, survivor, and disability insurance (OASDI) and Medicare hospital insurance (HI). For wages paid in 1990 to covered employees, the HI tax rate is 1.45 percent on both the employer and the employee on the first $51,300 of wages and the OASDI tax rate is 6.2 percent on both the employer and the employee on the first $51,300 of wages.

Under the Self-Employment Contributions Act of 1954 (SECA), a tax is imposed on an individual's self-employment income. The self-employment tax rate is the same as the total rate for employers and employees (i.e., 2.9 percent for HI and 12.40 percent for OASDI). For 1990, the tax is applied to the first $51,300 of self-employment income and, in general, the tax is reduced by any wages for which employment taxes were withheld during the year.

The cap on wages and self-employment income subject to FICA and SECA taxes is indexed to changes in the average wages in the economy. In 1991, the amount of wages or self-employment income subject to the tax is projected to be $54,300.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that increasing the cap on wages and self-employment income subject to tax with respect to HI will improve the progressivity of the tax system. In addition, increased revenues under the bill will provide necessary funding for the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and will enhance its long-term solvency.

Explanation of Provision

The bill increases the cap on wages and self-employment income considered in calculating HI tax liability to $89,000. As under present law, for years beginning after 1991, this cap is indexed to changes in the average wages in the economy. The OASDI wage cap remains at the level provided under present law.

Effective Date

The provision is effective on January 1, 1991.

b. Extending Medicare coverage of, and application of hospital insurance tax to, all State and local government employees (sec. 7452 of the bill and sec. 3121 of the Code).

Present Law

Before enactment of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1985 (COBRA), State and local workers were covered under Medicare only if the State and the Secretary of Health and Human Services entered into a voluntary agreement providing for such coverage. In COBRA, the Congress extended Medicare coverage (and the corresponding hospital insurance (HI) payroll tax) on a mandatory basis to State and local government employees (other than students) hired after March 31, 1986.

For wages paid in 1990 to Medicare-covered employees, the total HI tax rate is 2.9 percent of the first $51,300 of wages. The tax is divided equally between the employer and the employee.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes Medicare coverage should be extended to all employees of State and local governments.

Explanation of Provision

The bill requires coverage of all employees of State and local governments under Medicare without regard to the employee's date of hire. The 2.9 percent HI payroll tax rate would be phased in with respect to newly covered State and local government employees so that the tax rate is 1.6 percent in 1992; 2.7 percent in 1993; and 2.9 percent in 1994 and thereafter. The present-law student exception is retained with respect to students employed in public schools, colleges, and universities. Coverage may, as under present law, continue to be provided to such individuals at the option of the State government.

In the case of certain employees who are required to pay the HI tax and who meet certain other requirements, State and local service prior to the effective date of this provision is deemed to have been covered by the HI tax for purposes of determining Medicare eligibility. Prior State and local service is counted regardless of whether such service was continuous.

Under the provision, the HI trust fund would be reimbursed from the general fund of the Treasury for any additional cost arising by reason of this provision.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services is required to provide a process by which employees could provide evidence of prior State and local governmental service if such service is necessary to qualify for coverage under the program.

Effective Date

The provision is effective with respect to services performed after December 31, 1991.

c. Extend social security retirement coverage (OASDI) to State and local government employees not covered by a public employee retirement program (sec. 7453 of the bill and sec. 3121 of the Code)

Present Law

Employees of State and local governments are covered under social security by voluntary agreements entered into by the States with the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS). After a State has entered into such an agreement, it may decide, or permit its political subdivisions to decide, whether to include particular groups of employees under the agreement. All States have entered into such agreements. The extent of coverage is high in some States and limited in others. Nationally, about 72 percent of State and local workers are covered by social security.

With certain exceptions, a State has broad latitude to decide which groups of State and local employees are covered under its agreement. In some cases in which States have elected not to provide coverage, a part of the workforce does not participate in any public retirement plan.

For 1990, the social security (Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance) tax rate is 6.2 percent of covered wages up to $51,300 and is imposed on both the employer and employee (for a total of 12.40 percent).

Reasons for Change

Certain employees of State and local governments have no retirement protection either from social security or a public retirement system. Many of these individuals are low-paid individuals with limited or intermittent work experience and, therefore, social security coverage will provide important disability, survivorship, and retirement protection.

Explanation of Provision

The bill requires social security (Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance) coverage for State and local workers who are not covered by a retirement system in conjunction with their employment for the State or local government and subjects the wages of such employees to the OASDI portion of the tax under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA). An exception is provided for students employed in public schools, colleges, and universities, for whom coverage may continue to be provided at the option of the State government. This exception maintains parallel coverage rules for students employed by public educational institutions and those employed by private schools, colleges, and universities.

A retirement system is defined as under the definition of retirement system in the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. sec. 418(b)(4)). Thus, a retirement system is defined as a pension, annuity, retirement, or similar fund or system established by a State or by a political subdivision thereof.

Whether an employee is a member (i.e., is a participant) of a retirement system is based upon whether that individual actually participates in the program. Thus, whether an employee participates is not determined by whether that individual holds a position that is included in a retirement system. Instead, that individual must actually be a member of the system. For example, an employee whose job classification is of a type that ordinarily is entitled to coverage, is not a member of a retirement system if he or she is ineligible because of age or service conditions contained in the plan and, therefore, is required to be covered under Social Security. Similarly, if participation in the system is elective, and the employee elects not to participate, that employee does not participate in a system for purposes of this rule, and is to be covered under the Social Security system.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in conjunction with the Social Security Administration, is required to issue guidance in order to implement the purposes of this provision.

Effective Date

The provision is effective with respect to services performed after December 31, 1991.

d. Extend Federal Unemployment Tax (FUTA) Surtax (sec. 7454 of the bill and sec. 3301 of the Code).

Present Law

The Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) imposes a gross employer tax of 6.2 percent on the first $7,000 paid annually to each employee. Employers in States meeting certain requirements and with no overdue Federal loans are eligible for a full 5.4 percentage point credit, making the basic net FUTA tax rate 0.8 percent. This 0.8-percent tax rate has a permanent component of 0.6 percent and a temporary component of 0.2 percent. The 0.2-percent surtax is scheduled to expire for wages paid after 1990.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to extend the 0.2-percent FUTA surtax for 5 years.

Explanation of Provision

The bill extends the 0.2-percent surtax imposed on employers under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) through 1995.

Effective Date

The provision is effective with respect to wages paid on or after January 1, 1991.

e. Increase in railroad retirement tier 2 payroll taxes (sec. 7455 of the bill and secs. 3201, 3211, and 3221 of the Code).

Present Law

Railroad employers, employees, and employee representatives are subject to a payroll tax to fund tier 2 railroad retirement benefits. The tax rate is 4.90 percent for employees, 16.10 percent for employers, and 14.75 percent for employee representatives. In 1990, the tax is imposed on wages up to a maximum of $38,100. In 1991, this wage base is projected to increase to $40,500.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that an increase in the tier 2 payroll tax will improve the long-term solvency of the Railroad Retirement Account.

Explanation of Provision

The provision increases the Tier 2 tax rate by 0.10 percent for employees (for a total rate of 5.00 percent), 0.30 percent for employers (for a total rate of 16.40 percent), and 0.30 percent for employee representatives (for a total rate of 15.05 percent).

Effective Date

The provision applies to compensation paid after December 31, 1990, in the case of the employer-level tax and to compensation received after December 31, 1990, in the case of the employee and employee representatives taxes.

f. One-year Extension of General Fund Transfers to Railroad Retirement Tier 2 Trust Fund (sec. 7456 of the bill and sec. 3201 of the Code).

Present Law

The proceeds from the taxation of railroad retirement Tier 2 benefits are transferred from the General Fund of the Treasury into the Railroad Retirement Account. This transfer applies only to proceeds from the taxation of benefits that are received prior to October 1, 1990. Proceeds from the taxation of benefits received after this date will remain in the General Fund.

Reasons for Change

The Commission on Railroad Retirement Reform, established pursuant to the 1987 budget reconciliation legislation, submitted its final report on September 14, 1990, making numerous recommendations concerning the structure and financing of the railroad retirement program. In order to allow time for Congress to review this report and determine whether any of its recommendations should be implemented, the committee believes it is appropriate to continue for an additional year the provisions for transfer to the trust fund of the proceeds from the taxation of tier 2 benefits.

Explanation of Provision

The transfer of proceeds from the taxation of railroad retirement tier 2 benefits from the General Fund into the Railroad Retirement Account is extended for one year, to apply to benefits received prior to October 1, 1991. The continuation of this transfer is estimated to result in an additional deposit into the Railroad Retirement Account of $190 million.

Effective Date

The provision is effective with respect to benefits received after September 30, 1990, and before October 1, 1991.

g. Railroad Retirement Tier 1 tax rate determined by reference to the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA) tax rate (sec. 7457 of the bill and sec. 3111 of the Code).

Present Law

Prior to 1984, the railroad retirement tier 1 tax was imposed at a rate determined by cross-reference to the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA) under which Social Security taxes are imposed. The tier 1 tax rate is identical to the combined tax rate under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance and the hospital insurance tax (OASDHI). Since 1983, the tier 1 tax rate has been specified numerically in the Railroad Retirement Tax Act rather than by cross-reference to the FICA tax rate.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that uniformity and simplicity are improved under the provision.

Explanation of the Provision

The bill amends the Railroad Retirement Tax Act to provide that the tier 1 tax rate is determined by cross-reference to the FICA tax rate.

Effective Date

The provision is effective with date of enactment.

h. Payroll tax deposit stabilization (sec. 7458 of the bill and sec. 6302(g) of the Code).

Present Law

Treasury regulations have established the system under which employers deposit income taxes withheld from employees' wages and FICA taxes. The frequency with which these taxes must be deposited increases as the amount required to be deposited increases.

Employers are required to deposit these taxes as frequently as eight times per month, provided that the amount to be deposited equals or exceeds $3,000. These deposits must be made within three banking days after the end of the eighth-monthly period.

Effective August 1, 1990, employers who are on this eighth-monthly system are required to deposit income taxes withheld from employees' wages and FICA taxes by the close of the applicable banking day (instead of by the close of the third banking day) after any day on which the business cumulates an amount to be deposited equal to or greater than $100,000 (regardless of whether that day is the last day of an eighth-monthly period).

For 1990, the applicable banking day is the first. For 1991, the applicable banking day is the second. For 1992, the applicable banking day is the third. For 1993 and 1994, the applicable banking day is the first. The Treasury Department is given authority to issue regulations for 1995 and succeeding years to provide for similar modifications to the date by which deposits must be made in order to minimize unevenness in the receipts effects of this provision.

Reasons for Change

The committee believed that it was appropriate to simplify this provision by making the deposit rules uniform for all years.

Explanation of Provision

The bill requires that deposits equal to or greater than $100,000 must be made by the close of the next banking day for all years. Thus, no change from present law is necessary for calendar year 1990, but for calendar years 1991 and 1992 deposits are accelerated. The regulatory authority provided to the Treasury Department is repealed.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for amounts required to be deposited after December 31, 1990.

7. Limitation on Itemized Deductions (secs. 7461 and 7463 of the bill, secs. 57(a)(6) and 213 of the Code, and new sec. 68 of the Code).

Present Law

General Rules for Itemized Deductions

Under present law, individuals who do not elect the standard deduction may claim itemized deductions (subject to certain limitations) for certain nonbusiness expenses incurred during the taxable year. Among these deductible expenses are unreimbursed medical expenses, casualty and theft losses, charitable contributions, qualified residence interest, a portion of personal interest (10 percent in 1990; zero thereafter), State and local income and property taxes, moving expenses, unreimbursed employee business expenses, and certain other miscellaneous expenses.

Certain itemized deductions are allowed only to the extent that the amount of the expense incurred during the taxable year exceeds a specified percentage of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income (AGI). Unreimbursed medical expenses for care of the taxpayer and the taxpayer's spouse and dependents are deductible only to the extent that the total of such expenses exceeds 7.5 percent of the taxpayer's AGI. Nonbusiness casualty or theft losses are deductible only to the extent that the amount of the loss arising from each casualty or theft exceeds $100 and only to the extent that total casualty and theft losses exceed 10 percent of the taxpayer's AGI. Unreimbursed employee business expenses and certain other miscellaneous itemized deductions are deductible only to the extent that the total of such expenses and deductions exceeds two percent of the taxpayer's AGI.

Deduction for Contribution of Appreciated Property

In computing taxable income, a taxpayer generally is allowed to deduct the fair market value of property contributed to a charitable organization.[74] In the case of a charitable contribution of tangible personal property, however, a taxpayer's deduction for regular tax purposes is limited to the adjusted basis in such property if the use by the recipient charitable organization is unrelated to the organization's tax-exempt purpose (sec. 170(e)(1)(B)(i)).

For purposes of computing alternative minimum taxable income (AMTI), the deduction for charitable contributions of capital gain property (real, personal, or intangible) is disallowed to the extent that the fair market value of the property exceeds its adjusted basis.

Deduction for Cosmetic Surgery

For purposes of the medical expense deduction, eligible "medical care" expenses are defined as amounts paid for the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease, or for the purpose of affecting any structure or function of the body (sec. 213(d)(1)(A)). The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) has interpreted "medical care" as including procedures that permanently alter any structure of the body, even if the procedure generally is considered to be an elective, purely cosmetic treatment (such as removal of hair by electrolysis and face lift operations).[75] For purposes of the medical expense deduction, the IRS generally does not distinguish between procedures which are medically necessary and those which are purely cosmetic.

Reasons for Change

The committee determined that it is appropriate to impose a limitation on otherwise deductible expenses of individual taxpayers with AGI exceeding $100,000. The higher an individual's AGI, the less likely it is that an otherwise deductible expense will significantly affect the individual's ability to pay income taxes. Thus, the committee believes that the goal of personalizing the Federal income tax based on each individual's ability to pay taxes is enhanced by adoption of a rule that imposes some limitation on deductibility of amounts paid (other than medical expenses, casualty and theft losses, and investment interest) by high-income individuals, yet generally allows full deductibility at the margin.

Although it is appropriate to adopt a general limitation on itemized deductions applicable to upper-income individuals, the committee believes there is special need to encourage donations to charitable and educational institutions of tangible articles with unique cultural or educational value (such as works of art and manuscripts). Therefore, the committee determined that, for purposes of computing alternative minimum taxable income, taxpayers should be allowed to claim the same deduction for charitable contributions of tangible personal property as is allowed for regular tax purposes. This change will provide an additional incentive for taxpayers to donate certain tangible personal property, the use of which is related to the donee's tax-exempt purpose.

In addition, the committee determined that expenses for cosmetic surgery and other similar procedures should not be eligible for the medical expense deduction, unless the procedure is necessary to ameliorate a deformity arising from a congenital abnormality, a personal injury resulting from an accident or trauma, or disfiguring disease. Expenses for purely cosmetic procedures that are not medically necessary are, in essence, voluntary personal expenses, which like other personal expenditures (e.g., food and clothing) generally should not be deductible in computing taxable income.

Explanation of Provisions

General Limitation on Itemized Deductions

The bill provides that total otherwise allowable itemized deductions (other than medical expenses, casualty and theft losses, and investment interest) are reduced by an amount equal to five percent of the amount of a taxpayer's AGI in excess of $100,000.[76] In no event, however, are total otherwise allowable itemized deductions (excluding medical expenses, casualty and theft losses, and investment interest) reduced by more than 80 percent. The provision applies only to individual taxpayers and not to an estate or trust.

In computing the amount of the reduction of total itemized deductions under the provision, all present-law limitations applicable to such deductions first are applied and the otherwise allowable total amount of deductions then is reduced pursuant to the provision. For purposes of the alternative minimum tax, itemized deductions which are otherwise allowed in computing AMTI are not reduced by the provision (i.e., the cutback amount determined for regular tax purposes is disregarded in calculating AMTI). For purposes of determining the tax treatment of State income tax refunds and other similar payments, the present-law tax benefit rule applies.

For example, a taxpayer with AGI of $250,000 and $90,000 of otherwise allowable itemized deductions ($20,000 of which are medical expenses, casualty and theft losses, and investment interest) would have itemized deductions reduced by $7,500 [5% X ($250,000−$100,000)]. If such a taxpayer's AGI increased above $1,220,000 and itemized deductions remained the same, the taxpayer would still be able to deduct a total of $14,000 of itemized deductions other than medical expenses, casualty and theft losses, and investment interest [20% X ($90,000−$20,000)].

Deduction for Contributions of Appreciated Tangible Personal Property

For purposes of computing alternative minimum taxable income, the present-law rule that treats as a tax preference item the amount of appreciation with respect to a charitable contribution of capital gain property (sec. 57(a)(6)) is repealed in the case of a contribution of tangible personal property. Thus, if a taxpayer makes a charitable contribution of tangible personal property (other than inventory or other ordinary income property, or short-term capital gain property), the use of which is related to the donee's tax-exempt purpose, the taxpayer is entitled to claim a deduction for both regular tax and alternative minimum tax purposes in the amount of the property's fair market value (subject to present-law percentage limitations). Contributions of inventory or other ordinary income property and short-term capital gain property continue to be governed by present-law rules.

Denial of Deduction for Unnecessary Cosmetic Surgery

The bill provides that expenses paid for cosmetic surgery or other similar procedures are not deductible medical expenses, unless the surgery or procedure is necessary to ameliorate a deformity arising from, or directly related to, a congenital abnormality, a personal injury resulting from an accident or trauma, or disfiguring disease. For purposes of this provision, cosmetic surgery is defined as any procedure which is directed at improving the patient's appearance and does not meaningfully promote the proper function of the body or prevent or treat illness or disease.

Thus, under the provision, procedures such as hair removal electrolysis, hair transplants, lyposuction, and face lift operations generally are not deductible. In contrast, expenses for procedures that are medically necessary to promote the proper function of the body and only incidentally affect the patient's appearance or expenses for treatment of a disfiguring condition arising from a congenital abnormality, personal injury or trauma, or disease (such as reconstructive surgery following removal of a malignancy) continue to be deductible under present-law rules.

Effective Date

The provisions are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

8. Deny Deduction for Certain Interest Paid by Corporations to the IRS on Tax Obligations (sec. 7462 of the bill and new sec. 163(k) of the Code).

Present Law

In general, corporations are allowed an income tax deduction for all interest paid or accrued, including interest on tax obligations.

Individuals are not permitted to deduct personal interest. For this purpose, personal interest includes interest on underpayments of the individual's income taxes, even if all or a portion of the individual's income is attributable to a trade or business.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to deny a deduction for certain interest paid by corporations to the IRS on underpayments relating to any type of Federal tax.

Explanation of Provision

The bill denies corporations a deduction for interest economically accruing after 30 days after the earlier of the furnishing of a notice of proposed deficiency (commonly called a 30-day letter) or the furnishing of a statutory notice of deficiency issued pursuant to section 6212 (commonly called a 90-day letter). In the case of an underpayment of a tax other than an income tax, a notice provided by the IRS that is similar to these notices is treated similarly.

This rule applies regardless of whether the corporation is on a cash basis or accrual basis, or when the interest is paid or deemed paid. The present-law procedures (described in section 4 of Rev. Proc. 84-58, as modified by Announcements 86-108 and 86-114) permitting a taxpayer to make a remittance of contested tax and interest thereon after a deficiency notice has been provided, while continuing to contest the asserted deficiency in Tax Court, would not be changed.

The Secretary has the authority to credit the amount of any overpayment against any liability under the Code (sec. 6402). To the extent a portion of tax due is satisfied by a credit of an overpayment, no interest is imposed on that portion of the tax (sec. 6601(f)). The Secretary should implement the most comprehensive crediting procedures under section 6402 that are consistent with sound administrative practice.

[76] The threshold amount is $50,000 in the case of a separate return filed by a married individual within the meaning of section 7703. The threshold amounts are not indexed for inflation.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for interest economically accruing on or after January 1, 1991, regardless of the taxable period (if any) to which the underlying tax may relate.

SUBTITLE E—OTHER PROVISIONS

1. Extend IRS User Fees (sec. 7471 of the bill and sec. 10511 of the Revenue Act of 1987).

Present Law

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) provides written responses to questions of individuals, corporations, and organizations relating to their tax status or the effects of particular transactions for tax purposes. The IRS responds to these inquiries through the issuance of letter rulings, determination letters, and opinion letters. The IRS charges a fee for most requests for a letter ruling, determination letter, opinion letter, or other similar ruling or determination. The fee charged may vary depending on the type of request, although the legislation specifies minimum average fees for each type of request. The legislation that requires the establishment of this fee program provides that it is not to apply to requests made after September 29, 1990.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that the relatively small number of persons that request letter rulings, determination letters, and opinion letters should continue to pay for the benefit of these services. Consequently, the committee believes that the IRS program that requires the payment of a fee for most requests for a letter ruling, determination letter, opinion letter, or other similar ruling or determination should be permanently extended without change.

Explanation of Provision

The bill permanently extends the IRS program that requires the payment of a fee for most requests for a letter ruling, determination letter, opinion letter, or other similar ruling or determination.

Effective Date

The provision applies to requests made after September 29, 1990. The IRS may collect the fee for requests made after September 29, 1990, and on or before the date that is 30 days after the date of enactment at such time as the IRS may determine in its discretion. The fee for any request made more than 30 days after the date of enactment must be collected in advance.

2. Increase in the Permanent Public Debt Limit (Sec. 7472 of the bill and sec. 3101 of title 31, USC)

Present Law

The permanent statutory limit of the public debt is $3,122.7 billion, which was enacted on November 8, 1989. At the time it was enacted, it was hoped that the limit provided sufficient borrowing authority to the Administration to meet its borrowing needs through September 30, 1990.

A temporary increase in the public debt limit was enacted on August 9, 1990 (P.L. 101-350), to meet increased borrowing needs through October 2, 1990, by which time Congress anticipated having a reliable estimate of borrowing needs for the next fiscal year. At present, the temporary limit has been extended through October 19, 1990.

Reasons for Change

H. Con. Res. 310, which is the concurrent resolution setting forth the congressional budget for fiscal years 1991 through 1995, instructs the committee to provide legislation to increase the permanent statutory limit on the public debt by an amount that does not exceed $1,900 billion. This instruction also is consistent with the summit agreement reached by representatives of the Congress and the Administration to increase the permanent public debt limit for a period of five years.

Explanation of Provision

The committee bill increases the existing permanent debt limit with additional borrowing authority of up to $1,900 billion. The increase complies with the instructions for implementing the reconciliation bill which were given to the committee in the congressional budget resolution.

Effective Date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

3. Increase in Refund Review Threshold for Reports Submitted to the Joint Committee on Taxation (sec. 7473 of the bill and sec. 6405 of the Code).

Present Law

No refund or credit in excess of $200,000 of any income tax, estate or gift tax, or certain other specified taxes, may be made until 30 days after the date a report on the refund is provided to the Joint Committee on Taxation (sec. 6405). A report is also required in the case of certain tentative refunds. Additionally, the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation conducts post-audit reviews of large deficiency cases and other select issues.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to increase the refund review threshold, which has been set at $200,000 since 1976. Increasing it will accelerate the issuance of refunds between $200,000 and $1,000,000 to the taxpayers involved. In addition, this increase will free up significant resources of both the Internal Revenue Service and the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, without materially impairing the ability to monitor problems in the administration of the tax laws.

Explanation of Provision

The bill increases the threshold above which refunds must be submitted to the Joint Committee on Taxation for review from $200,000 to $1,000,000. The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation would continue to exercise its existing statutory authority to conduct a program of expanded post-audit reviews of large deficiency cases and other select issues, and the IRS is expected to fully cooperate in this expanded program.

Effective Date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment, except that the higher threshold does not apply to a refund or credit with respect to which a report was made before the date of enactment.

(1) All estimates assume full restoration of tax benefits for 1990.
(2) Credit rate is retained at current level of 20%; base limitation is retained at current level of 50%.
(3) Loss of less than $50 million.
(4) Gain of less than $10 million.
(5) Loss of less than $10 million.
(6) Gain of less than $50 million.
(7) Tax incentive begins phasing out as price of crude oil reaches $28 per barrel (adjusted for inflation). The estimate in the revenue table is based on current Congressional Budget Office (CBO) macro-economic forecast which projects crude oil prices in the range of $18 to $23 per barrel during FY 1991–95.
(8) Provide maximum $5,000 per year credit for 50% of eligible expenditures to make public accommodations accessible to disabled persons; limited to small businesses.
(9) Estimate reflects a combination of increased EITC (with modifications to adjust for family size, to enhance compliance, and to add a credit for health insurance) and 90% refundable dependent care credit. Total cost equals $5.0 billion provided in Budget Summit Agreement, plus $11.9 billion of tax credits contained in the latest Senate offer on child care (Conference on H.R. 3).
(10) Disallow itemized deductions in an amount equal to 5% of AGI in excess of $100,000 for single returns, $100,000 for joint returns, and $100,000 for head of household returns. Proposal does not apply to medical expenses, casualty losses, or investment interest. Disallowance under the proposal cannot exceed 80% of otherwise deductible itemized deductions subject to the proposal.
(11) 50% of motor fuels tax increase dedicated to deficit reduction; 50% dedicated to highway trust fund (20% of this portion to be allocated to mass transit account). Railroads will pay 50% of increase in rates; revenue increase dedicated to deficit reduction. Each State to receive Highway account apportionments and allocations equal to at least 95% of its contribution attributable to increased revenue.
(12) Increase distilled spirits by $1.20 (to $13,0/proof gallon); double beer to 32 cents/6-pack ($18/barrel); increase table wine to 21 cents/bottle ($1.07/gallon); maintaining current differential for fortified wines; with small winery/brewery exemption.

If an 80% business use test is satisfied for airplanes, the tax may be refunded by claiming it on the tax return for the year following purchase; this is allowed only if business use can be demonstrated to be 80% for that year. Tax is 10% of purchase price in excess of thresholds.
(14) The tax with respect to the new chemicals subject to the tax is phased in as follows: 1991—$1.37, 1992—$1.37, 1993—$1.67, 1994—$3.00, 1995—$3.10.
(15) This estimate is presented relative to the CBO baseline which assumes extension of the Airport and Airway Trust Fund (AATF) taxes with the tax reduction trigger in effect. The estimate reflects the effects both of removing the trigger and of increasing the rates of certain of the AATF taxes by 25% as proposed in the President's budget. The tax revenues to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund.
(16) Permit certain tax-free transfers of excess pension assets to pay retiree health benefits. Generally effective for reversions after Septembo, 1990, increase the reversion excise tax to 20%. If the employer does not transfer 20% of the reversion to a qualified replacement plan or provide certain benefit increases to plan participants and retirees of at least 15% of the reversion, the reversion tax is 40%. (Revenue effect in billions: 1991—Loss of less than $50 million; 1992—$0.1; 1993—$0.1; 1994—$0.1; 1995—$0.1; 1991–95 Total—$0.3.)
(17) Estimate provided by CBO.
(18) HI rate—0.8% in 1992, 1.35% in 1993, 1.45% in 1994 and thereafter.

[1] Distributional analysis includes effects from the Budget Summit Agreement, as modified by the Senate Finance Committee Budget Reconciliation-Revenue Proposals, with respect to beer, wine and distilled spirits taxes, tobacco tax, energy tax, telephone tax, increase in HI wage cap, limitation on itemized deductions, individual AMT component of oil and gas production incentives, expand section 179 expensing, inclusion of latest Senate child care offer, and increase in the EITC. Analysis does not take into account effects from changes in taxpayer behavior.

[2] The income concept used to place tax returns into income categories is adjusted gross income (AGI) plus: [1] tax-exempt interest, [2] employer contributions for health plans and life insurance, [3] inside buildup on life insurance, [4] workers' compensation, [5] nontaxable Social Security benefits, [6] deductible contributions to individual retirement accounts, [7] the minimum tax preferences, and [8] net losses in excess of minimum tax preferences from passive business activities.

[3] Estimates of total tax liability presented in distributions will not match estimated changes in receipts because of differing time periods (CY 1990 vs. FY 1991–95), because of varying patterns of fiscal year receipts.

[4] Distributions represent combined effects of individual income taxes, payroll taxes, Federal excise taxes, and estate and gift taxes. For the purpose of distributions, the full burden of payroll taxes is assigned to employees. Excise taxes are assumed to be borne fully by individuals either directly through purchase of the taxed commodity or indirectly through higher prices on all commodities as businesses pass along these added costs. Because of the uncertainty concerning the incidence of the corporate income tax, it is excluded from this table. Information in table excludes individuals who are dependents of other taxpayers.

VI—Additional Views

Additional Views of Senators William L. Armstrong and Steve Symms

Look out America! Congress is getting up a head of steam to raise taxes and neither facts nor reality seem able to slow it down. What will certainly slow down further if the Congress continues down this path is: our economy.

The Finance Committee has contributed to this headlong plunge by deciding that what this country needs is a $142.1 billion tax increase, $11.3 billion in additional taxes disguised as spending cuts, and $5.3 billion in additional, new spending. Combined with the other elements in the budget, less than one-quarter of the budget represents real savings or improved efficiencies in government programs.

In addition, under the original Budget Summit Agreement the various committees of Congress were directed to raise about $116.2 billion in various user fees. These additional tax increases are cleverly hidden because they are scored as spending reductions.

When combined with the user fee increases, the Finance Committee's explicit and disguised tax increases bring the total tax increase to $269.6 billion, one of the largest tax increases in our Nation's history. And it comes at a time when our economy is already struggling. Battered by a credit crunch and the recent run-up in oil prices as a result of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, the economy is slipping into a recession. The recession may be over in a year, or it may last much longer. The recession may be a gentle slowdown in growth, or a precipitous collapse like the recession in the early 1980s. But a recession is clearly at hand.

There is no defensible economic theory which says the correct policy in a recession is to raise taxes. Not from the left, not from the right, not from the past, nor from the present. Not one.

The monetarist, supply-side, and neoclassical schools all tell us the correct response to a recession is to cut spending to free up resources for more productive uses and to cut taxes to reduce the straightjacket government imposes on investment, work, and growth.

Even the now-discredited Keynsian school tells us to increase spending and to cut taxes, exactly the opposite of what the Finance Committee is reporting out.

The one prescription each of these schools agree on is that the correct policy in a recession is to cut taxes, not to raise them.

So, what ghost of a theory is propelling these Halloween tax increases through the Finance Committee and the rest of Congress? The evidence points to the Depression economics of Herbert Hoover. In 1932, following the collapse of the stock market and in the clear signs of recession, Herbert Hoover decided the best policy was to get the Nation's fiscal house in order by raising taxes. Mr. Hoover, a fine man, was tragically mistaken, as events quickly proved.

The expectation at the time was that the tax increase would relax the strain on the credit markets created by the policies of the Federal Reserve and thereby reduce interest rates. Congress, while spending months wrangling over the details of the tax increase, did not question the need for such an increase. While many factors contributed to the Great Depression, no one questions that the Hoover tax increase made a bad situation worse. Yet here we are getting ready to repeat the tragic mistake of 1932.

Today's argument (and that may be too strong a word) for increasing taxes traces its intellectual heritage directly to the Hoover tax increase. The full statement of this argument runs as follows: Raising taxes in a recession is necessary to cut the budget deficit and thereby lower interest rates.

There are two fatal flaws with this theory. First, a tax increase is not needed to reduce the budget deficit. If we simply hold this year's spending at last year's levels, the deficit would fall by about $76 billion. That is, even without a tax increase we could cut the deficit by nearly twice the amount proposed in the Budget Summit Agreement, and we could do so without a single cut in spending.

The second flaw is the idea that cutting the budget deficit by $40 billion will lower interest rates. The effect on interest rates of reducing the deficit by a few tens of billions of dollars in the context of a $5 trillion economy, and a global economy many times that size, is like a pebble's waves on the ocean surface.

Proponents of the interest rate argument are not even consistent. Even with a deficit reduction package of $40 billion, the budget deficit is expected to increase by about $130 billion from fiscal year 1990 to fiscal year 1991. This means that if interest rates are affected significantly by the budget deficit, they would be driven upward by the Budget Agreement targets, not downward. If proponents of the interest rate theory really considered their argument in detail, in the face of a recession it would be irresponsible of them to accept a paltry $40 billion deficit reduction package.

We find ourselves in this predicament because the Congress convinced the White House that the only way to deal with the budget was to convene a Summit. The sole purpose of the Summit was to hide the budget deliberation from the public eye and to allow proposals to be advanced and adopted without the public knowing whose fingerprints were on them. The secret Summiteers did not have the courage of their convictions to defend their ideas in public debate, so they sought the shelter of anonymity.

The Agreement was presented to the Congress on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The President and the Senate Majority Leader went on television to encourage the American people to voice their support for the package. The American people expressed themselves, all right. Overwhelmingly, the calls received by Congress were in strong opposition to the Budget Agreement. Despite the exceptional efforts of the secret Summiteers, the Agreement went down to defeat in the House of Representatives. It was a take-it-or-leave it deal, and the American people shouted: Leave it!

The package put together in the Finance Committee has been accurately described as the Budget Summit Agreement with softened edges. In fact, the leadership of the Finance Committee took the Budget Summit Agreement as its starting point and then began a Committee mini-summit.

The Committee leadership has met numerous times, all behind closed doors. Members caucused numerous times, all behind closed doors. The package was then presented to the whole Committee for discussion and informal markup, again behind closed doors, and with a clear leadership understanding that member's amendments would be opposed—the fix was in.

These informal discussions are not necessarily or always bad. But there comes a point where public hearings, and public discussion and debate are essential to safeguard the democratic process. When virtually the entire legislative process is done out of public view, it not only conflicts with our national values and traditions, but it breeds the kinds of legislative disasters for which the Congress is rightly scolded. The reconciliation tax bill the Committee has reported out may turn out to be one of the best examples of a late-night, closed-doors disaster that we have seen.

The rallying cry of the tax and spend crowd has become: Tax The Rich. Many people, though certainly not all, agree with the ability-to-pay proposition, i.e. that the wealthy should pay a higher total tax relative to their income than should middle-income taxpayers and that middle income taxpayers should pay more than lower-income taxpayers. But it is fair to wonder if enough isn't already enough.

As the table below describes, when measured by income levels, under our current tax system the top 1% of taxpayers earn 13.4% of all income and pay 24.8% of the Federal income tax. The top 5% of all taxpayers earn 28% of the total income and pay 44.8% of the tax. The top half of all taxpayers earn 86.4% of all income and pay 94.6% of the tax. A tax system in which the top half of all taxpayers already pay almost 95% of the tax while the bottom half pays about 5% is not merely progressive, it is punitive.

[In percent]

While the package the Finance Committee is reporting out isn't as extreme as other proposals floating around the Capitol, it clearly achieves the tax-the-rich goal. For example, the package includes a provision that reduces by 5% of their adjusted gross income the itemized deductions that may be taken by individuals with incomes over $100,000.

The effect of this provision, much like the effect of the so-called bubble (which results from phasing out personal exemptions and the 15% tax rate for upper-income individuals) is to increase the effective top tax rate by about 1.67 percentage points. The effective top income tax rate, therefore, has been raised from 33% to almost 35%. Ironically, after all the opposition from the White House over the bubble and preserving the existing tax rate structure, the Finance Committee has managed to slip in a higher tax rate.

The charities are strongly opposed to this proposal, and for good reason. For, although the 5% limit is low enough so as not to affect most individuals' decisions as to whether and how much to give, it is not hard to read the writing on the wall. Over time, the 5% rate will be raised, first to 8%, then to 10%, then to 50%, and so forth. And while the rate increases, the threshold will fall to $90,000, then to $75,000, and so on. And with each change, more and more Americans will become discouraged by the tax treatment of charitable giving.

The rich are also the primary target of the tax on luxury items. There is no policy reason to support this new tax. It is just a convenient means to hit up higher-income individuals for another $2.1 billion. These are not so much luxury taxes as envy taxes; it is the codification of covetousness.

The Finance Committee has given upper middle income taxpayers a higher tax rate as well. Currently, both employers and employees pay a 1.45% Hospital Insurance (HI) tax on gross wages to fund Medicare, along with a 6.2% tax to fund Social Security. In each case, only the first $51,300 of wage income is subject to tax under current law.

Under the Finance Committee proposal, the wage cap for the HI tax is raised to $89,000. Since the employee pays all of his tax and much or all of the employer's share of the tax, this proposal is equivalent to raising the income tax rate of a very large number of taxpayers from 28% to almost 31%, and another tax rate increase is slipped in through the back door to raise $19 billion.

The rich aren't the only ones offered the opportunity to pay for Congress' inability to restrain spending. For example, even though the price at the pump for a gallon of gas has increased over 27 cents since the Iraqi invasion, the Finance Committee has decided to raise an additional $42.6 billion by more than doubling the gas tax.

The gas tax was originally levied under a compact with the American people that the funds raised would be placed into the Highway Trust Fund to be spent on transportation infrastructure such as highways, bridges, tunnels, and mass transit. The Hooverites on the Finance Committee have broken this compact because only half of the money raised by the gas tax increase goes into the Trust Fund, the other half goes to deficit reduction.

Having broken faith with taxpayers, the Committee may be criticized as well for counting the taxes that are deposited into the Trust Fund as deficit reduction. Clearly, taxes raised to be spent will eventually be spent, and so it is disingenuous to count the increased inflow into the Trust Fund as deficit reduction.

One of the biggest tax increases on businesses falls on the life insurance industry. Whatever the technical merits of the proposal, the effect of this $8 billion revenue grab is nearly to double the industry's taxes overnight.

According to the Finance Committee, the rich would seem to be anyone who works for a living, drives a car, has a small business, drinks wine or smokes cigarettes, buys life insurance or works for a life insurance company, or has a telephone.

As if taxpayers were not punished enough, the Finance Committee has also included a provision giving the Internal Revenue Service a bigger stick to use on corporate taxpayers who have the gaul to contest an IRS agent's claim for additional taxes. Under current law, if a taxpayer contests a claim and ultimately loses to the IRS, interest is charged on the outstanding amount. These interest charges are normal costs of doing business and may be deducted from a corporation's taxable income.

The Finance Committee has decided that corporate taxpayers should not be allowed to deduct these interest charges, effectively raising the rate of interest from around 12% to around 18%. Not only does this further tilt the balance in a dispute in the IRS' favor, but it sets a dangerous precedent for eventually disallowing interest as a normal business expense.

Some Senators intone gravely that we may be playing "Russian Roulette" with the economy if we don't get our budget deficit under control by raising taxes. The reality, however, is that this package is the economic version of the Dark Ages medical practice of bleeding the patient to effect a cure. Applying the tax leeches to the American economy may well worsen the biggest budget buster of all—recession. And next year we could be facing a budget dilemma that makes this year's deliberations look like a cake walk.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

BUDGET RECONCILIATION RECOMMENDATIONS

Pursuant to H. Con. Res. 310, the Congressional Budget Resolution Conference Report, the Committee on Governmental Affairs has approved legislation which is projected to reduce the Fiscal Year (FY) 1991 budget deficit by approximately $2.165 billion, and reduce the Federal deficit by approximately $14.350 billion over five years (in fiscal years 1991–1995). These savings are achieved through Federal general government and pension and postal reforms, including the elimination of the Civil Service lump sum retirement option.

ELIMINATION OF RETIREMENT LUMP-SUM CREDIT

The Committee has approved legislation that would implement President Bush's FY 1991 budget proposal to eliminate the lump-sum retirement credit that certain federal and postal employees elect to receive upon retirement. Under the terms of the reconciliation agreement, the lump-sum credit would be eliminated November 1, 1990.

An employee who elects retirement and the lump-sum benefit by October 31, 1990, would receive 50 percent of the amount of the lump-sum credit at the time of retirement, and 50 percent of the amount of the lump-sum credit on the date 12 months after the date on which the lump-sum credit would otherwise have been paid. The remainder of the lump-sum credit shall be payable with interest.

The CBO estimates that elimination of this retirement option will reduce the Federal budget deficit by $1.23 billion in FY 1991 alone, and by $8.05 billion in FY 1991–1995.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE HEALTH BENEFITS PROGRAM

Postal Service and D.C. Government

The Committee has approved legislation that would implement President Bush's FY 1991 budget proposal to require the United States Postal Service to pay Federal Employee Health Benefit (FEHB) costs for annuitants and their survivors who retired between June 30, 1971 (the date of the Postal Reorganization) and October 1, 1986, and to require the District of Columbia Government to pay the FEHB costs of its retirees (and their survivors).

Under current law, the Postal Service is required to pay the employer's share of FEHB costs for annuitants (and their survivors) who retired after September 30, 1986. Most Postal Service annuitants retired between 1971 and 1986. Their benefits are currently paid by the taxpayers as opposed to the Postal Service.

The CBO estimates that this transfer of liability for premium payments will reduce the deficit by $726 million in FY 1991 and $4.431 billion in fiscal years 1991–1995.

Non-Medicare Eligible Annuitants

For the 1990 Budget Summit, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) included a proposal to apply Medicare hospital and physician payment limits to payments to providers of services to FEHBP annuitant enrollees who are age 65 and older but not eligible for Medicare. The Committee has approved legislation that would implement the OMB proposal for hospital payments.

The proposal to apply Medicare limits to non-Medicare annuitants over 65 would reduce expenditures for FEHBP hospital claims. If this is the case, savings will be realized initially through reduced outlays (increased reserves) of the FEHBP Trust Fund. Then, when premiums are negotiated for 1992 and beyond, additional savings will accrue to the Government because the premium reduction will reduce the Government's premium share (as calculated by using the Big Six formula). However, while the aggregate effect on enrollees' premium payments might be to reduce them, the distributional effect of the proposal is uncertain.

The CBO estimates that enactment of this proposal will reduce the deficit by $190 million in Fiscal Year 1991 and by $1.53 billion over the next five fiscal years.

FEHB State Premium Taxes

Under current law, FEHB insurance carriers are required to pay state premium taxes. These taxes are built into the program's premium base. Exempting carriers from paying this tax would result in a premium reduction (which of course, reduces the Government's share).

The Committee recommendation would exempt the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program from state premium tax requirements in a manner similar to the exemption presently applicable to the Federal Employee's Life Insurance Fund. It is estimated that enactment of this proposal will reduce the deficit by $31 million in FY 1991 and $155 million over the next 5 fiscal years.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT REFORM

The Committee has approved legislation that includes the text of H.R. 5450, the Computer Matching and Privacy Protection Act Amendments of 1990. The Administration supports enactment of the measure. This bill marks two changes to the Computer Matching and Privacy Protection Act of 1988. First, the bill changes the period of time required by law to notify recipients of Federal benefit programs about the results of a computer match prior to taking adverse action against individuals. Second, the bill creates an alternative to independent verification requirements set up by the 1988 law in limited circumstances.

The 1988 Act established procedures for Federal and State agencies to follow when conducting computer matches using Federal information subject to the Privacy Act. These computer matches are generally used to check the eligibility of individuals to receive government benefits, like Food Stamps and AFDC. The law requires adequate due process protection for individuals, particularly that prior to taking adverse action against an individual based on the results of a match, the agency must wait 30 days after giving notice. This gives the individual an opportunity to contest the results of the match. The law also requires the agency to take steps to independently verify the results of the match prior to taking adverse action.

Prior to the law's enactment, several state agencies administering AFDC, Medicaid and Food Stamps programs—which generally had had a 10 day notice-and-wait period—expressed concern that the 30 day period would result in overpayments to individuals who did not qualify for benefits. These overpayments would then have to be recouped by the agency. States also expressed concern about the costs they would incur from having to independently verify certain information received from the Federal Government.

Accordingly, the bill modifies the notice and wait provision by allowing the agency to use the notice and wait period of the underlying benefit program before taking adverse action based on a computer match result. If the underlying program has no notice and wait requirement, the 30 day period contained in the original law is retained.

The bill also provides for an alternative means of verifying information for purposes of complying with the law. The bill allows adverse action to be taken without independent verification if the Data Integrity Board of the agency providing the information determines that the information is limited only to identification of the individual (such as name and SS number), and that there is a high degree of confidence that the information in the records provided by the agency is accurate.

The CBO estimates that enactment of these provisions will produce a five-year cost savings of $270 million.

The Committee has approved legislation that includes the text of H.R. 3139, the Portability of Benefits for Department of Defense Nonappropriated Fund Employees Act of 1989. The Department of Defense (DoD) has nearly 200,000 nonappropriated fund (NAF) employees who work in the military morale, welfare, and recreation work force. The FY 89 Defense Authorization Act required DoD to reorganize the nonappropriated fund work force, which would cause up to 6,000 NAF employees to be converted to the civil service and up to 2,000 civil service employees to be converted to nonappropriated fund status.

H.R. 3139 will allow the affected employees to make these changes without a loss in pay or benefits, such as retirement, leave, and health and life insurance. The bill allows service as a NAF employee to be creditable as Federal service for purposes of: determining the order or retention during a reduction-in-force; computing the period of service used for determining eligibility for a periodic step increase; and determining the number of years of service applicable for accrual of annual leave.

The bill allows all annual leave, sick leave, and home leave of a NAF employee who moves to a civil service position to be transferred without limit. Likewise, all annual leave, sick leave, and home leave of a civil service employee who moves to a NAF position will be transferred without limit.

The CBO estimates that enactment of these provisions will produce a $6 million dollar savings in FY 91, with a five year savings of $30 million.

Reforms in the Health Benefits Program

Section 8007 includes four specific legislative reforms in the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program (FEHBP).

Section 8007(a) amends section 8902 of title 5, United States Code, by adding a new subsection (n). The new subsection directs that contracts for health benefits insurance under service benefit plans, indemnity benefit plans, and employee organization plans must require carriers to implement hospitalization cost-containment measures and establish incentives to encourage compliance with the measures implemented. Comprehensive medical plans are intentionally excluded from coverage of this new provision since the cost-containment measures envisioned by the amendment are inherent in the operation of those types of plans.

New section 8902(n)(1), subparagraphs (A) through (D), enumerate specific cost-containment measures which must be included in those implemented by the carrier in any contract for benefits. The specific measures are directed primarily toward pre-admission certification in non-emergency situations and large-case management.

Section 8007(b) amends section 8909(a) of title 5, United States Code, to require tighter management controls in disbursement of moneys from the Employees Health Benefits Fund (Benefits Fund). The amendment requires that payments made from the Benefits Fund to plans participating in the letter-of-credit account disbursement method be made only on a checks-presented basis (as defined by the Department of the Treasury). Consequently, plans would receive transfers of money only when actually needed by the plans to honor plan checks as they are presented for payment. Under existing practice, some plans have received transfers of money upon receipt of claims rather than issuance of beneficiary or provider payments.

Section 8007(d) amends section 8910 of title 5, United States Code, to add a new subsection (d). The new subsection requires the Office of Personnel Management, in consultation with the Department of Health and Human Services, to develop and implement a system through which health benefits plan carriers will be able to identify Medicare-eligible FEHBP annuitants. Establishment of this system will ensure that payments under coordination of benefits with Medicare do not exceed the present or future statutory maximums which physicians may charge Medicare beneficiaries.

Section 8007(e) sets forth the effective date for all amendments made by section 8002 as January 1, 1991. The amendments will apply with respect to all contract years beginning on or after that date.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIA RY,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget,
Washington, DC.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Ranking Minority Member,
Committee on the Budget,
Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM AND PETE: Pursuant to your letter of October 7, 1990, requesting the Committee on the Judiciary to submit $91 million in reconciliation recommendations, please note the attached description.

The Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights has prepared a detailed explanation and legislative language which outlines the revenues to be realized through Patent and Trademark Officer user fee increases authorized by subsections (a) and (b) of sections 41 of title 35, United States Code.

We hope these recommendations will be helpful to you during the consideration of the reconciliation bill.

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT

SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORT LANGUAGE

Section 01 imposes a surcharge, during fiscal years 1991 through 1995, on certain Patent and Trademark Office fees in order to fully fund the operations of the Office in fiscal years 1991 through 1995. Currently, the Trademark functions are 100% financed through user fees and the Patent Office is approximately two-thirds user fees.

According the Congressional Budget Office, the deficit reduction target of $91 million will be met through a surcharge of 56 percent on applications for patents and the patent issuance and maintenance fees. The Patent and Trademark Office will be entitled to use the surcharge for its authorized activities and operations.

The surcharge shall be effective on the date of enactment of this Act, notwithstanding the requirements of section 41(g) of title 35, United States Code, and section 31 of the Trademark Act of 1946, as amended (15 U.S.C. 1113) that require publication sixty days before fees may be effective. This is necessary so that the Office can put the new fees into effect immediately.

U.S. SENATE, COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. JAMES SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SASSER: The Senate Labor and Human Resources reported its reconciliation recommendations to the Senate Budget Committee this morning. The Legislative language of these recommendations is attached.

The recommendations achieved savings in entitlement programs and new revenues totalling $3.48 billion for fiscal years 1991-1995. The Senate Labor Committee reconciliation recommendations comply with the instructions of the Senate Budget Committee.

This letter will serve as the official transmittal of the reconciliation recommendations to the Senate Budget Committee.

Sincerely,

EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

REPORT LANGUAGE ON EDUCATION PORTIONS OF BUDGET RECONCILIATION

In conducting the appeals process described in Section 10102, the Committee expects the Secretary to review each school on a case-by-case basis. In the situation of an institution that is appealing on the basis of the miscalculation of default rate, it is the Committee's intent that such review be conducted in an expeditious manner with the total review time exceeding no more than 30 days.

In conducting a review under the condition of mitigating circumstances described in Section —, it is the Committee's intent that the Secretary review a number of factors including the socio-economic status of the students served by the institution as indicated by the number of students who receive Pell Grants, the progress made by the institution in reducing the number or dollar value of defaulted loans, the economic health and general state of employment in the region, the historic mission of the school, and the successful completion and job placement of students. The Committee intends that these criteria be reflected in regulations published in the Federal Register no later than June 1, 1991.

Finally, the Committee wishes to note that the action taken in last year's Budget Reconciliation eliminating the SLS Program from high default schools has resulted in extensive savings. Continuation of the 30% cut-off trigger continues under this budget agreement through FY 1992 and lowers to a 25% cut-off level in the subsequent years.

COMMITTEE REPORT LANGUAGE: LABOR-RELATED PENALTIES CHAPTER OF RECONCILIATION

This chapter is an integral element of the Labor and Human Resources Committee's reconciliation package, both from a budget standpoint as well as from a policy standpoint. The policy justifications for the changes in penalties for violations of health and safety laws are discussed in detail below.

As a budgetary matter, the Budget Committee has instructed the Committee on Labor and Human Resources to produce nearly $3.5 billion in deficit reduction over the next five years. The Budget Committee also mandated that a significant portion of that deficit reduction must come from a net increase in new revenues—$840 million over five years. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the proposed changes in this chapter raise more than $1.1 billion in new revenues. The nearly $300 million in reduced revenues that result from the pension asset reversion chapter of this title offset some of these new penalty revenue gains. But the net revenue increase results in full compliance with our instructions from the Budget Committee. In addition, the penalties affected by this chapter are solely within the jurisdiction of the Labor and Human Resources Committee and do not affect the jurisdiction of any other committee.

MSHA Penalties

The Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 820(a)) provides for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 against an operator for each violation of a mandatory health or safety standard or other violation of the Act. According to the Department of Labor, civil penalties were first assessed by the Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) under the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969. The Department has indicated that there has been no increase in the $10,000 maximum civil penalty since 1969.

While the statutory maximum has remained unchanged for two decades, the cost of living (as measured by the consumer price index) has increased by over 300 per cent. Inflation has decimated the deterrent effect of this penalty. In real terms, the current mine safety civil penalty ceiling is now less than $3,000. In order to restore the civil penalty ceiling to its original level, the Committee must at least triple the maximum penalty. Thus the Committee has agreed to increase the maximum penalty from $10,000 to $30,000.

OSHA Penalties

The Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (29 U.S.C. 666) authorizes a number of civil penalties: fines up to $10,000 for each willful or repeated violation of the Act; fines up to $1,000 for each serious or other-then-serious violation; fines up to $1,000 for each violation of the posting requirements; and fines up to $1,000 for each violation of the posting requirements; and fines up to $1,000 per day beyond a stated abatement date for failure to correct a violation. The maximum civil penalties under the OSH Act have never been increased. Like the civil penalties for mine safety violations, OSH Act civil penalties, in real dollar terms, have been reduced dramatically by inflation. Simply to keep pace with inflation, the OSH Act maximum civil penalties must be increased more than threefold.

Merely returning OSH Act civil penalties to their original 1970-level, however, will not correct the woefully inadequate enforcement history of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA). In recent years, this Committee has conducted extensive oversight hearings on OSHA civil and criminal enforcement efforts. One major conclusion from those hearings is that OSHA has not lived up to its stated purposes: to "assure so far as possible every working man and woman in the nation safe and healthful working conditions." The penalties assessed are not large enough to force employers to comply with the law. For example, according to the General Accounting Office, in fiscal year 1988, the average assessed penalty for a serious violation was only $261.

In an effort to provide civil penalties with "real teeth", the Committee has increased the existing maximum penalty levels by five times. Under the Committee's approach, the maximum allowable penalties will be : $50,000 for each willful or repeated violation; $5,000 for each serious or other-than-serious violation; $5,000 for each violation of the posting requirements; and $5,000 per each day beyond a stated abatement date for failure to correct a violation.

These amounts are discretionary ceilings. In practice, most fines imposed are a mere fraction of the maximum penalty. For example, at the Film Recovery Systems company, workplace conditions were so egregious that a corporate executive was convicted for murder under state law in the death of a worker. Yet the penalty imposed by OSHA was only $2,400. In order to ensure that violators are in fact fined at an effective level, the Committee has adopted mandatory minimum penalties for certain OSH Act violations. Mandatory minimum penalties are relatively common in federal law. The President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency, in a 1988 study of federal civil money penalties, listed several dozen statutory provisions containing mandatory minimum penalties. For example, the civil penalty for smuggling merchandise by airplane in violation of the customs laws is twice the value of the merchandise, "but not less than $10,000." 19 U.S.C. 1590(c).

The new mandatory OSH Act minimum penalties are scaled to reflect the nature of the violation—higher penalties for more egregious offenses. The mandatory minimums are: $5,000 for a willful violation; $1,000 for a repeated violation; $500 for a serious violation and $100 for an other-than-serious violation. These mandatory minimum penalties are penalty floors and they are not intended to become penalty ceilings. The Committee expects OSHA to issue fines well above these mandatory minimum levels when the violation warrants such a penalty. But the Committee notes that these mandatory minimum levels are for initial, assessed penalties. OSHA's current ability to settle particular cases at below the initial assessed penalty level remains unchanged by this provision.

But even if Congress requires effective civil penalties, this is still not enough to ensure meaningful compliance with the OSH Act. The Department of Labor's own Inspector General has testified that criminal sanctions under the OSH Act are "essential" to deter "needless injuries and death." The Inspector General declared that achieving a "credible deterrent" through criminal enforcement, including incarceration, "is the only way to achieve broad-based compliance with the law."

The current criminal penalties under the OSH Act are painfully inadequate. The Department of Labor has acknowledged that the current criminal penalty levels have reduced incentives for the Justice Department to prosecute violations aggressively. Moreover, the Justice Department has indicated in writing that it welcomes increased criminal sanctions under the OSH Act.

In order to create a credible deterrent, the Committee has agreed to increase the minimum incarceration penalties for the current criminal offenses under the OSH Act as follows: (1) for willfull violation of an OSH Act health or safety standard that causes the death of a worker, from six months to 10 years for a first conviction and from one year to 20 years for a second conviction; (2) for providing advance notice of any inspection under the OSH Act, from six months to 2 years; and (3) for knowingly making a false statement in any document required under the OSH Act, from six months to one year. In addition, the Committee has agreed to create a new criminal sanctions for willful violation of the OSH Act that causes serious bodily injury to an employee with a maximum prison term of 5 years for a first conviction, 10 years for a second conviction. The new sanction includes a definition of "serious bodily injury" that is consistent with current statutory definitions and court interpretations of that term.

The Committee also makes clear that for any criminal offense under the OSH Act, a fine in accordance with section 3571 of title 18 of the United States Code may be imposed in lieu of or in addition to a term of imprisonment. Under that section, the maximum fine that may be imposed is determined by the category of crime committed, which in turn is determined by the maximum term or imprisonment authorized. Thus the maximum prison term is integrally linked to the maximum criminal fine allowed. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the changes in OSH Act criminal penalties "would result in increased revenue to the federal government in fiscal years 1991 to 1995".

With regard to any fines imposed upon individual directors, officers or agents of an employer for criminal violations of the OSH Act, the Committee provides that such individuals shall not be allowed to rely on the assets of the employer to pay the fines. Thus individuals who are responsible for willful disregard of workplace safety and health standards will be prevented from passing on the costs of their criminal acts to the corporate entity.

Finally, the Committee expressly preserves the right of state and local law enforcement authorities to bring criminal prosecutions under state or local law. The criminal sanctions in the OSH Act should not displace general criminal sanctions in state or local law, including such crimes as murder, reckless homicide or assault.

Employer Pension Reversions and Transfers to Retiree Health Benefits

As part of the original bi-partisan Budget agreement, the Labor and Tax Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives were directed to amend current law to permit employers to make limited transfers of "excess" pension plan assets to retiree health benefit accounts and to limit the ability of employers to terminate pension plans and take tax-deferred assets. The Budget Resolution adopted by the Congress included the deficit reduction amounts resulting from enactment of these provisions. Enactment of these provisions is expected to raise approximately $500 million in fiscal year 1991 and $1 billion in fiscal years 1991-1995.

Employer Pension Reversions

Both of these pension policy issues have been the source of considerable Committee consideration and debate over the past several years. Since 1984, the Committee has been concerned that the practice of terminating pension plans and recapturing "excess" assets seriously undermines and jeopardizes workers, retirement benefits. During each of the past several Congresses, the Committee has reported out legislation to protect the pension benefits of workers and retirees in cases where employers terminate pension plans to recover so-called "excess" pension assets.

The employer pension reversion phenomenon has raised fundamental concerns about the funding of, and tax-preferred treatment accorded to, employer-sponsored pension plans. Prior to enactment of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), the overwhelming majority of pension plans did not contain sufficient funds to meet workers' promised retirement benefits. Because the termination of numerous underfunded pension plans left tens of thousands of workers with little or no retirement benefits, Congress included strong tax incentives to employers to assure the adequate funding of pension plans.

By the early 1980's, Congress had succeeded in its goal as the majority of the nation's pension plans became well-funded. The unexpectedly strong stock market and high investment returns further increased the amount of assets accumulating in pension plans. (Although pension plans may be "overfunded" at a given point in time based upon current obligations, the so-called "excess" assets are needed to meet the future retirement obligations of the plan.) During this time, mergers and takeovers became prevalent. This widespread corporate restructuring created a need for ready cash. The assets in pension plans posed an attractive and financially lucrative means of financing for corporate transactions.

Initially, the government questioned the legality of employer attempts to terminate pension plans and raid the assets. But in 1984, the Reagan administration, after much employer lobbying, reversed its position and permitted the practice. As a result, tens of thousands of employers terminated their pension plans. The retirement security of millions of workers and retirees was destroyed. Congressional committees, including this committee, began to look into these transactions and the effect on workers and retirees. The growing realization that the Federal Government was subsidizing pension plan terminations because of the tax-deferred treatment of pension plan contributions and the interest earned, led Congress to enact a 10% excise tax on employer reversions in 1986. The excise tax was increased to 15% in 1988.

Study after study has demonstrated that workers, retirees, and taxpayers are harmed by pension plan raiding. Following a plan termination, current workers generally receive lower future pension benefits, retirees are less likely to receive cost of living adjustments, the Federal Government loses significant tax revenue and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, which insures pension plans, has increased exposure as a result of less well-funded pension plans. The findings of the Committee are more fully detailed and explained in S. Rept. No. 101-294 on S. 685, the Employee Pension Protection Act.

The Committee has long believed legislation is needed to protect the pension benefits of workers and retirees before employers may recover pension assets. Most recently, the Committee favorably reported S. 685, the Employee Pension Protection Act, to protect workers and retirees in employer reversion transactions. The provisions adopted by the Committee in this Budget Reconciliation Act take a comparable approach to protect the interests of all parties in pension plan assets. The goals of the Committee are two-fold: first, to reduce the incentive to employers to terminate pension plans as a means to financing other corporate needs; and second, to ensure that the interests of workers, retirees and the Federal Government are fairly protected before a company may gain access to pension plan assets.

The provisions adopted by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, as part of the Budget Reconciliation Act, amend ERISA and the Internal Revenue Code to protect the interests of workers and the Federal Government in the following manner.

First, in order to recoup some of the revenue lost by the Federal Government due to the tax-deferred treatment provided to pension plan contributions and the interest earned thereon, the excise tax on employer reversions is increased to 20%. A recent General Accounting Office report concluded that the excise tax would need to be increased to 40% to fully recapture the value of the tax benefits realized by the employer as a result of the special tax treatment of plan contributions and the interest earned thereon. The Committee believes that a 20% excise tax is a reasonable amount of recovery to the Federal Government if accompanied by sufficient additional protections for the interests of workers and retirees.

Second, in order to protect the benefits promised to workers and retirees, the Act requires the employer to either set aside a portion of the excess assets for the benefit of the workers in another pension plan or provide benefit increases to workers and retirees. Specifically, the employer must either (a) transfer 20% of the "excess" assets to a replacement pension plan to be used to provide pension benefits to the workers or (b) provide benefit increases with a present value equal to 15% of the "excess" assets to both the active workers and retirees.

If the employer chooses option (a), the assets must be transferred either to a defined benefit or to a defined contribution pension plan covering substantially all of the active participants in the terminated pension plan. The assets transferred may only be used to provide pension benefits under the replacement plan. The employer may reduce the amount of assets transferred if benefit increases are provided during the 60 day period preceding the termination. Such increases must be provided on a nondiscriminatory pro rata basis. Previously agreed-upon increases, such as increases scheduled to occur under a collective bargaining agreement, shall not offset the amount required to be transferred. Nonactive participants may be included in any benefit increase.

Although employers are not required to include retired workers in the replacement plan or use any of the transferred assets for the benefit of retired employees, the Committee encourages employers to make every effort to take the retirement needs and security of retired workers into consideration. Retired workers live on fixed benefits that are constantly being eroded by inflation. Historically, employers have used "excess" pension assets to provide cost of living adjustments to retirees. As a result of the "legalization" of pension raiding in 1984, the incidence of retiree inflation adjustments has declined. In addition, the instability of the insurance market has increased the riskiness of pension annuity contracts, leaving retirees in an even more vulnerable position.

If the employer chooses to provide benefit increases through alternative (b), nonactive participants must be included. No less than 15% of the maximum amount that the employer could receive as an employer reversion may be used for benefit increases. Current workers must receive immediate increases in their future benefits and retired participants and beneficiaries must receive immediate increases in their annuities or otherwise distributed benefits. No more than 40% of assets may be used for benefit increases to nonactive participants.

If an employer fails to comply with the above requirements, an additional 20% excise tax must be paid to the federal government. The committee expects that few employers will fall into this category. It is in the long-term financial interest of employers to provide a basic level of protection to workers and retirees, rather than contributing additional funds to the federal government. The only exception to this additional excise tax is in the event the employer is in financial distress and thus being forced to liquidate its operations under chapter 7 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. Although the Committee is concerned that the workers and retirees are being asked to sacrifice some of their retirement benefits for companies in financial distress, it is likely that the same workers and retirees are the major creditors of the liquidating employer. Where there are limited amounts of available assets, the immediate salary and other benefit needs of workers and retirees also are of significant importance. The Committee remains troubled by this regrettable circumstance where in any event the workers and retirees are harmed. The Committee is aware that the termination of the pension plan may occur in other circumstances of financial restructuring, such as reorganization under chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. Where the company will remain viable, the retirement security of the workers and retirees remains imperative. The bankruptcy trustee should make every effort to provide a replacement pension plan for the workers and utilize the pension plan assets to meet the future retirement needs of the workers and retirees.

The option either to transfer or increase benefits is set at percentages of 20% and 15% because those are the percentages that are consistent with the Committee's Budget Reconciliation instruction. A majority of the members of the Committee support stronger protection for workers and prefer requiring either that 30% be transferred to another pension plan or that 25% be used to provide benefit increases to workers and retirees. In the event that the other Committees of jurisdiction include higher levels of protection, the Labor Committee will support the stronger amounts of worker protection.

The amendments to ERISA make clear that these provisions are subject to the full weight of the fiduciary responsibility requirements of the law. It is the relevant fiduciary's responsibility to ensure that the requirements of this Act are satisfied as well as accomplished in conformity with the existing fiduciary obligations of ERISA. As under ERISA, fiduciaries are personally liable for breach of these provisions and participants have the right to sue to ensure compliance and redress violations of the law.

Transfers to Retiree Health Benefits

The second change in current law made by this Act is the provision permitting employers to transfer certain "excess" pension assets to meet their existing retiree health benefit obligations for a limited period of time. Under current law, employers may pre-fund their pension benefit obligations on a tax-deferred basis and pension plan assets may only be used to provide retirement benefits. Health benefit plans are not provided tax-deferred pre-funding treatment under current law.

As health care costs have rapidly escalated, employers have vigorously lobbied for some form of health benefit pre-funding. The Financial Accounting Standards Board will soon require retiree health benefit liabilities be reported on financial balance sheets. The new requirement further increases the pressure from employers to permit some pre-funding of these obligations. In light of the current budget deficit, general tax-deferred pre-funding of health benefits is not a realistic option. The Committee has decided to provide short-term relief by permitting employers to use "excess" pension assets, on a tax-free basis, to diminish their current retiree health benefit obligations.

Many members of Congress are sympathetic to the need to provide funding for health benefits. But allowing the use of pension assets for this purpose is deeply troubling. This change in longstanding pension policy involves the crucial determination of whether pension plans actually contain "excess" pension assets. Even if pension plans contain assets in excess of their current obligations, these assets are needed to meet future retirement benefits. The difference between terminations and transfers is that under a transfer the pension plan remains in existence. Therefore, workers still retain their plans and continue to earn future benefits. But the security of the pension funds may be seriously jeopardized in the event of a recession or change in the financial status of the employer. Balancing the health care needs of workers and retirees against their retirement needs is a difficult if not impossible dilemma for Congress.

With these concerns in mind, the Committee has reluctantly agreed to provide employers the ability to use pension plan assets to fund their retiree health benefit expenses for a limited period of time and provided certain minimum pension and health benefit protections are met. Employers may not automatically transfer pension plan assets. The ability and decision to transfer is fully subject to the existing provisions of ERISA and other laws. Employers under a collective bargaining obligation must negotiate over the transfer. Employers also are subject to other laws such as laws which establish requirements for the payment of wages and benefits for government contractors.

In order to protect pension plan participants and the health of the pension plan, certain pension protections are required. Pension assets may only be transferred if the pension plan is fully funded under current law. Generally, pension plans are fully funded at 150% of current liability. Plans funded based upon accrued liability may transfer assets in excess of 125% of current liability.

Assets may be transferred into a retiree health benefits account under section 401(h) of the Internal Revenue Code only for the same participants of the pension plan. All participants in the pension plan must be 100% vested in their accrued benefits as of the date of the transfer. All participants and the government must be notified 60 days in advance of a transfer.

The transfer is subject to the fiduciary responsibility requirements of ERISA. It is the obligation of the fiduciary to ensure that the funding status of the pension plan is not jeopardized in any way. The transfer must be made solely in the interest of all participants and beneficiaries, must be conducted in a prudent manner, and must be in accordance with the terms of the pension plan. Fiduciaries are personally liable for their actions and participants have the right to sue if any of the provisions of this Act or other laws are not met.

In order to provide some protection to the health benefits promised to retirees, health benefits may not be reduced for a five year period subsequent to a transfer. Any assets transferred in excess of existing retiree health benefit expenses must be returned to the pension plan. The transfer provision expires after December 31, 1995. After such date, pension plan assets may only be used to provide retirement benefits to workers and retirees.

Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation Premium Increase

The bipartisan Budget agreement and the modified Budget Resolution adopted by Congress assume an increase in the annual premiums paid to the PBGC sufficient to reduce the federal deficit by $120 million in fiscal year 1991 and $640 million in fiscal years 1991–1995.

Currently, employers pay a flat premium of $16 a year for each participant covered by a single-employer defined benefit pension plan that is insured by the PBGC. In addition, employers sponsoring underfunded pension plans pay a variable premium of $6 for every $1000 of underfunding, up to a cap of $34.

After many years of insufficient premiums, the PBGC premium was substantially increased in 1985 and again in 1987. The PBGC has maintained a deficit in almost every year of its existence. The 1985 and 1987 increases were calculated to provide the PBGC with adequate resources to meet its long-term potential obligations. In fact, the 1987 increase assumed that the PBGC would be liable for the pension plans of the LTV Corporation which were underfunded by approximately $2 billion. Since that time, as a result of a Supreme Court decision, the PBGC has been relieved of this significant financial burden. Presently, although the PBGC is underfunded by approximately $1 billion and has potential future liabilities between $30–40 billion, its financial status is fairly stable.

The Committee is concerned that the need for an additional premium increase at this time has not been demonstrated. The instruction to raise the premium is solely based on deficit reduction. This is the first time that the Committee has been isntructed to increase PBGC premiums in the absence of a demonstrated need for an increase.

In order to achieve the required level of deficit reduction, the Committee Budget Reconciliation provisions increase the flat PBGC premium to $19, increase the variable premium to $9 for every $1000 of underfunding, and raise the variable cap to $53.

This premium increase retains the current premium structure.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman,
Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Ranking minority member,
Committee on the Budget,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM AND PETE: Pursuant to section 4(a) of House Concurrent Resolution 310, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1991, and action of the Committee at an October 12, 1990, meeting, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs is submitting to the Budget Committee the enclosed legislation and report recommending budget savings. The reconciliation instructions contained in section 4(c)(10) of H. Con. Res. 310 require this Committee to report changes in laws within this Committee's jurisdiction sufficient to reduce outlays for veterans' programs by $620 million in fiscal year 1991 and $3.35 billion in fiscal years 1991-1995.

In order to meet these requirements, our Committee, by voice vote, makes numerous recommendations, all of which are explained in the enclosed report language. In light of the savings levels required, we believe that these recommendations would make savings in the most appropriate areas.

We also have enclosed a cost estimate prepared by the Congressional Budget Office.

Estimated savings resulting from enactment of the legislation we are submitting would exceed the five-year total of $3.35 billion in required reconciliation savings by $2.71 billion. According to CBO estimates, the Committee legislation would achieve net savings of $6.059 billion in outlays over fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

Sincerely,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman.
FRANK H. MURKOWSKI,
Ranking minority member.

TITLE XI—BUDGET RECONCILIATION RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS.

INTRODUCTION

Section 4(c)(10) of the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1991 (H. Con. Res. 310) requires the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs to submit to the Senate Committee on the Budget recommendations for changes in laws within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs that in FY 1991 would reduce outlays by $620 million and outlays in FYs 1991-1995 by $3.35 billion.

On October 12, 1990, the Committee met in open session and by voice vote agreed to recommend legislative provisions that would yield savings of $648 million in FY 1991 and a total of $6.05 billion in FYs 1991-1995.

SUBTITLE A—COMPENSATION AND PENSION

Limitation on Compensation Benefits for Incompetent Veterans Having Estates

Section 11001 of the Committee legislation, which is derived from Administration-requested legislation (S. 2499) would amend section 3203 of title 38, United States Code, so as to limit the amount of accumulated disability compensation payments made to an incompetent veteran which could be inherited by nondependent heirs of the veteran. To achieve this the legislation would provide that, whenever the estate of such a veteran without dependents exceeds $25,000, no further payments of compensation would be made until the estate is reduced to $10,000. The $25,000 limitation would be applied in any case in which an incompetent veteran has neither a spouse, dependent child, nor dependent parent. It would also provide for a lump-sum payment to the veterans of any benefits withheld, should the veteran regain competence for more than 90 days.

Under current law, the amount of funds derived from disability compensation which may accumulate in the estate of an incompetent veteran without dependents is virtually unrestricted, except during period when the veteran is institutionalized at government expense. During such periods of institutionalization, benefit payments are stopped if the veteran's estate exceeds $1,500.

There is also no restriction in Federal law on who may inherit such funds upon the veteran's death. Inheritance of funds accumulated in veterans' estates is subject to the laws of the various States and territories of the United States. While these laws vary as to the specific classes of relatives to inherit when a person dies intestate, all permit inheritance by nondependent heirs. Under section 3202(e) of title 38, only in the absence of any heir recognized by State law do funds held by an incompetent veteran's fiduciary derived form VA benefits (which would otherwise escheat to the State) revert to the federal government.

The Committee legislation would limit the amount of funds which could be inherited by nondependent individuals. This provision would not diminish the amount of money used for the care and maintenance of incompetent veterans and would result in significant savings. Loss of home or possessions would be avoided by the exception of residence and personal effects from the estate limit. There should be no adverse impact on the day-to-day life of the veteran, only on the size of the estate under the fiduciary's control.

This provision would take effect as of November 1, 1990.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11001 would result in savings of $125 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $778 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

Elimination of Presumption of Total Disability in Determination of Pension for Certain Veterans

Section 11002 of the reconciliation legislation would amend section 105(a) of title 38 so as to eliminate the provision in current law pursuant to which a veteran is considered to be permanently and totally disabled for VA pension eligibility purposes at age 65.

Under current law, veterans with specified service during periods of war are eligible for a needs-based pension from VA if they are "permanently and totally disabled" from non-service-connected disabilities and meet certain income tests. Under section 502(a) of title 38, a veteran who is 65 years of age or older is considered to be permanently and totally disabled.

The current VA regulation, section 4.17 of title 38, Code of Federal Regulations, relating to disability ratings for pension, establishes certain disability percentage requirements for ages below 65, which take into account the veteran's age as well as actual disabilities. Thus, on the attainment of age 55, a veteran with a 60-percent rating for one or more disabilities, can be rated as permanently and totally disabled; the requirement at age 60 through 64 is a 50-percent rating.

If this provision is enacted, a veteran seeking VA pension will not be presumed to be permanently and totally disabled simply by virtue of attaining any given age. While the Committee anticipates that the Secretary will set in regulations appropriate guidelines as to the level of disability required for veterans age 65 or over in order to be considered permanently and totally disabled for pension purposes, the Committee expects that there will be an affirmative determination regarding the veteran's disability.

The CBO cost estimate assumes that VA will continue its practice of issuing regulations relating to disability ratings for pension benefits, which take into account the veteran's age as well as actual disabilities.

This provision would take effect as of November 1, 1990. It would not apply to those veterans who are now receiving VA pension.

Savings

According to CBO, enactment of section 11002 would result in savings of $17 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $313 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

Reduction in Pension for Veterans Receiving Medicaid-Covered Nursing Home Care

Section 11003 of the Committee legislation would limit monthly pension payments to $90 for Medicaid-eligible recipients of a VA pension who are in nursing homes participating in Medicaid—except for those who are in State veterans homes.

Under current law, veterans in nursing homes at VA expense who have no dependents have their pension benefits reduced to a maximum of $90 a month after the third month of care but veterans in nursing homes under Medicaid do not have their pension benefits reduced.

Veterans who are receiving VA pension who are in nursing homes under Medicaid are required to apply their VA pension toward the cost of their nursing home care. These payments reduce considerably the costs to the Medicaid program of paying for nursing home care for eligible individuals and, because the pension payments are used to pay for nursing home care, they do not benefit the veteran directly. Because Medicaid is a federally-aided program and the federal-government funds the VA pension program, the end result of this situation is that the federal government funds a very large share of medicaid nursing-home care for VA pensioners.

In a July, 1987, report entitled "VA Pensions to Medicaid Nursing Home Residents Should Be Reduced", the General Accounting Office recommended that Congress amend title 38 to require that VA pension for veterans and their survivors who enter a nursing home under Medicaid be reduced. The report concluded that reducing a Medicaid-eligible nursing-home resident's VA pension would not adversely affect a veteran's access to nursing home care and would result in substantial savings to the federal government.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11003 would save $22 million in outlays in FY 1991 and $539 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

Ineligibility of Remarried Surviving Spouses for Reinstatement of Dependency and Indemnity Compensation or Pension Upon Becoming Single

Section 11004 of the Committee legislation would amend section 103(d) of title 38 so as to preclude a surviving spouse of a veteran who has remarried and subsequently become single from regaining eligibility for dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC) or pension benefits.

Under current law, a surviving spouse of a veteran who died from a service-connected cause, or a needy surviving spouse of a veteran of wartime service who died from a non-service-connected cause, and who remarries, loses eligibility for DIC or VA needs-based pension during the period of the remarriage. However, that eligibility is reinstated when the remarriage is terminated by death or divorce. Likewise under current law, such a surviving spouse who lives with another person and holds himself or herself out openly as that person's spouse is barred from receiving DIC or pension while living with such person. Upon termination of that arrangement, the surviving spouse again becomes eligible.

This provision in the reconciliation legislation would bar these categories of surviving spouses from gaining renewed eligibility for DIC or pension benefits. Under the provision, any claim for reinstated benefits filed prior to November 1, 1990, would not be affected.

Savings

According to CBO, section 11004 would result in savings of $19 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $374 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

Limitation on Cost-of-Living Increases in Compensation Rates

Section 11005 of the reconciliation legislation provides that the cost-of-living adjustment (COLA) for disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation for fiscal year 1991 will be adjusted. Specifically, the increases are to be rounded down to the next lower dollar amount and, because such rounding down would not affect the COLA for veterans rated 20 percent disabled or less, the provision would reduce those COLAs by $1 per month each. The COLA—which currently CBO estimates to be 4.5 percent—will be effective on the same date as the COLA increases provided to Social Security recipients and VA pension beneficiaries.

Savings

According to CBO, section 11005 would result in savings of $18 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savins of $113 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

SUBTITLE B—HEALTH CARE

Medical-Care Cost Recovery

Section 11011 of the Committee legislation would amend section 629 of title 38 so as to expand VA's program of recovery from health insurance companies of the reasonable cost to VA of furnishing medical care for non-service-connected disabilities. Under this provision, VA would be authorized to recover such costs in the cases of insured service-connected-disabled veterans receiving care for their non-service-connected conditions.

Under current law, VA may collect from a third party the reasonable cost of medical care it furnishes for certain nonservice-connected disabilities to the same extent that a provider other than a department or agency of the United States would be eligible to receive payment from that third party. In the cases of all veterans, section 629 applies to non-service-connected disabilities which are covered under (a) a workers' compensation law, (b) a State law concerning no-fault automobile insurance, or (c) a State or local program of compensation for victims of a crime of personal violence. In the cases of veterans who have no service-connected disabilities, VA may attempt to recover the cost of all medical care from their health insurers. Funds collected from third parties are deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and can be used neither to reduce or offset annual appropriations for VA nor to cover immediate expenses incurred by collection efforts. Aside from the three State programs listed above, VA may not seek to recover costs of care from the third parties covering veterans with any service-connected disability.

The Committee legislation would expand VA's medical-care cost recovery program by authorizing collections from third parties for the care provided to all service-connected-disabled veterans for their non-service-connected conditions.

The Committee legislation would also establish a new Medical Care Cost Recovery Fund (MCCRF), into which amounts collected under section 629 and copayments by veterans for certain non-service-connected care (as described below in the discussion of sections 11012 and 11013 of the Committee legislation) would be deposited. This fund would be used only to cover costs incurred by VA in connection with billing and collection efforts. The Secretary of Veterans Affairs would make to the Treasury payments of the amount by which collections deposited in the MCCRF exceed the costs of conducting the program of billing and collections.

In order to establish the MCCRF with a workforce of 800 full-time employee equivalents (the employment level proposed by the Administration), the Committee bill provides for the Secretary to transfer $25 million to the MCCRF from VA's Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund (LGRF) and for the first $25 million collected by VA in FY 1991 to be credited to the LGRF. The Committee expects this advance to be repaid completely during the first quarter of FY 1991.

The Committee notes that it views this provision for making this inter-fund advance an extraordinary one that is necessary to ensure that billing and collection activities under the MCCRF are funded immediately and that, as a consequence, the maximum deficit-reduction effort is achieved. In fact, without such a provision ensuring that the funds are available to initiate MCCRF operations, CBO has advised the Committee that the provision establishing the MCCRF would not be credited with any savings. The Committee does not intend to make a regular practice of such transfers.

The provisions of section 11011 would take effect as of October 1, 1990.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11011 would result in savings of $113 million in outlays in fiscal year 1991 and a total savings of $990 million in outlays in fiscal years 1991 to 1995.

Copayments for Medications

Section 11012 of the Committee legislation would require VA to charge a $2 copayment for each 30-day supply of medication for all non-service-connected veterans for the treatment of any disabilities or conditions and for veterans with service-connected disabilities rated at 0 to 40 percent for the treatment of non-service-connected disabilities or conditions. A veteran would be required to pay $2 for each 30-day supply of each medication. This provision would apply to both prescription drugs and over-the-counter medications.

Current law contains no provision for charging copayments for supply of medication. The Committee legislation would require certain veterans to defray part of the cost of their medications, but would still enable them to receive medications for a fee that is considerably lower than that charged by most alternative sources.

The Committee urges the Secretary to maximize collections under this provision by adopting a policy of making collections at the time medications are provided.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11012 would result in savings of $66 million in outlays is FY 1991 and total saving of $411 million in outlays in fiscal years 1991 to 1995.

Modification of Health-Care Categories and Copayments

Section 11013 of the Committee legislation would amend sections 610, 612, and 622 of title 38 to (1) eliminate the distinction between so-called Category B and C veterans; (2) establish, for the purposes of copayments, two groups of veterans, one of which would not be required to pay copayments for hospital, nursing home, or outpatient care, and the other of which would be charged copayments for those services as a condition of receiving VA care; and (3) add to the existing copayments for hospital and nursing home care daily copayments for such care.

Under section 622(b)(1) of title 38, Category B veterans are those who are not entitled to hospital or nursing home care and whose annual incomes fall within specified levels. Those Category B levels for a veteran with no dependents are not less than $17,241 but not more than $22,986. In the case of a veteran with one dependent, the levels are less than $20,689 but not more than $28,733. Further increases are made for each additional dependent. Under current law, these veterans are eligible for, but not entitled to, VA care and they make no copayments.

Category C veterans are those who are not entitled to hospital or nursing home care and whose annual incomes exceed the applicable Category B upper limits. Except in cases of emergency, Category C veterans are eligible for VA health care only upon agreement prior to admission to make the required copayments. Under section 610(f)(3), the copayment requirement for the first 90 days of hospital care in a 365-day period is the amount of the annual inpatient Medicare deductible (currently $628). The copayment for each additional 90 days (or fraction thereof) after the initial 90 days of such care during that 365-day period is the amount equivalent to one-half the annual inpatient Medicare deductible. For nursing home care, the copayment is the amount of the inpatient Medicare deductible for each 90 days of such care (or fraction thereof) during a given 365-day period. Under section 612(f), the copayment requirement for outpatient care is equivalent to 20 percent of the average cost of an outpatient visit throughout the VA system during the current year. This copayment is currently $26 per visit.

Section 612(f) also provides that no veteran may be required to pay an outpatient copayment which would result in the veteran making total payments to VA, including any for hospital or nursing home care, that would in any 90-day period exceed the Medicare deductible or in any 365-day period exceed an amount equal to four times the Medicare deductible.

Section 11013 of the Committee legislation would modify current law by merging Category B and Category C veterans into one group that is subject to copayment requirements and by adding copayments for each day of care. Thus, for hospital care, veterans whose incomes are above the current Category B threshold and who are not otherwise entitled to hospital care would be required to pay a copayment of $10 for each day of care plus the amount of the Medicare annual inpatient deductible for the first 90 days in a 365-day period or one-half of that amount for each succeeding 90-day period in that 365-day period. For nursing home care, these veterans would be required to pay a copayment of $5 for each day of care plus the amount of the Medicare inpatient deductible for each 90 days of care. For outpatient care, all veterans whose incomes are above the threshold and who are not otherwise entitled to outpatient care under section 612(a) would be charged a per visit copayment in the amount of 20 percent of the average cost of a VA outpatient visit during the calendar year in which the services are furnished, and the existing caps in copayments for outpatient care would be eliminated.

The Committee urges the Secretary to maximize collections under this provision by adopting a policy of making collections at the time care is provided.

The amendments made by section 11013 would take effect as of October 31, 1990.

Savings

According to CBO, enactment of section 11013 would result in savings of $35 million in outlays in fiscal year 1991 and total savings of $217 million in outlays in fiscal years 1991 to 1995.

SUBTITLE C—EDUCATIONAL AND VOCATIONAL ASSISTANCE

Interterm Reduction of Educational Assistance

Section 11021 of the Committee legislation would amend chapter 30 (the All-Volunteer Force Educational Assistance Program), chapter 32 (Post-Vietnam Era Veterans' Educational Assistance), and chapter 35 (Survivors' and Dependents' Educational Assistance) of title 38, and chapter 106 (Educational Assistance for Members of the Selected Reserve) of title 10, United States Code, so as to reduce the amount of educational assistance payable under these chapters to an eligible individual for a period of less than 30 days between semesters, quarters, or other academic terms. The amount of the monthly benefit payable would be reduced for the duration of the period between academic terms to one-third of the amount that would otherwise be payable to an eligible individual. A reduction would not be required for any period of less than seven days.

Currently, under section 1780 of title 38, eligible veterans and other eligible persons participating in VA educational assistance programs continue to receive benefits without reduction for periods between academic terms if this interval does not exceed one full calendar month. If the interval is for more than a month, educational assistance is discontinued for the period between the terms.

The costs of administration of section 11021 would be paid for out of VA's Readjustment Benefits account. The amendments made by this section would take effect on November 1, 1990.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11021 would result in savings of $33 million in outlay in FY 1991 and total savings of $262 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

Elimination of Vocational Rehabilitation Benefits for Certain Disabled Veterans

Section 11022 of the Committee legislation would amend sections 1502 and 1517 of title 38, United States Code, so as to limit eligibility for chapter 31 training and rehabilitation benefits to veterans with service-connected disabilities rated at 30 percent or more.

Under Chapter 31 of title 38 all veterans with compensable service-connected disabilities who have an employment handicap are entitled to rehabilitation services and assistance necessary to enable them to achieve maximum independence in daily living and, to the maximum extent feasible, to become employable and to obtain and maintain suitable employment. Thus, the effect of the proposed legislation would be to eliminate this entitlement of those who have disabilities rated as 10 or 20 percent disabling.

The amendments made by this section would take effect on November 1, 1990.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11022 would result in saving of $30 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $312 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

SUBTITLE D—HOME LOAN GUARANTIES

Election of Claim Under Guaranty of Manufactured Home Loans

Section 11022 of the Committee's reconciliation legislation would authorize VA to accept a claim on a loan on a manufactured home from a lender as soon as the lender is notifed of VA's resale price.

Section 1812(c)(3) of title 38 specifies that when a VA-guaranteed loan on a manufactured home terminates in default, payment on the guaranty may be made only after the liquidation of the security property. Thus, in such a default, VA must satisfy the guaranty by paying the lender the difference between the veteran's debt and the resale price of the manufactured home, up to the maximum amount of the guaranty.

The provision in reconciliation legislation would amend section 1812 so as to authorize VA, on the election of the holder of the loan, to pay the lender's claim based on VA's estimate of the resale value of the property, without waiting for the resale to occur. Any loss or profit on the actual resale would be borne by the lender.

Savings

According to CBO, section 11031 would result in savings of $4 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $14 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

Increase in Certain Loan Origination Fees

Section 11032 of the reconciliation legislation would increase, for the balance of FY 1991, the current loan origination fee by .75 percent. Under this change, the basic fee set forth in section 1829(a) of title 38 would increase from 1.25 percent of the total loan amount to 2.0 percent of such amount for loans closed before September 30, 1990.

The Committee has retained the incentive in current law—in sections 1829(2) (b) and (c)—for veterans who make downpayments of 5 and 10 percent. Thus, the fee would be 1.50 percent for veterans making a downpayment of 5 percent or more and 1.25 percent for those who make downpayments of 10 percent or more on other than manufactured-home loans.

Section 11032 also continues the current exemption for disabled veterans and their surviving spouses from payment of the loan fee and would require the government to pay the fees for those borrowers.

Savings

According to CBO, enactment of section 11032 would result in savings of $94 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $402 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

SUBTITLE E—BURIAL BENEFITS AND GRAVE MARKERS

Limitation of Burial Plot Allowance

Section 11041 of the Committee legislation would amend section 903(b) of title 38 so as to revise the eligibility for the $150 plot allowance, which VA currently pays on behalf of certain deceased veterans. Under current law, this benefit is paid for a veteran who is not buried in a national cemetery and who was, at the time of death, (a) either in receipt of compensation (or but for the receipt of retirement pay would have been entitled to compensation), or in receipt of VA needs-based pension, (b) was discharged or released from active military, naval, or air service for disability incurred in the line of duty, or (c) was a veteran of any war. Under section 903(b)(1) of title 38, if an eligible veteran is buried (without charge for the cost of a plot or interment) in a State veterans cemetery which has the same criteria for burial as a national cemetery, VA may pay the $150 plot allowance directly to the State. The Committee legislation would continue to allow plot allowances to be paid to State veterans cemeteries for the interment of any veteran who meets the current eligibility criteria for that benefit, but would limit eligibility for the plot allowance to the cases of veterans who, at the time of death, are eligible for burial benefits under section 902(a) of title 38.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11041 would result in savings of $27 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $147 million in outlays in FYs 1991-95.

Elimination of Headstone Allowance

The Committee legislation would eliminate VA's authority, under section 906(d) of title 38, to provide reimbursement for the cost of acquiring a headstone or gravemarker for a deceased veteran who is eligible for burial in a national cemetery but is buried in a cemetery other than a national cemetery. The amount of reimbursement that VA is authorized to pay may not exceed the average actual cost that VA pays for acquiring headstones and markers, which is currently approximately $80.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11042 would result in savings of $3 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $19 million in outlays in FYs 1991-95.

SUBTITLE F—MISCELLANEOUS

Use of Internal Revenue Service and Social Security Administration Data for Income Verification

Section 11051 of the reconciliation legislation would amend paragraph (7) of section 6103(l) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 6103(l)(7))—relating to disclosures of certain third-party and self-employment tax information (from the Commissioner of Social Security or the Secretary of the Treasury) to Federal, State, and local agencies administering certain programs under the Social Security Act (essentially Supplemental Security Income, Aid to Families With Dependent Children, and Medicaid), the Food Stamp Act of 1977, or the unemployment compensation program for purposes of income verification—so as to require disclosure to VA of (a) such information for purposes of determining eligibility for VA needs-based pension programs under chapter 15 of title 38 or any other law administered by VA, needs-based parents' dependency and indemnity compensation provided under section 415 of title 38, and VA health-care services based on income status under sections 610(a) (1)(I) and (2), 610(b), and 612(a)(2)(B) of title 38, and (b) only wage and self-employment information from such returns for purposes of determining eligibility for compensation paid, pursuant to section 4.16 of title 38, Code of Federal Regulations, at the total-disability-rating level based on an individual determination of unemployability.

Section 11051 is substantively identical to section 710 of S. 2100 as reported by the Committee on July 19 and to section 704 of S. 13 as reported on September 13, 1989, which is discussed in detail in the report accompanying S. 13 (S. Rept. No. 101-126, pages 297-303).

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11051 would result in savings of $28 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $787 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

Line of Duty

Section 11052 of the reconciliation legislation would amend section 105(a) of title 38 so as to provide that injuries or diseases incurred during active service which are a result of willful misconduct or the abuse of alcohol or drugs will not be considered to have been incurred in the line of duty and thus would not be compensable by VA as service connected.

Under current law, direct or primary effects of willful misconducted may not be compensated as service connected. However, under VA regulations (section 3.301 of title 38, Code of Federal Regulations), organic diseases and disabilities which are a secondary result of the chronic use of alcohol or of drugs are not considered to be caused by willful misconduct. The Committee legislation is designed to change that result.

A VA White Paper discussing a legislative proposal having the same objective commented on the practical effects of such a provision. The text of that White Paper follows:

Effect of Proposed Amendment to Section 105(a)

Legislation has been proposed which would amend section 105(a) of title 38, United States Code, to provide that injuries or diseases incurred during active service which are the secondary effects of willful misconduct will not be considered to have been incurred in the line of duty. We have been asked to comment on the practical effects of such a provision.

Under current law (38 U.S.C. § 105(a)), an injury or disease incurred in active service is deemed to have been incurred in the line of duty unless the injury or disease was the result of the veteran's own willful misconduct. Eligibility for compensation (38 U.S.C. § 310) and nonservice connected pension (38 U.S.C. § 521(a)) includes a requirement that the underlying disability (or disabilities) not be the result of the veteran's willful misconduct. VA has generally held that alcoholism and drug addition, standing alone, cannot be service-connected disabilities. See, e.g., 38 C.F.R. § 3.301(c)(3) (drug addiction); Admin. Dec. 988 (Aug. 13, 1964) (alcoholism).

VA regulations interpreting 38 U.S.C. § 105(a) hold that organic diseases and disabilities which are a secondary result of the chronic use of alcohol as a beverage or of drugs (and injections coinciding with the infection of drugs) are not considered of willful misconduct origin. (38 C.F.R. § 3.301(c)(2)-(3)). In addition, the residuals of venereal disease are not considered to be of willful misconduct origin. (38 C.F.R. § 3.301(c)(1)).

The primary effect of the proposed legislative change would be a new rule regarding the secondary effects of alcohol and drug use: organic diseases and disabilities which are a secondary result of the chronic use of alcohol as a beverage or of drugs (and infections coinciding with the injection of drugs) would be considered of willful misconduct origin under the proposed amendment to 38 U.S.C. § 105(a).

We see a small effect with respect to service-connected rulings. In order to be service-connected, a secondary disability must be diagnosed during active military service, manifest itself within the proper time frame under 38 U.S.C. § 312, or be secondary to a service-connected disability. Because of the long period of time that it usually takes for the secondary effects of alcoholism or drug abuse to manifest, few veterans are found to have these conditions in service or within the presumptive period. If the secondary effects of in-service drug abuse or alcoholism manifest themselves after the presumptive period, service connection cannot be granted because they are not secondary to a service-connected condition.

On the other hand, the secondary effects of alcoholism or drug abuse can give rise to eligibility for nonservice-connected pension. The disability requirements under 38 U.S.C. § 521 do not require service-connected disability.

With respect to AIDS, because venereal disease is not per se willful misconduct under 38 U.S.C. § 105(a) and 38 C.F.R. § 3.301(c)(1), the proposed amendment would not prohibit eligibility for compensation or pension based on sexual transmission. The amendment would only bar benefits based on AIDS secondary to drug abuse.

Section 11052 would take effect with respect to line of duty determinations made on or after November 1, 1990.

Savings

According to CBO, the enactment of section 11052 would result in savings of $10 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $334 million in outlays in FYs 1991-1995.

Reporting of Social Security Numbers by Claimants and Uses of Death Information by the Department of Veterans Affairs

Section 11053 of the Committee legislation would require mandatory disclosure of claimants' and dependents' Social Security numbers (SSNs) in all claims for VA disability and death benefits. Under this provision, VA also would be required to compare its records regarding recipients of VA compensation or pension benefits with records of the Department of Health and Human Services to determine whether any such VA beneficiaries are deceased.

Chairman Cranston, at the request of the Administration, introduced legislation (S. 1110) on June 1, 1989, which would require the disclosure of SSNs to VA in all claims for disability and death benefits. At that time, the Committee believed that VA had not provided adequate justification for this requirement and in an August 27, 1990, letter from Chairman Cranston, the Committee requested additional information justifying VA's need for the SSNs of VA-benefit recipients. That letter, and VA's September 26, 1990, response, follow:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, August 27, 1990.

Hon. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI,
Secretary of Veterans Affairs,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ED: On June 1, 1989, at the requst of the Administration, I introduced S. 1110, which would amend seciton 3001 of title 38 to authorize VA to require disclosure of claimants' and dependents' Social Security numbers (SSNs) in all claims for VA disability and death benefits. Congress declined to include S. 1110 in veterans legislation enacted last year because the Committee believed that VA had not shown the report on S. 13 (S. Rept. No. 101-126, pages 98-100), the Committee directed that you report to the Committee:

(1) the nature and extent of any abuses VA has discovered through use of names and other indentifying information of claimants, beneficiaries, and dependents in the cases of compensation and pension benefits as to which VA now lacks authority to require SSNs, and (2) in the case of each such benefit, the estimated number of cases in which VA believes SSNs are necessary to identify claimants, beneficiaries, and dependents in income verification processes, along with the estimated average monthly dollar amounts of the benefits involved.

Unfortunately the information that the Committee sought to obtain was not provided. In order for the Committee to have the opportunity to consider S. 1110 before the end of the current Congress, I would appreciate receiving responses to these questions before Congress reconvenes on September 10. If you have any questions regarding this matter, please have your staff contact Michael W. Cogan, Associate Counsel of the Committee, at 224-9126.

Thank you, Ed, for your cooperation on this and other matters relating to the administration of veterans programs.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman.

THE SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, September 26, 1990.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am pleased to reply to your August 27, 1990 request for information justifying our need for the Social Security numbers of VA-benefit recipients to ensure proper payment levels. I have enclosed a reponsive paper prepared by the Chief Benefits Director. We would appreciate whatever support you can lend our proposal.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD J. DERWINSKI.

Mandatory Disclosure of Social Security Numbers

Senator Cranston has requested information as to (1) the nature and extent of any abuses VA has discovered through the use of names of other identifying beneficiary information in the cases of compensation and pension benefits as to which VA now lacks authority to require SSNs, and (2) in the case of each such benefit, the estimated number of cases in which VA believes SSNs are necessary to identify beneficiaries in income verification processes, along with the estimated average monthly dollar amounts of the benefits involved.

The protocols we use for our data matching programs make it almost impossible to provide the type of data requested by Senator Cranston. For due process and privacy reasons, during computer matches we do not accept or provide data on a beneficiary unless we are absolutely confident that the individual in our file is the individual on the matching file. We do not match on name alone. Depending upon the nature of records against which the match is being made, there may or may not be date of birth or some identifying information other than a social security number. If, during the matching process, any discrepancy is found in the name and/or other identifying data, or if there is no identifying information except the name, the case is placed in the "unable to match" category. Thus, no data is obtained to verify eligibility or payment amount, and we have no means of determining the nature or extent of the problems or abuses in such cases.

The vast majority of our pension cases contain a social security number. Approximately 200,000 (8.0 percent) of the service-connected death and disability cases, however, lack this critical identifer. A study recently completed by the General Accounting Office illustrates one of the problems these cases present.

On July 27, 1990, GAO issued a report (entitled "VA Needs Death Information From Social Security To Avoid Erroneous Payments (GAO/HRD-90-119)") which recommended that Congress authorize VA to require social security numbers of all veterans and their survivors as a condition for eligibility for either compensation or pension benefits. During its study GAO matched VA's 3.5 million payment records for April 1989 against death information kept by the Social Security Administration and identified several hundred deceased veterans who had active compensation or pension awards. VA is doing a claims folder review of approximately 1,600 of these cases (about one-third of the cases GAO tentatively identified). To date, 563 folders have been reviewed. In all but 77 cases, the regional office of jurisdiction had received notice of the beneficiary's death and terminated payments in the interim since April 1989. The 77 cases still in payment status involved service-connected death or disability benefits. Overpayments in these compensation and DIC cases totaled $456,000, an average of $6,039 per case. No pension cases were found to still be in payment status, in large part because the annual VA/SSA data match and the requirement for submission of an annual eligibility verification report served as mechanisms to ensure that the regional office obtained notice of the beneficiary's death. Over the years VA has used the annual SSA data match to identify needs-based with missing or incorrect social security numbers. Current regulations allow VA to require such beneficiaries to disclose their correct social security numbers.

At recent meetings, representatives of the Retired Pay Centers for the various military service branches again emphasized the importance and value of social security numbers in the VA/DOD data matches. In the past, millions of dollars in overpayments occurred each year because VA and the service departments could not identify cases in which a veteran was receiving compensation and retired pay or drill pay concurrently. Today, for those records which contain a social security number, these overpayments have all but been eliminated by on-going data matches.

We believe that our current data matching programs amply demonstrate the advantages that can be achieved when the beneficiary's social security number is a part of the claims record. Mandatory disclosure of this information for all beneficiaries would permit VA to improve current matches and provide a solid basis for additional matches.

Savings

Enactment of section 11053 would result in savings of $4 million in outlays in FY 1991 and total savings of $47 million in outlays for FYs 1991-1995.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for the Reconciliation recommendations of the Committee on Veterans Affairs, as ordered transmitted to the Senate Committee on the Budget, October 12, 1990.

The estimates included in the attached table represent the 1991-1995 effects on the federal budget and on the budget resolution baseline of the Committee's legislative proposals affecting spending. CBO understands that the Committee on the Budget will be responsible for interpreting how savings contained in these legislative proposals measure against the budget resolution reconciliation instructions.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

ADDITONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR ALAN CRANSTON

As Chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am pleased that the Committe has met its reconciliation instructions under the budget resolution by adopting the basic provisions I developed in consultation with the other members of the Committee. However, I am extremely disappointed that the Committee adopted by a 6-5 vote the amendment proposed by the Committee's Ranking Minority Member, Senator Murkowski, striking the expiration dates for various provisions that were incorporated in my proposed package. This will mean that the savings in veterans programs over the next five years will exceed our reconciliation instructions by $2.7 billion. My original proposal asked veterans to shoulder their assigned share of the deficit-reduction burden; deletion of the expiration dates means veterans will shoulder 80 percent more than their share.

In preparing legislation to meet our reconciliation targets, our Committee had to contend with greatly reduced first-year savings for almost all of the reconciliation provisions because we already are two weeks into FY 1991 and start-up time is necessary to implement the great majority of these program changes. This problem in achieving first-year savings was such a difficult impediment that no combination of program changes suggested in the Budget Summit Agreement would have satisfied the instructions given to our Committee. Thus, in order to meet our first-year savings, we had to make so many, and such extensive, program changes that our Committee far exceeded its required five-year savings target—as I noted above, by $2.7 billion.

There are very few provisions in this package that I would recommend in the absence of reconciliation requirements and the great need to reduce the federal deficit this year and in coming years.

Most of these provisions will affect veterans directly. These are the same men and women who served their country once and are willing, once again, to do their share to help make our nation stronger. This is a group that is used to making sacrifices. But their past service and sacrifices also place a burden on us to minimize the impact of these budget cuts.

That is why I cannot agree with those who contend that exacting an extra $2.7 billion from veterans programs over the next five years will be a great "bonus" for the U.S. Treasury.

That is why my proposed legislation included termination dates. These "sunset" dates would have accomplished very beneficial results.

First, they would have given the Committee and the Congress opportunities to reevaluate the provisions in the near future. If the experinece of a year or two showed that a provision is not too onerous on veterans or damaging to programs, the Congress easily could reauthorize it. If, on the other hand, a particular change proved destructive or unfair, it could expire without any adverse budget impact on the Committee's legislative efforts.

It is not difficult to imagine the painful effects of many of these provisions. For example, one provision, which I reluctantly agreed to include only in order to meet the very tough first-year requirements, would cut off disability compensation payments to an incompetent veteran with an estate worth $25,000 or more until the value of the veteran's estate dips to $10,000. This would require certain veterans to liquidate their life-time savings. Also, it could be particularly harsh for those whose personal-care expenses exceed their compensation benefits. After their estates are reduced to $10,000 in an accelerated fashion and their compensation benefits are resumed, their meager resources would continue to shrink. Another questionable provision would cut off disability compensation to veterans for cirrhosis of the liver resulting from alcohol consumption during military service, which VA considers "willful misconduct", rather than a disease. The requirement for a $2 copayment for each 30-day supply of medications may prove onerous for some of the poorest veterans, who are over-represented in the VA medical-care system. These and other provisions are controversial and, while they might be justifiable for a short-term trial period, they will be extremely difficult, as a practical matter, to terminate unless they are enacted with an expiration date. Legislation that terminates a permanent cost-saving provision—even one that proves to be unwise—stands little chance of enactment unless it includes offsetting, new savings.

Second, the flexibility to reauthorize the provisions or let them expire would have given the Committee an opportunity to continue certain savings and apply them to other, higher-priority veterans' programs if that is desirable and prudent. Without the sunset dates, the entire $6.059 billion in deficit-reduction will become part of the "baseline" and unavailable to offset the costs of desirable improvements in veterans benefits.

A further example of an unwise failure to provide an expiration date is the 0.75-percentage-point increase in VA's home loan guaranty fee—from 1.25 percent to 2 percent—a 60-percent increase. The only reason I proposed this increase was to enable the Committee to meet its first-year savings requirement. With the elimination of this provision's end-of-FY-1991 expiration date, it has now become a permanent form of taxation which, if enacted, will result in thousands of veterans not using their loan-guaranty entitlement. I find that most regrettable.

In summary, I believe that the amendment deleting the sunset provisions in the reconciliation package transforms the legislation I proposed from a carefully crafted set of program changes, tailored to meet our Committee's assigned responsibilities, into an onerous penalty on those who have done so much for our Nation. The result is an unfortunate distortion of the intent of our reconciliation instructions that takes unfair advantage of the breadth of the cuts we had to make in order to meet our first-year savings requirements.

AMENDMENT NO. 3024

(Purpose: To prescribe standards for determining whether to provide deposit insurance)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] proposes an amendment numbered 3024.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of title II, add the following:

SEC. . DETERMINATION TO PROVIDE DEPOSIT INSURANCE.

Section 4 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1814) is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) CERTIFICATION BY OTHER BANKING AGENCIES.—Every national bank which is authorized to commence or resume the business of banking, and which is engaged in the business of receiving deposits other than trust funds as herein defined, and every noninsured national nonmember bank which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System, and every noninsured State bank which is converted into a national member bank or which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System, and which is engaged in the business of receiving deposits other than trust funds as herein defined, shall be an insured depository institution upon—

"(1) application to the Corporation; and

"(2) receipt by the Corporation of a certificate which is issued to the Corporation by the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of a national member bank which is authorized to commence or resume the business of banking or a State bank which is converted into a national member bank, or by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in the case of a national nonmember bank or a State bank which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System, and which meets the requirements of subsection (d), unless insurance is denied by the Board of Directors.";

(2) by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (i) and (j), respectively; and

(3) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

"(c) INTERIM NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.—In the case of any interim national bank that is chartered by the Comptroller of the Currency and will not open for business, such bank shall be an insured depository institution upon the issuance of such bank's charter by the Comptroller.

"(d) CERTIFICATE REQUIREMENTS.—Any certificate issued to the Corporation under subsection (b) shall state that the bank is authorized to transact the business of banking in the case of a national member bank, or is a member of the Federal Reserve System in the case of a State bank which is converted into a national member bank, or a national nonmember bank or a State bank which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System, and that consideration has been given to the factors enumerated in section 6 of this Act.

"(e) REVIEW REQUIREMENTS.—In reviewing any certificate and application referred to in subsection (b), the Board of Directors shall consider the factors described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and (7) of section 6 of this Act in determining whether to deny insurance.

"(f) NOTICE OF DENIAL OF APPLICATION.—If the Board of Directors, after giving due deference to the determination of the Comptroller of the Currency or the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, as appropriate, with respect to such factors, does not concur in the determination of the Comptroller or the Board of Governors, as appropriate, the Board of Directors shall promptly notify the Comptroller or the Board of Governors, as appropriate, that insurance has been denied, giving specific reasons in writing for the Corporation's determination with reference to the factors described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and (7) of section 6, and no insurance shall be granted.

"(g) VOTING REQUIREMENTS.—The authority of the Board of Directors to make any determination to deny insurance under this subsection may not be delegated by the Board of Directors and any such determination may be made only upon a vote of ¾ of all members of the Board of Directors (excluding the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of a national member bank which is authorized to commence or resume the business of banking or a State bank which is converted into a national member bank).

"(h) CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE UPON BECOMING A MEMBER BANK.—In the case of an insured bank which is admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System or an insured State bank which is converted into a national member bank, such application and certificate shall not be required, and the bank shall continue as an insured bank.".

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, we are gathered here together to deal with a challenge to America. That challenge is to bring some order and discipline to our Federal fiscal house. It, however, is not the only challenge that our Nation faces. One of the other major challenges is to assure the continued stability of our financial institutions.

It is ironic, Mr. President, that in the legislation before us we are proposing to raise approximately $130 billion in new taxes over the period from now until 1995—$130 billion in new taxes. In 1989, we funded $50 billion to the savings and loan bailout program. This year we have been asked by the Resolution Trust Corporation and other Federal regulators to increase that by an additional $117 billion, so that in 2 years—1989-90—we will have provided funding of $167 billion for the savings and loan bailout. That figure is not the end of it.

Prior to 1989, there was substantial cost incurred by the Federal Government in the closure of thrift institutions. Part of that closure took the form of special tax benefits and other financial obligations of the Federal Government which will be paid out into the years in the future.

I regret to say that I do not believe that the $117 billion that we will be providing in 1990 represents the last appropriation, Mr. President. We know that it will not represent the last cost because most of the $167 billion is being financed. We borrow the money. We do not pay the money. Therefore, there will be interest charges in some cases for as long as 30 years. It is based on those calculations that the estimated total cost of the savings and loan bailout is in excess of $500 billion.

But I come back to the $167 billion hard figure that we have appropriated in 1989, and no doubt will in 1990, which represents more than the total new taxes the American taxpayer will pay between now and 1995 under this proposal. So that every time an American goes to fill up their tank with gas, they are making a contribution toward the savings and loan bailout. Every time the Social Security recipient sees his or her check slightly smaller than it would have been, they can understand that that was a function of the savings and loan bailout. Every time an American drinks a beer or smokes a cigarette, they are making a contribution toward the savings and loan bailout. So an enormous part of our fiscal crisis is the instability in our financial institutions. It is for that reason that I am offering this amendment.

The problems of the thrift industry have now seeped over into our commercial banks.

On July 15 of this year, the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal agency with responsibility for insuring commercial banks, and since 1989 thrifts, said that the insurance fund that protects the deposits of United States banks is "under considerable stress" and "would be in trouble were the Nation to suffer a serious recession."

That is the environment in which we are operating. It is in that environment, Mr. President, that I offer this as the first of two amendments which goes to a gap in our current system. The gap is that we now require the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to extend insurance coverage to all nationally chartered banks without regard to their financial solidity. We no longer do this, as of 1989, relative to thrifts. That is, the bank insurance agency can make an independent determination as to whether a chartered institution, chartered by the Federal Government or by a State, meets its standards, the insurance agency standards, of being an appropriate risk for the fund to insure.

FDIC, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, has had that same power as it relates to State-chartered banks. The gap in the system is as to nationally chartered banks. And so it was on July 31 of this year, speaking before the Senate Banking Committee, that Chairman Bill Seidman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation said, "As a basic principle the insurer should decide which institutions it insures and that is the ultimate protection that ought to be afforded to the taxpayer."

So we have that now with the savings and loans. We do not have that with the banks. As a matter of principle, the insurer should determine what institutions qualify for insurance. That is the amendment that is currently before the Senate.

It would extend to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation independent authority to make an insurer's judgment as to whether a national chartered bank is being operated in a way that poses an undue risk to the fund and, if so, to deny insurance coverage.

This is not a fenceable loophole.

In 1983 and 1984 the Comptroller of the Currency chartered over 200 new institutions; many of these were institutions which previously had been State chartered, and they transferred to a Federal charter.

Many of those institutions were in States such as Texas which were overbanked, and where there was considerable question about the solidity of those formerly State chartered banks that were now moving into the Federal system.

The FDIC had no authority to deny insurance to those newly federally chartered banks, many of which have now contributed to the fact that for 2 and 3 years the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has been running downstream in terms of its resources.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, because of the unusual number of bank failures, is now at the lowest point in its history; whereas, the law requires it to have 1.25 percent of insurance to deposits covered, it is now 1.7 percent of deposits covered and declining. It is estimated that the fund will suffer further losses in this year.

We had an instance close to the Nation's Capital, a major Washington-based bank; the National Bank of Washington has recently come under FDIC supervision because of its practices that resulted in it being required to be into conservatorship.

The analysis of this bank was conducted by the GAO. One of the findings of the official of the General Accounting Office, assistant director Richard Fogel, was that the $500 million cost of closing the National Bank of Washington indicates that:

> The Federal regulators did not act soon enough to ensure that the cost of the insurance fund would be minimized.

Mr. Fogel went on to say that:

> The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, which oversees national banks, must do a better job of protecting the fund.

Mr. President, this is just one example that we, as those responsible in the Congress for the overall structure of our financial institutions, cannot place our total reliance on the Office of the Controller of the Currency to be sensitive to both his regulatory and chartering responsibilities for national banks and the solvency of the Federal Deposit Insurance Fund.

This amendment would split those functions and allow the FDIC to make an independent judgment for national banks as it does for State chartered banks, and since 1989 for State and federally chartered thrifts.

Mr. President, this amendment sounds so rational that one might question why are you arguing this; why is this not agreed to? I do not know what arguments will be made. I will be prepared to listen and respond. But I would like to suggest a couple.

These were arguments that were made at the time that this was considered in reconciliation at the Senate Banking Committee. One is that it will cause the FDIC to lose premium money.

The FDIC will not collect premiums from those institutions on which it terminates coverage because they are considered to be too great a risk to the fund. Let me restate that argument. The argument is that this amendment is inappropriate because it would cause the FDIC to lose premium dollars, the premium dollars of those institutions which the FDIC determines to have placed too great a risk on the fund.

The absurdity of that argument is I hope apparent. The very purpose of allowing the fund to make that independent judgment and terminate coverage is because while the premium dollars will be foregone, what is also being foregone is a much greater financial risk of having to step in and assume financial responsibility for the institution.

It is for reasons like that, Mr. President, that we have had this enormous collapse in the thrift industry, and are now concerned about the status of our commercial banks.

The second argument against this will be germaneness. This is not germane. Mr. President, this is the bill that was given to us approximately 24 hours ago. I do not know how many hundreds or thousands of pages this bill contains. I have reviewed some of this proposal, the budget reconciliation. I can tell you that if this provision is not germane, there are hundreds of pages in this reconciliation document that are not germane.

I raise the further question: What is germaneness? If germaneness is, is this relevant to the purposes we are about, what could be more relevant than the purposes we are about than to try to suture the Nation's financial house? What could be more relevant to what we are about than to attempt to avoid another $167 billion bill to the American taxpayer as a result of failures in the commercial banks given our recent experience of failures to properly give oversight to our Nation's thrift industry? Is that not what we are about?

If that is the definition of our purpose, then I urge the adoption of this amendment. Thank you.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Florida would permit the FDIC to deny insurance to newly chartered national banks. The FDIC presently has authority with respect to State-chartered banks but does not have that authority with regard to national banks. This proposal would allow the FDIC to effectively stop the chartering of a national bank that the FDIC believes to be operated in an unsafe and unsound manner.

Like the Senator's amendment on risk-based premiums, I believe the amendment to be meritorious. But I also have to say that it is not appropriate for the reconciliation bill. This is part of the debate on the deposit insurance reform, and other bank regulatory issues that are to take place next year.

I might also add that the Congressional Budget Office does not believe there will be any budget savings as a result of this proposal. This amendment will not therefore reduce the deficit. It has nothing to do with deficit reform. It is essentially a regulatory reform measure which may be meritorious, I can see, but certainly we ought not to be placing it this morning on a budget reconciliation bill.

Mr. President, at the appropriate time I will make the appropriate motion.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator fron New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield 5 minutes?

Mr. SASSER. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I gather that is off the time the chairman has in opposition to the amendment; is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to say to my friend from Florida that from what I understand Chairman Seidman, whom I gather most people involved in this kind of problem have a great deal of respect for, as I understand it—and I do not know this personally, I hear it from Senator GARN, the ranking member of the committee of jurisdiction—Chairman Seidman is not asking Congress to give him these powers today. In fact, as the chairman has indicated, this amendment does not belong on a reconciliation bill.

I know that does not sound terribly fair to my friend from Florida. But the truth of the matter is, the reconciliation bill is a privileged bill.

It has a lot of limitations on debate, germaneness. The very reason is that it is an exceptional activity provided for by statute to reduce the deficit. We are not really engaged in trying to get all of the good substantive law in the waning moments of the Congress, that we have not been able to do, and put them in a reconciliation bill. That is not to say that this is not meritorious. It may be. It sounds to me like it might be.

But I concur with the chairman of our committee that if Chairman Seidman, of the FDIC, says there is ample time to do this, we can do it next year in the normal legislative process. That is how we ought to do it.

I understand it will be said this is a small measure, this is not doing an extreme violence. But it is really more than a principle. We just ought not be bringing pieces of legislation that have not cleared committees, however meritorious, and bring them to the floor and offer them to a bill like this, which has various constraints that change our rules with reference to debate, with reference to amendments, with reference to how much time we have.

I will join with the chairman when he sees fit to state to the Senate the fact that this amendment is subject to a point of order because it is not germane. Mr. President, this amendment is not as defined in the Budget Act and in reconciliation bills. It is not germane under that precedent and that body of rules that govern this kind of legislation.

I thank the chairman for yielding time to the Senator from New Mexico.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. If no one else seeks time on this matter, I will close at this time and conclude my remarks.

If the managers could do likewise, I would be willing to yield back the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do managers yield back the remainder of their time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SASSER. I was distracted. What was the matter before the Chair?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida is prepared to yield back the remainder of his time.

Mr. SASSER. I am prepared to yield back the time.

Mr. President, let me forbear on that for a moment. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back all of my time if the distinguished Senator from Florida is prepared to yield back his time.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, after I complete my closing remarks, I will yield back all the remaining time of the Senator.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, as I anticipated, the arguments against this are, first, that the CBO does not count this as being a budget deficit savings. In fact, I have heard that they have counted this as being a budget deficit loss because there will be some premium dollars not collected as a result of termination of coverage for those institutions that the FDIC might determine to be inappropriate to insure; and, second, that this is not germane, but germane to a bill whose purpose it is to reduce the Federal deficit.

Mr. President, the context of this bill is that the Banking Committee has been considering the question of the status of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Fund for several months. When the decision was made to incorporate some provisions of the effort to assist the fund into the reconciliation, other provisions which were held to be not germane or could not demonstrate that they would make a contribution to deficit reduction were left out. This was one of those children left at the hospital delivery room and not brought home to join the family of FDIC assistance.

I believe, Mr. President, that those reasons go to the core of why this process is such a charade. If you raise or extend an insurance program and thereby increase or extend the time period for the collection of premiums, that gains you points with the scores of the budget reconciliation.

As an example, we have in this bill extensions of premiums for housing programs, administered under the Federal Housing Administration, which count positively toward reducing the budget deficit. What is not pointed out is that those very housing programs in some cases are billions of dollars insolvent, have tens of thousands of properties unsold, foreclosed, in their inventory, and where every time we extend to more people the opportunity to participate, it is more likely that we are going to add to that insolvency rather than reduce it.

Yet under the absurd way in which we calculate budget deficit reduction, that counts. That extension of premiums to those potentially insolvent individuals and institutions reduces our budget deficit because we do not have to face that, we do not have to pay the price of that profligate activity until some later point.

I would not be surprised if 5, 6, 7 years ago people were standing as we are today, saying the budget deficit is going to be lower because we are extending the premiums for the then Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. We are going to collect millions of dollars of additional premiums because new institutions are being chartered, institutions are expanding their deposit base, and therefore expanding the number of premium dollars that we pay into the fund.

It was not until today that we got the bill for that activity. That bill was $50 billion in 1989; it is $117 billion in 1990. It was more after 1989, and it is going to be a lot more after 1990.

Yet, we are saying today, with a similar argument, that we should not count this as a budget matter because it will reduce premium income, in spite of the fact the very purpose of this is to save money downstream by cutting off those institutions which their ilk contributed to the savings and loan debacle, and which a continuation of insurance will cause a commercial bank debacle.

Mr. President, we also said this is not germane in some fanciful manner, and I note we are about to take up as an aside a 106-page amendment, which is budget process, sometime between now and whenever the 20 hours for debate on this matter runs out. I assume that is going to surface and be offered.

That is going to have even a more refined definition of germaneness, which will further remove this process from reality into the never-never-land of budget reconciliation dreamers. If there is anything that is germane to the economic well-being of America, if there is anything that is germane to the continued financial solvency of our commercial banks, if there is anything that is germane to avoiding another $500 billion to the American taxpayers because a Federal insurance fund has failed, what could it be, Mr. President, other than a proposal that will say that we will no longer mandate that our insurance fund covers these excessively risky institutions.

Mr. President, what we are saying here would be analogous to saying to one of the large insurance firms in your State, Wausaw, that it had to insure every building, every business, every activity in a particular community of America without regard to the riskiness of that activity to the fund itself. I do not believe that Wausaw would continue in business very long if it operated under that type of mandate.

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation is not in business any more because, up until 1989, it essentially had operated under that kind of mandate. Are we going to make a decision today that we are going to put the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation that stands behind every deposit in America in commercial banks up to $100,000 in a similar state of vulnerability, as we pray at the altar of false germaneness?

Mr. President, it would be my intention, if it is suggested that there is a point of order against this amendment, to move to waive that point of order.

I yield the floor and yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to make a few remarks regarding the amendment to waive the Budget Act proposed by my distinguished colleague from Florida, Senator GRAHAM.

This amendment would allow the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation [FDIC] to deny insurance coverage to nationally chartered banks that are determined to be unsound. The FDIC currently has the authority to exclude troubled thrift institutions from its insurance coverage, but it may not exclude similarly troubled nationally chartered banks.

I support the idea behind this proposal: Federal deposit insurance needs to be reformed. If the FDIC had the ability to exercise some discretion in its insurance coverage over the past several years, the cost of the savings and loan bailout would not now be approaching $500 billion.

On September 27, FDIC Chairman William Seidman reported to the House Banking Subcommittee that the insurance fund is under increased stress. He indicated that insurance reform should be a top order of business for the next Congress. The Treasury, the General Accounting Office, and the Congressional Budget Office are all exploring the options available for reforming Federal deposit insurance.

Federal insurance reform, however, is too important to be hastily debated on the Senate floor in the closing hours of the 101st Congress. As much as I am inclined to support this amendment, I do not wish to see a piecemeal approach to such complex legislation. Both the chairman and the ranking member of the Senate Banking Committee have indicated that reform will be the committee's No. 1 priority next year. Therefore, I believe it best to address this critical issue in a forum without the time constraints inherent to this reconciliation package.

And finally, Mr. President, I would like to impress upon my colleagues on the Banking Committee that a number of important issues need to be addressed next year. Along with deposit insurance reform, I hope that the committee will consider legislation similar to the Competitive Equality Banking Act that was approved by the Senate in 1987. This bill would have strengthened our Nation's financial institutions, allowing them to compete more effectively in the world market. I look forward to working with the committee in the future.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question occurs on the amendment.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, pursuant to section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act, I raise a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida on the basis of germaneness.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I move that this amendment be considered, section 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act notwithstanding.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question occurs on the motion.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is 1 hour of debate equally divided.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do the Senators yield back their time?

Who yields time?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, did the Chair indicate whether there was a sufficient second?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a sufficient second.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Florida control?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, if the managers are prepared to yield back their time, I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am constrained to object momentarily.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The clerk will resume the call of the roll.

The bill clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, we apparently are in a period in which further consultation is required before we proceed to vote on the preceding amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that the current amendment, the amendment pending before the Senate, be set aside for the purpose of my offering a second amendment which is related to the same topic as the amendment that we have been debating, and that the amendment which I have previously offered not lose its position on the calendar.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. Reserving the right to object, if I understand the request, Mr. President, the Senator from Florida is asking unanimous consent to offer a second amendment while the motion to waive the point of order on the first amendment is still pending?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. GORE. How much time is allocated under the rules for debate on the second amendment?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is a first-degree amendment, it will be 2 hours equally divided.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest to my colleagues that we accede to the request of the Senator from Florida. If we do not, the Senator from Florida has an additional hour in which to discuss the question of germaneness. If we can set this amendment aside, move forward with his second amendment and dispose of it, I am hopeful that we can then return to this first amendment without further debate and dispose of it.

Mr. GORE. I withdraw my reservation, Mr. President.

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, might I ask, so that there will be no misunderstanding, is it the intention that we set aside the motion to waive so that the Senator can offer a second amendment? We are not setting aside anything else? There is pending a motion to waive, which is a motion by the Senator from Florida. Is that correct? If that is not correct, I object.

Mr. SASSER. I say to the distinguished Senator that is my understanding.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry. Let us assume that we do this and the Senator offers his second amendment, will the first matter that comes before the Senate, absent unanimous consent, be the motion that we are setting aside, once he has completed his debate and all time has been yielded back on the second amendment?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Further parliamentary inquiry. Is the second amendment of the Senator from Florida subject to amendment?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be subject to amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that it not be subject to amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida modify his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. GRAHAM. To request that the amendment which I hope to soon offer not be subject to amendment?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Correct.

Mr. GRAHAM. I accept that modification.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Might I further ask the Senator, does the Senator intend, if this unanimous-consent agreement is granted, that he will work with the managers to perhaps relinquish some of the time? I am not asking at this point that there be such an agreement, but we do not intend to use 2 hours.

Mr. GRAHAM. I say to my good friend from New Mexico, I think the discussion on the first amendment took approximately 15 to 20 minutes. I anticipate this will take the same or less.

Mr. DOMENICI. Further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. By granting this unanimous consent, the second amendment of the Senator from Florida is still subject to a point of order for lack of germaneness? The unanimous-consent agreement does not waive that. Is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Am I correct in understanding the effect of adopting this series of unanimous-consent requests would be that the first amendment which I offered, which was then subject to a point of order and then to a motion to waive that point of order, would be the pending business before the Senate at the conclusion of consideration of the amendment which it is my intention to now offer? Is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GRAHAM. Second, am I correct, Mr. President, that after offering my second amendment, if there is a point of order directed against it I will be allowed to offer another motion, relevant to my second amendment, to waive the point of order; is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

AMENDMENT NO. 3025

(Purpose: To provide for risk assessment for deposit insurance)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, with those understandings, I send to the desk my second amendment, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] proposes an amendment numbered 3025.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of title II, add the following:

SEC. . RISK-BASED ASSESSMENTS.

Section 7(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(10) ASSESSMENTS BASED ON RISK CRITERIA ALLOWED.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT OF RISK CRITERIA.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, the Corporation may establish criteria for measuring and determining the degree to which any insured depository institution poses a risk to the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(B) AMOUNT OF ASSESSMENT MAY BE BASED ON RISK.—The amount which the Corporation may assess against any insured depository institution under paragraph (1) in any year may be determined by the Corporation on the basis of the Corporation's evaluation, in accordance with the criteria established under subparagraph (A), of the degree to which such institution poses a risk to the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(C) RANGE OF ASSESSMENTS.—In the exercise of the Corporation's authority under subparagraph (B), the Corporation may establish a scale under which the amount assessed against any insured depository institution reflects the degree of risk posed by such institution.

"(D) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.—The determination by the Corporation under this paragraph of the risk presented by a depository institution shall be based on the evaluation by the Corporation of the financial condition of such institution, the extent of compliance by such institution with laws and regulations applicable to such institution's operations, the capability and experience of the management of such institution, the overall operating soundness of such insured institution, and such other factors as the Corporation may determine to be relevant to such determination.".

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, in order to make my contribution toward expeditious consideration of this and other matters before the Senate this morning, I will not repeat the first section of the speech that I gave on the first amendment. It is all relevant to the second amendment. That is, it deals with the fundamental question of the solidity of financial institutions as part of our overall desire for a more rational national financial house.

This second amendment authorizes the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to develop a risk-based insurance system.

What is a risk-based insurance system? A risk-based system is what we all know as a fundamental part of any insurance system. If you are a good driver, you pay lower premiums than a driver who has had a series of drunk driving arrests. If you are my age, you pay higher life insurance rates than my children pay for life insurance. If you operate a risky business, you pay higher premiums than that individual who operates a more tranquil enterprise.

A basic principle of insurance is linking the risk to what it costs to transfer that risk to a third person. We do not have that basic principle of insurance as it relates to our Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. We charge the same premium to every thrift in America, the most prudent to the most profligate. We charge the same premium to every commercial bank in America, the most widely speculative to the most hard rock conservative.

Again, Mr. President, we paid a heavy price for that. We created a situation in which we privatized profits and socialized losses. In the savings and loan institutions there was tremendous incentive to engage in highly leveraged, highly speculative activities. If you were lucky, if the dice came up the way you would like them to, you could make enormous profits. If they came out as snake eyes, the Federal taxpayer picked up the bill. And we have $167 billion of that bill just in the last 2 years.

What this bill would do is authorize the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to develop a series of standards for risk, as any insurance company would do, and to vary the premiums charged to the institutions that it insures based on that assessment of risk.

This proposal has been before the Congress on several occasions. In 1988 I offered an amendment to move to a risk-based insurance program. We discussed it during the debate on FIRREA. It is now 7 years later and we have not done it. I propose, in concert with the objectives of our effort which is to reduce the Federal budget deficit, that we take this opportunity to do so now.

I quoted earlier in the discussion of amendment 1 some statements made by the chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chairman Seidman. Let me do so again.

On July 15, 1990, Chairman Seidman made the comments I alluded to earlier about the stress under which the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation found itself in the face of continued losses and the possibility of further financial fractures within the commercial banking system.

In March 1989, Chairman Seidman stated that he felt that the FDIC should have the authority to develop a risk-based insurance system. I wish we had acted at his request in March 1989. Failing to do so, I hope we will not miss the opportunity to do so now.

Again, what will the arguments be against this? The arguments will be the same two as we heard before. We cannot demonstrate this is going to contribute to a reduction of the Federal budget deficit; we cannot demonstrate with methematical perfection that by imposing some economic additional requirement on riskier financial institutions, that that will rebound to the financial benefit of the U.S. Treasury.

I suggest if we went to a mathematics class we probably could not come up with a formula that would result in that showing. If your next class was a logic class, you could easily be convinced that there is a relationship between Federal policy relative to the manner in which financial institutions which are insured by the Federal Government are operated, and the potential risk to the U.S. taxpayers. If you went to the history class you would have an opportunity to read a very long chapter—or now an increasing shelf of books—on the cost to the American taxpayer of adopting a policy that socialized losses and privatized profits.

Again, the question of germaneness will probably be raised; and again the question, if it is not germane, is how to avoid, to minimize, to moderate the impact of a collapse or a serious fissure in our commercial banking system. What is germane to the issue of the long-term fiscal health of America?

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, may I inquire, does the Senator from Utah rise in opposition?

Mr. GARN. I rise in opposition. I would need time from the Senator from New Mexico. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield me 5 minutes?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Time is controlled by the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SASSER. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Utah, I will be pleased to yield him some time. May I inquire of the Senator how much time he might require?

Mr. GARN. Five minutes will be more than adequate.

Mr. SASSER. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, Senator GRAMM has two amendments. One would authorize the FDIC to impose risk-based deposit insurance premiums; the other amendment would give the FDIC the authority to deny insurance to the national banks and State-chartered banks. Both these amendments have strong arguments in their favor. I happen to agree on the substance with the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

At least a decade before the Senator from Florida came to this body, I proposed similar amendments and I am disappointed they have not been enacted. But now is not the time—the reconciliation package before the Senate today is not the context—in which to vote on these proposals.

Last year when we enacted FIRREA we directed the Treasury Department to conduct a comprehensive study of deposit insurance reform and report to the Congress in early 1991. The Treasury Department currently is working on that study and is committed to finish it before the congressionally mandated deadline. The Treasury has said the study will be completed before the end of this year.

Banking Committee Chairman RIEGLE and I have committed ourselves to take up banking deposit insurance reform as one of the first orders of business in the next Congress. That will be the proper context in which to address the issues raised by Senator GRAHAM. Bill Seidman has supported risk-based premiums. He supported the authority we are talking about in these amendments. He has also said the FDIC should have the authority to deny deposit insurance to national banks and the State member-chartered banks, but even Chairman Seidman is not asking Congress to give him these powers today. We have checked with the FDIC yesterday afternoon and confirmed that Chairman Seidman does not believe this reconciliation package is the appropriate vehicle in which to address these deposit insurance reform issues.

Chairman Seidman sent word today that he believes it would be more appropriate to address these issues next year in the context of comprehensive reform. I believe we should listen to Chairman Seidman. He does not need or seek the authorities contained in the Graham amendments now. He thinks we should wait and address these issues next year.

I do not know what basis we have for overriding the judgment of Chairman Seidman on these issues. I do not wish to argue the merits, because the Senator from Florida is absolutely correct; both of the things he is talking about should be done. But there are a lot of other issues in deposit insurance reform. Certainly I hope this Congress has learned from the great problem of the S&L crisis.

But it should be done in the context of an overall comprehensive bill. I am absolutely committed to that.

The Senator from Florida has listened to me in the Senate Banking Committee ad nauseum about how we must reform deposit insurance. I am committed to that. I am sure Chairman RIEGLE is committed to that. In fact, I know he is. These are but two issues of many that must be addressed. There are others that I want to see enacted, but I would not be proposing them on a piecemeal basis.

I want it to be made very clear I do not oppose the Senator from Florida on the substance. Again, he is correct. These are changes that need to be made. This is not the place on the reconciliation bill, and I will do everything I can as part of any comprehensive bill to see that both of these amendments are enacted.

For that reason, I am disappointed that we are not looking at an entire package standing by itself, but in the context of this budget crisis and Chairman Seidman's opinion, I must oppose both of these amendments today. I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida offers an amendment this morning which I think is meritorious. Risk-based premiums are a good idea and banks that make mortgage loans to first-time homebuyers obviously should not pay the same for deposit insurance as banks that go out and make loans to corporate raiders or junk bond artists or make loans to Donald Trump. Unfortunately, that is how the system works presently. If you take a lot of risk, or if you take little or no risk, it makes no difference. Banks pay the same for deposit insurance no matter what business principles they use to operate.

No private insurance company would operate this way. If it did, it would not stay in business very long. Yet, that is precisely what the FDIC does.

There is a so-called moral hazard, I think, at work here. It is really hazardous for a bank, some could argue, to be prudential or moral. It costs the same in premiums for a bank to engage in high-risk lending as to make home mortgage loans. There is no reward for making loans that put the insurance fund less at risk.

This is a worthy concept. I agree with the Senator from Florida, but I must say that this budget reconciliation bill is neither the time nor the place for this particular argument.

Congress has mandated that the Treasury Department and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation conduct a massive study of the deposit insurance reform. The report is due in February 1991. The issues will be examined by the Banking Committee next year.

I might say, Mr. President, that according to the Congressional Budget Office, this amendment will not, in their estimation, reduce the deficit. The Congressional Budget Office can score no savings from this proposal.

In another area, Mr. President, I want to say that I, again, appreciate the effort of the Senator from Florida in the area of changing the FDIC's concepts. Indeed, they are changes in the FDIC that I myself would wholeheartedly support. For instance, I think we need to support the assessing of insurance premiums on foreign deposits that are held by U.S. banks. The recent failure of the National Bank of Washington does, indeed, show that foreign deposits in American banks are, in fact, insured even though no premiums are paid on them. This is most unfair to the smaller banks across the country. Our banks in the State of Tennessee must pay a premium on all deposits that they hold because they hold virtually no foreign deposits. Yet, large money center banks—the Bank of Washington was an example of sorts—hold foreign deposits and pay no premiums on them. So small banks must pay proportionately more in insurance premiums than do larger banks.

As strongly as I feel about the unfairness of the nonassessment on foreign deposits, I recognize that the question is related to the issue of deposit insurance reform. We are waiting for the FDIC and the Treasury to complete their comprehensive report on deposit insurance. This report is not due until February. For us to act any sooner on these complex regulatory issues would be premature.

I might also add, CBO scores assessing foreign deposits as raising $2 billion over 5 years. So I think this is something we certainly need to pursue on another day on other legislation. Conversely, CBO does not score any savings on the amendments that the Senator from Florida is offering, although I must say I think they are good public policy, and I commend the Senator for his view in these areas. But I must again conclude that these particular matters have no place on a reconciliation bill.

Mr. GRAHAM addresses the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, are there any others under the time controlled by the Senator from Tennessee who wish to speak on this matter? If not, I would like to close.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I note the arrival of the Senator from Illinois who had indicated he wishes to speak briefly on this particular issue. We know of his eloquence in this Chamber and we always look forward to his arrival and his addresses, and I say that quite seriously. I ask the Senator how much time he requires.

Mr. DIXON. I think 3 minutes will be satisfactory.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Senator, and I yield 3 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I regret very much the necessity to rise against this amendment offered by my warm friend, the Senator from Florida. I have legislation now pending calling for risk-based deposit insurance. We have given about a year's study to that proposition, and it is an extremely complicated and difficult problem that needs a lot of attention by the jurisdictional committee, the Banking Committee.

When my friend was prepared to offer this amendment in the committee a week or so ago, at that time I expressed my view to my colleagues on the committee that we should be cautious in proceeding on this. Treasury and FDIC are both doing very substantial studies on this issue right now.

I assure every one of my colleagues in the U.S. Senate that risk-based insurance premiums and risk-based deposit insurance for the FDIC system are under very serious and earnest consideration in the Banking Committee of the U.S. Senate right now and will probably consume all of next year with many hundreds of hours of serious hearings and very detailed examination of the issue by every single solitary member of the committee.

I have the highest personal regard for my colleague from Florida. I think he is on the right track. I intend ultimately to work as hard as I can to accomplish risk-based deposit insurance for the system, but this is not the time to do it on this bill. The time to do it is after careful consideration next year. I hope to work in concert with my colleague from Florida next year to accomplish this purpose.

For now, I simply say to my colleagues, I urge them to not go into this very serious field at this point in time until the committee has had adequate time to carefully analyze what Treasury says, what FDIC says, a bill that is in right now by this Senator, another bill that is in right now by the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Michigan. I believe my colleague from Florida, as well, has legislation. All of it ought to receive careful analysis. I urge my colleagues—I regret this very much—to reject this amendment at this time until such time as this whole matter can receive our analysis in the appropriate jurisdictional committee.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the waiver of the point of order on the amendment offered by Senator GRAHAM to give the FDIC authority to create a risk-based deposit insurance system. I do this even though I believe the idea has considerable merit. Our thrift deposit insurance system has required a huge injection of public funds, and our bank insurance fund has been shrinking because of large recent losses. Many of these losses reflect undue risk-taking by financial institutions.

Risk-based insurance would reduce the incentives for such risk-taking by depository institutions.

But the precise structure of such authority needs further careful consideration. It should be included in a deposit insurance reform bill next year. I have included similar language in a bill, S. 3103, that I introduced similar language in a bill, S. 3103, that I introduced last month. But that is not, and was not, intended to be the last word on the subject.

Senator DIXON has introduced a well-thought-out bill on deposit insurance reform which focuses heavily on this issue. The committee needs to examine that bill thoroughly.

In addition, the Treasury is developing a major report on deposit insurance which will include this issue. It is expected by year-end. Congress requested this study and we should have the opportunity to read and study it before acting.

The FDIC does not need legislation to start thinking now about exactly how it would wish to implement such a provision. And it would violate the Byrd rule because it is extraneous to the reconciliation process. The Banking Committee will take up this issue early in the next session, and I believe we will do a better job of it by considering it in the context of a broader group of deposit insurance reforms.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, are there any others who wish to use the time of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, are there others wishing to speak on the Graham amendment, I see no others wishing to speak in opposition at the present time.

Mr. GRAHAM. If not, Mr. President, I would be prepared to yield back the remainder of my time at the conclusion of my closing remarks if the Senator from Tennessee would be likewise so willing.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I would prefer to hear the Senator's closing remarks and make a decision at that time. I know of his eloquence and persuasiveness, and I might have to rebut some of the points that he raises.

Mr. GRAHAM. I admire the Senator from Tennessee's sagacity in allowing himself the time to endeavor to overcome what will be a very persuasive set of comments I am about to make. But before I proceed to those comments, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. SASSER. I will yield to the Senator from Florida for a question.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, under the Budget Act, the Senator mentioned that the Congressional Budget Office in scoring this amendment did not score it as having any budget reduction consequence?

Mr. SASSER. I am advised that that is the case.

Mr. GRAHAM. If this amendment has been offered as the Senator from Utah indicated when he first proposed it 10 years ago, in 1980, and it had been scored under the Congressional Budget Office, what budget reduction impact would it have had then?

Mr. SASSER. There is really no way of assessing that. In other words, the Congressional Budget Office makes a projection based on expectation and experience and facts they have before them at a particular time. In 20/20 hindsight, if this amendment had been instituted 10 years ago, there is no doubt that it would have saved the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation a substantial amount of money.

Mr. GRAHAM. The question is, would CBO in 1980 in all likelihood have given the same scoring to this amendment as it apparently has done in 1990, and that is zero?

Mr. SASSER. I can only speculate on that but my conjecture would be in the affirmative, yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I think we have just heard the most compelling argument for this amendment. The Senator from Utah said that 10 years ago, in 1980, before we had a $500 billion S&L debacle, had this same amendment, which without question would have gone to a central cause of the collapse, that is, the privatization of profits and the socialization of losses, had this been offered 10 years ago, we would have had exactly the same point of order made against it as we are going to have this morning and, that is, it is not germane because it does not contribute to the reduction of the Federal budget deficit.

I want you to tell every truckdriver when they pull up to the pump and pay several dollars more in Federal gasoline tax, every one of which is going to go to pay off the S&L collapse, that this was not germane and irrelevent to them.

If we adopt the Senate plan—and I hope we will not—which will reduce Social Security checks by virtue of increasing cost to Medicare beneficiaries, I want you to tell every one of those older Americans when they pick up their check and see that it has fewer dollars then they had anticipated, I want to you tell them that their dollars are going to pay off a nongermane, nonconsequential, does not count against the Federal budget deficit collapse of the savings and loan institutions.

Of course, it makes a difference. Of course, it is germane in every way except the fantasy land in which we deal with this charade of a budget process.

Mr. President, the Senator from Utah said that he offered this in 1980, and it was not accepted. I did not get here until 1987. But in 1988, July 27, to be exact, I offered this amendment right here. It was not adopted. In 1989, this proposal was presented as part of the savings and loan reform program.

If I could quote, Mr. President, from the American Banker of March 3, 1989, under the headline "Plan for Risk-Based Insurance Premium Dropped."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent this article be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. GRAHAM. The article states:

A provision authorizing risk-based deposit insurance premiums was dropped at the last minute from the President's plan to restructure the savings and loan industry, said Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Chairman L. William Seidman.

The risk-based premium would have given the FDIC the ability to assess higher premiums against banks and thrifts pursuing risky activities, said Mr. Seidman in testimony Thursday before the Senate Budget Committee. He said he will ask the Congress to restore the provision.

That was in 1989, Mr. President. Congress in its ill-wisdom did not restore that provision. So we have now been a decade, a decade and hundreds of billions of dollars later and what is the argument that we are getting? We are proceeding too quickly. We need to delay and study. We need to think about it some more. We need to let some more institutions fail. We need to continue to encourage improvident behavior because we do not want to be charged with being too expeditious.

Mr. President, I find that an absolutely unacceptable abdication of responsibility.

Yes, it is true that the modest mouse that we were able to produce in last year's savings and loan bailout bill as it relates to the risk-based insurance was to direct the Treasury to do the study. I will tell you, as the prime sponsor of the provision, it was hard to get that in the bill.

Now we are being told we should not do anything about this fire until that study is available.

Mr. President, I am going to make a prediction with almost total certainty of its accuracy, and I will challenge anyone to question this. That is, in the final analysis, if and when, after a decade of delay, we adopt risk-based insurance, we are going to do so by directing the FDIC to develop a system to do it. They are the people who have the responsibility. They are the WAUSAU insurance agency of financial institution insurance. They are the people with the expertise to fashion a plan. They are the ones who, when we finally get around to it, are going to be given that responsibility.

So the question today is not whether we are going to direct the FDIC to do it but when are we going to direct them to do it, and how much time will elapse before we finally get a system that makes some sense.

It has been said that Mr. Seidman has said let us wait, do not proceed forward, let us hold.

Mr. Seidman did not have to tell us today in October 1990 what his position was. He told us in March 1989 what his position was. His position is that in spite of the action of his own administration being that, he came to Congress and asked for risk-based insurance premiums. That was—What?—18 months ago.

Mr. President, Mr. Seidman is a good soldier. He is not going to come up here and say, in the face of a budget reconciliation that has been hammered out over the better part of a half year between the administration and congressional leaders that he thinks it should be dumped on, that it is inadequate. That is not the Bill Seidman that all of us who have grown to know and respect know the man to be. Of course, he is going to be a good soldier. But his record is clear. Eighteen months ago he told us to do this. He urged us to do this. I say today we ought to respond and not a day later.

Mr. President, in conclusion, what frustrates me about this whole process is that we have become such captives of our own spiderweb of process. The Senator from Tennessee made some remarks that, well, you do not have risk-based insurance because, well, the law says that we do not have risk-based insurance. We do not have it because the law says every institution from the most conservative financial institution in Leary, GA, to the most profligate institution in some other unnamed State, will pay the same premium.

We do not care that the institution in Leary, GA, knows its neighbors, knows its community, has had a long, solid record of lending to help the farmers, the small business people, and citizens of that community be able to do the things that are important to them. We do not care that this other institution, which is owned by some fly-by-night speculator who just got in the business in order to use the institution for his own purposes, is now putting the insurance fund into which the Leary, Georgias of America are contributing at enormous risk.

In this very bill we are proposing to raise the insurance premium on that bank in Leary, GA, and every other well-run bank in America by about 20, 30 percent on top of a major 60 percent rise which has just gone into effect by FDIC. Yet we are going to charge the same rates to the institutions which are driving us to further financial collapse.

Mr. President, this is an aside. This was a bonus, this column that I read and which I will ask unanimous consent to appear in the RECORD. But it goes to another point of this budget charade. We say that we are putting forward a budget document, all these hundreds of pages, that is going to save us $500 billion over 5 years, $40 billion this year. Approximately $130 billion of that saving is supposed to be in increased taxes.

To calculate how much change in the tax law will result in changes in actual dollars coming into the Treasury, you have to make some economic assumptions; how much will the economy grow, what will the rate of interest be, what will inflation be, employment, all those factors which determine what a law that talks about a percentage of tax, number of pennies per gallon, how much actual dollars it will bring into the Treasury.

We have decided to use—and apparently this is another constraint of this charade of the budget process—the economic assumptions that the President predicated his budget on back in January. The Presiding Officer knows these numbers better than I, but I believe they contain such things as in 1993 our Nation will be growing at a GNP rate of approximately 3.6 percent.

Today we probably are close to zero percent GNP growth. But in 2 years we are going to be at 3.6. It says that interest rates on short-term borrowing will be at less than 5 percent in 2 years. Today it is about 8 percent. Those are just two examples of the economy foundation upon which this $500 billion supposed reduction in the Federal deficit is predicated.

Who was the principal author of those economic assumptions? Who looked through the economic periscope deep into our Nation's economic future to make a determination of what numbers to use? It was the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Richard Darman. It is based on his economic sensitivity, his professionalism, his candor, that we are going to be representing to the American people that we are going to reduce the Federal budget deficit by $500 billion in the next 5 years.

With that background, Mr. President, let me share with you some comments made in the American Banker of March 3, 1989 by the same Richard Darman relative to another area in which he had to make some economic projections, and that was what would the S&L bailout cost. What would be its impact on the American taxpayer? In that a key question was how much of this cost was going to be paid by the industry and how much is going to be paid by you, the American taxpayer?

The key part of that was how strong would the industry be? How much would it be able to show? If you will remember, Mr. President, it was just about a year ago we were debating the S&L bailout bill. It was represented that the total cost to the American taxpayer would be $50 billion because the industry was going to be able to carry a substantial amount of the cost of this bailout.

Let me just continue quoting from this article, March 3, 1989.

Elsewhere on Capitol Hill, Office of Management and Budget Director Richard Darman told the Senate Banking Committee that it is reasonable to assume that thrift industry deposits will grow at 7% as projected in the plan.

However, Sen. Richard Shelby, D-Ala., noted that the thrift industry has been losing rather than gaining deposits, and asked if revenue projections based on deposit premiums could be expected to hold up.

Mr. Darman said the industry historically has grown at 8.8% a year and traditional patterns would resume once a rescue package is enacted.

Mr. President, that is the man's judgment upon whom this $500 billion budget deficit program is predicated.

As Senator SHELBY had prophesied, rather than growing at 7 percent, the industry has continued to contract. Rather than the American taxpayers paying $50 billion to the S&L bailout, this year alone we have another bill of $117 billion. That may give some people some confidence that they can stand on this floor and represent that we are going to make a $500 billion contribution to a America's budget deficit. It gives me no confidence.

Mr. President, I believe that we are facing a serious, serious problem, and we are trying to give ourselves bigger and bigger shots of Novocaine in order to cover that problem.

Today, at this moment, we have an opportunity to deal with one dimension of that. It is not the world; it is not the silver bullet; it certainly is not the totality of the program. But it is not important enough to the time of this Senate to be able to vote and say to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, as my first amendment would do, "You do not have to—by Federal law, you are no longer shackled, chained, obligated, to ensure every nationally chartered bank in this country if in your independent judgment it would be improvident to do so." But we are so chained that we cannot make that simple statement of policy.

Mr. President, as my second amendment would do, are we so restricted, are we so enmeshed in our own construction of process that we cannot make the simple statement the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation should act as any other insurance agency and link the amount of premium charged to the amount of risk assumed?

Those are two simple statements. I guess they are too simple. They are not germane. They do not have anything to do with reducing the Federal budget deficit. They are not relevant to the CBO calculation of cost to the budget.

Those will be very satisfying statements to make at the little beautiful square in Leary, GA, Mr. President, as the farmers drive by in their trucks to pay higher gasoline costs. You can say the $130 billion or $167 billion, $500 billion over 30 years you are going to pay the S&L's, that is not germane and that is not relevant; the fact that every one of your tax dollars for the next 5 years is going to go to pay for it is something we do not recognize having existed.

You can tell the lady who comes to the post office in Leary to pick up her Social Security check, and looks at it and says: Oh, my goodness, this check is about $5 or $6 less than I thought it was going to be; I see it is because my Medicare premiums have gone up.

Tell her it is inconsequential; it is not germane. CBO did not calculate that. Unfortunately, we had to take your $5 and ship it out to some wealthy wheeler-dealer who took advantage of the national policy of privatizing profits and insuring the loss in the financial system. She will be very happy as she considers the quality of her national leadership.

Mr. President, I urge that, in any sense of rationality of what it is we are trying to do today, we adopt these two amendments.

PLAN FOR RISK-BASED INSURANCE PREMIUM DROPPED

(By Jim McTague and Robert M. Garsson)

WASHINGTON.—A provision authorizing risk-based deposit insurance premiums was dropped at the last minute from the President's plan to restructure the savings and loan industry, said Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Chairman L. William Seidman.

The risk-based premium would have given the FDIC the ability to assess higher premiums against banks and thrifts pursuing risky activities, said Mr. Seidman in testimony Thursday before the Senate Budget Committee. He said he will ask Congress to restore the provision.

Under the Bush plan, bank deposit insurance premiums will rise from the current level of 8.33 basis points to 12 basis points the next year and to 15 basis points thereafter. Thrifts would see premiums increase from 21 basis points to 23 basis points for five years. Beginning Jan. 1, 1994, the rate would drop to 18 basis points.

Mr. Seidman said the bank fund eventually might reach a point where premiums could be lowered below 15 basis points.

Elsewhere on Capitol Hill, Office of Management and Budget Director Richard Darman told the Senate Banking Committee that it is reasonable to assume that thrift industry deposits will grow at 7% as projected in the plan.

However, Sen. Richard Shelby, D-Ala., noted that the thrift industry has been losing rather than gaining deposits, and asked if revenue projections based on deposit premiums could be expected to hold up.

Mr. Darman said the industry historically has grown at 8.8% a year and traditional patterns would resume once a rescue package is enacted.

Even if growth drops to 4%, Mr. Darman said, the rescue package will cost only an additional $1.2 billion over five years and $4.7 billion over 10 years.

Thrifts have lost about $12 billion in deposits so far this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FOWLER). Does the Senator from Florida yield back the remainder of his time?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Senator from Florida, with the same caution that was previously exercised by the Senator from Tennessee, and desiring to have the opportunity to close on his amendment, would do so at the conclusion of the rebuttal of the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I raise a point of order under section (d)(1)(A) of the Byrd rule against the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I move that my amendment be considered, the Budget Act and the Byrd rule notwithstanding. And, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to waive the Budget Act and the Byrd rule, for purposes of considering this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Was a yea-and-nay vote requested on the previous motion?

Mr. SASSER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were ordered on the previous motion.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does it not take unanimous consent to get this yea-and-nay vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not require unanimous consent.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. I would be pleased to yield if I knew what the distinguished Senator was going to say.

Mr. METZENBAUM. It is for the purpose of making inquiry of the managers of the bill as to whether they would be willing to have these two votes at 12 o'clock.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield off our time. We have more time than the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chair will restate, the time is controlled by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. SASSER] and the Senator from Florida, [Mr. GRAHAM]. The Senator from New Mexico may yield time off the bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is what I did, and I apologize for not making it clear. I want to accommodate for the inquiry, and it is off our time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask the managers—I know one Member missed a plane and is coming in—whether there would be any objection to having unanimous consent to have the vote at 12 o'clock and then at 12:15?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am under the impression that the Member who was having a problem with the plane is here and has landed and is on his way to the Chamber, I was advised by the Cloakroom.

Mr. METZENBAUM. If I may add one other point the Senator from Ohio wants to vote on these and every amendment. He did not want to get into this, but a member of my staff is being buried at 11 o'clock. I want to run out to that funeral, and I have a personal interest.

If it disturbs the rest of the Members of the Senate, I will say go ahead without my vote. If it is not inconvenient, I would appreciate it. I am not trying to delay the Senate. In fact, I want to see the Senate move forward.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I have no objection.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the motion to waive the Byrd rule.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, has the Senator from Florida yielded back all of his time?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have.

Mr. SASSER. Has all time been yielded back?

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BUMPERS. Which of the two Graham amendments are we going to be voting on; No. 1 or No. 2?

I understand it is a motion to waive the budget. Which amendment is the motion to waive the budget on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is Graham amendment No. 3025, which is the second Graham amendment, which the Senator from Florida has called risk assessment of the deposit insurance.

The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. It was my understanding that we would vote on these in the order they were offered, which is the first vote would take place on the motion to waive the Budget Act for purposes of the amendment allowing FDIC to deny any insurance, and the second would be on the motion to waive on the risk-based insurance system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend for a moment so the Chair may consult the parliamentarian?

As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, the first vote will occur on the motion to waive on the pending amendment, which is the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to provide for risk assessments for deposit insurance. It is the Senator's amendment No. 2. If they were called to order, it would bring it back to the underlying amendment. That is not the case of the first vote that would occur on the motion to waive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to waive the Budget Act be in the order, the first vote be on the motion to waive the Budget Act for purposes of allowing consideration of the amendment on denial of FDIC insurance; and the second would be on the motion to waive the Budget Act of purposes of considering the amendment on risk-based FDIC insurance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is all time now yielded back on the first amendment?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, following the rollcall vote on the two Graham amendments, I ask unanimous consent that we go then to a Jeffords resolution, which will require approximately 10 minutes, and then we will move to a Gore amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Jeffords resolution require a rollcall?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, not in my judgment. That assumes that all goes as I expect it will.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Would the request include a limitation as to the 10 minutes or just a hope?

Mr. DOMENICI. A hope.

Mr. JEFFORDS. A sincere hope.

Mr. DOMENICI. But it is germane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, when the chairman said we are going to vote on the amendments of the distinguished Senator from Florida, I believe he intended to say the motion not the amendments.

Mr. SASSER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

All time has been yielded back.

Mr. GORE. Parliamentary inquiry. Under the unanimous-consent request just agreed to, after the Senate acts on the Jeffords resolution, the amendment by the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Maryland would then be in order, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. GORE. Was there a time limitation in that unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was not.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the amendment would not be in order, but rather the amendment would be before the Senate; he could call it up. We are not sure the amendment is in order. The amendment may be subject to a point of order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. It was not my intent to address the point of order which might be raised against the Gore-Mikulski amendment. I was simply seeking to establish that it would be the order of business before the Senate to then turn to that amendment. We will have a discussion later on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair's understanding of the unanimous-consent agreement adoped by the Senate was that the junior Senator from Tennessee may offer that amendment in the order in which the unanimous consent was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. It is my understanding that the Gore amendment, which we all understand and have seen, would not, under this order, be subject to an amendment under this unanimous-consent agreement; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request by the Senator from Tennessee would not preclude an amendment being offered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that it not be subject to a second-degree amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act on the amendment No. 3024 offered by the Senator from Florida. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ] is necessarily absent.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 41, nays 58, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Boschwitz

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN). Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn, not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

The amendment of the Senator from Florida, No. 3024, is not germane. The point of order is sustained. The amendment falls.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected.

Mr. DIXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, in light of the vote on amendment No. 1, I ask unanimous consent to vitiate the previously ordered vote on my amendment No. 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive.

May we have order in the Senate, please? The Chair is uncertain of the last vote. We are going to pose the question again. May we have order in the Senate, please?

The question is on the motion to waive.

The motion to waive was rejected.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Tennessee will yield for two questions as to procedure?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Florida for the purpose of a question.

Mr. GRAHAM. Two questions, Mr. President. The first one relates to the bill that is currently before us. It is my understanding that the staff of the Budget Committee has reviewed the reconciliation bill for purposes of germaneness and has found provisions that have been incorporated in this bill to be subject to a point of order. Is it the intention of the chairman of the committee to offer an amendment to strike those nongermane provisions from this reconciliation bill?

Mr. SASSER. That is unclear at the present time, I say to the Senator from Florida. But it is the right of any Senator to offer an amendment to strike or a motion to strike any item that he or she considers to be nongermane.

Mr. GRAHAM. Before I ask my second question, I comment that that is a distressful answer because, obviously, having just received this approximately 25 hours ago, individual Senators are not in a position to do that type of analysis. If the committee does not come forward, we are going to end up with a double standard that proposals that I think are meritorious, as the one I just offered, not being incorporated and other proposals which may or may not be meritorious but are subject to the same germaneness rule would stay in the bill. I suggest that is a fundamental unfairness.

And that goes to the second question. I understand at some point before the 20 hours are up, we are going to have an amendment which will represent some significant modifications to the current budget and Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law; is that correct?

Mr. SASSER. There will be a so-called enforcement package to this reconciliation bill that will be offered by the leadership that will make some changes with regard to the impact of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and other legislation.

Could we have order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will not proceed until we are in order.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Chair.

To continue with the Senator from Florida, that leadership amendment is presently being xeroxed and will be made available to Members within just a very few moments.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, to comment on that, that also distresses me. I recognize the complexity of this matter, but I think the current process that we have, as has just been demonstrated, is a fraud. I think it requires serious attention. We have now, what, less than 4 or 5 hours left? We have not yet received what last night was a 106-page amendment covered with inter-lineations which is purported to be the new budget process for the future. I suggest that that is going to be considered under less than acceptable circumstances, and we are likely to be ratifying with even greater complexities, nuances, convolutions, further budget processes that will prevent us from dealing intelligently with the financial needs of the country. So I would raise now my concern for the timing in which this amendment is going to be presented to us and the lack of a capacity that for most Senators will have to give any intelligent scrutiny to this matter.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Florida chooses to use words such as "fraud." I do not think he means to imply that any Member of this body would try to perpetuate a fraud on any other Member.

What is occurring is we are operating under very expedited time procedures, expedited time procedures that are brought about partly by the failure of this body to be able to agree on a budget reconciliation. Here we are in the second or third week in October taking up a budget reconciliation bill that should have been passed months and months ago.

These enforcement measures have been under discussion for months with representatives of the administration, representatives of the minority, the various budget summiteers; the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee has had significant input into it, as has the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee. They have been inspected by the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee.

We are just now resolving one or two or three issues that have been outstanding for some period of time, and this will be available, is available now for the distinguished Senator's inspection. It is not unusual that we act on legislation around here in which every Senator has not read every jot and title in every line of a piece of legislation.

So I say that this is available for the distinguished Senator from Florida to inspect and I urge him to look it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment No. 3025 by the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] does not produce a change in either outlays or revenues and therefore is an extraneous provision under subsection D(1)(a) of section 20,001 of the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, as amended. The point of order is well taken. The amendment falls.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, before the distinguished Senator commences, might I be recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. On my time on the bill.

I understand we have a process where the Senator from Vermont is going to offer an amendment and then the junior Senator from Tennessee. We did ask that the amendment of the junior Senator from Tennessee not be subject to amendment. When I made that unanimous-consent request, I did not ask the same with reference to the Jeffords amendment. I request that it not be subject to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 3026

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I have an amendment. The amendment is No. 2. It is the short version.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request by the Senator from New Mexico that would prohibit a second-degree amendment? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, this is an important amendment and fortunately will be accepted on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] proposes an amendment numbered 3026.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERRY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following

SECTION —.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) in order to have a comprehensive program to reduce pollution and reduce our dependence on foreign oil, it is important to coordinate programs relating to the production of automobiles and the production of fuels;

(2) the achievement of long-term energy security for the United States is essential to the health of the national economy, the well-being of our citizens, and the maintenance of national security;

(3) the displacement of energy derived from imported oil with alternative fuels will help to achieve energy security and improve air quality;

(4) transportation uses account for more than 60 percent of the oil consumption of the Nation; and

(5) the Nation's security, economic, and environmental interests require that the Federal Government should assist clean-burning, nonpetroleum transportation fuels to reach a threshold level of commercial application and consumer acceptability at which they can successfully compete with petroleum based fuels.

SEC. 2. RESOLUTION.

It is the sense of the Senate that it is in the national interest to enhance energy security and promote environmental protection through the gradual replacement of gasoline with cleaner, domestic nonpetroleum energy sources, and

The Secretary of energy should analyze the potential of, and report to Congress on, the technical feasibility of replacing, by 1998 and 2005, ten percent and thirty percent respectively, of our national transportation fuel with alternative and other domestic sources of energy.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I think it is important that while we are on this important piece of legislation we also give some consideration to the impact the Middle East crisis will have as the days unfold. The purpose of my amendment is to hopefully allow us to be in position when we return next spring to be able to devise a plan that will get us off of the dependency on oil from the Middle East.

It is a relatively simple amendment that I am offering and yet its ramifications could be quite dramatic. What my amendment does very simply is it says that we should take a look at a program that will get us in a position where we can use our indigenous resources, to be able to substitute our motor fuels for indigenous resources such that we can on an increasing percentage get rid of more and more of the imported oils and necessity for our motor fuels.

The Middle East is not something that is going to go away. We thought it was. We had a crisis in the mid-1970's and we at that time considered all sorts of options we should consider to get us in a position where we would no longer be dependent upon imported oil. For instance, the amendment I am offering today was offered at that time. It had over 100 cosponsors in the House. It passed out of two full committees and one subcommittee in an effort to have a program to get us out of that dependency. However, OPEC folded in the sense of its ability to control oil and we ended up with that program not being approved.

What this program say is that we have enough indigenous resources in this Nation with the proper program to manufacture our own motor fuels and that we should do this.

Now, how do we do this? Well, we tried a program in the 1970's which did not work, and I want to make sure people understand this is not that kind of a program. We mandated a supply. We said let us create a Synfuels Corporation to produce a synthetic substance to get rid of the need for the importation. That failed, it failed miserably because you cannot mandate a supply and make it work unless you have huge subsidies.

My program goes the opposite direction; it says we will mandate the demand. We will reassure those who want to manufacture or to produce something that will replace the imported oil that there will be a market for it.

Now, it also will work in concert with the clean air bill for the program I have proposed, which was printed on Tuesday in the RECORD, says we should also give extra incentive to those fuels which are cleaner so that at the same time we get ourselves off of the dependency of Mideastern oil we will have distribution systems available to enable us also to have the clean fuels necessary to also clean up the air.

I have discussed this with the Energy Committee personnel and I believe that it is acceptable to them.

I would also like to ask unanimous consent to add Senator CONRAD BURNS as a cosponsor of this amendment.

I would be happy to at this point yield to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. Thank you, Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding the floor at this point.

I ask unanimous consent that I be added as original cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the Senator is exactly correct in the thrust of this amendment. I think it is a useful addition as an expression of the determination of the Senate to do something positive about energy supply in this country.

Just because it happens to be good energy policy does not mean we should not do this. It is good energy policy. It is also good environmental policy in a whole variety of different ways.

These kinds of fuels help us meet the objectives of the Clean Air Act, whether it is the existing law or the proposal which has already passed and is in conference between the Senate and the other body. It is also good farm policy as well; if we can get ethanol production moved into our liquid fuels in this country, we do something very positive for the farmers of this country in creating new markets for produce that they would like to sell on the market at a profit.

It is also very good foreign policy because it reduces dependence upon imported oil. The Senator is exactly right with respect to our problems as we confront Saddam Hussein, and Iraq in Kuwait, and in the Persian Gulf area.

We do not need to redebate all the questions and all the reasons why we have troops in Saudi Arabia today, because I think everyone understands it is not just the oil. It is a combination of oil and a reckless, ruthless leader in Iraq. But without those two things happening at the same time, our troops would not be there.

Energy policy ought to be directed toward reducing our vulnerability, reducing the economic outflow of money, as we have too great a dependence upon foreign oil, imported energy supplies.

It is good economic policy for this country to reduce the balance of payments deficit. This is one of the ways to do it. For a whole lot of reasons, we ought to be moving more positively and affirmatively in this field.

I wish we had been able to legislate more positively and affirmatively in this field, but this is not the time and the place to do the legislation, but is certainly the time and place for us to assert our willingness, our determination, and our intention to move in that direction.

I commend the Senator for bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate today. I wholeheartedly support this amendment in the form of a Senate resolution. I hope the Senate will adopt it without any dissent, and I hope further than that, that the Senate will move toward this kind of a policy in the legislation which must inevitably be passed.

I thank the Senator for yielding. I am delighted to be a cosponsor of this amendment.

Mr. BURNS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I would like to associate myself with the words of Senator JEFFORDS and of course my friend from Idaho, Senator MCCLURE.

Just a couple of months ago we were in the Middle East, and over there if there is one thing that absolutely glared at me it was one of these days we are going to be able to get on an airplane and go over there and visit our money. That is irrespective of what Saddam Hussein did. We maybe sent him a thank you card for letting the alarm go off.

In agriculture this is good farm policy. Because I will tell you this right now, we are running into problems on farm income. We have to have some way or some outlet that we can turn this powerful fuel of biomass, and ethanol and, yes, we talk about ethanol and clean coal technology—the mix of everything. But basically it makes good farm policy because if we only produced for the domestic market, in wheat alone, it would only be a third of our production which would be used in this country. We are producing that much in this country. It is a tremendous resource that is going to waste.

We can power every car, every truck, every train in this country with what we produce from agriculture.

You know, there was an old lady who said how did the farmers get along a long time ago; what about their costs? I said, well, they produced their own energy. It was horsepower. They produced the grass. The energy was from the feed. The energy was produced on the farm. Let us take that same philosophy and do it with this country, because we can do it.

I congratulate Senator JEFFORDS for this sense of the Senate. I, too, hope there is no dissent here. It is time that this Nation becomes independent with its energy resources, and it takes a mix. But this will be, Mr. President, one of the great parts of weaning us off fossil fuel and petroleum.

I thank you. I yield the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the Senator from Montana for his comments. I agree with him wholeheartedly. I especially want to thank the Senator from Idaho for his comments. I only wish he would be here next year with us in order to bring about an affirmative end to what we are starting here today.

Let me briefly summarize where we are and then I would be happy to yield the floor.

I want to point out that my bill puts us on a course of being energy independent by ensuring the demand, that is the critical part, with no budget cost. It will also enhance our ability to reduce pollution through the availability of cleaner fuels. It will create thousands of new jobs by shifting tens of billions of dollars toward alternative and replacement fuels production.

That money that we are now shipping to the Middle East and elsewhere will be here in this country. It will provide revenues through the many industries created to supply the replacement fuels. It will reduce agricultural program costs by increasing the demand for ethanol. The variety of fuels that will compete for this market will help coal regions, natural gas regions, as well as the regions that produce fuels from shale or tar sand.

The guaranteed demand will attract capital necessary to stimulate the production of these fuels. Market forces subject to environmental standards will select the least costly options that uses the market forces.

Mr. President, replacement fuels are means by which we will extricate ourselves from a multitude of problems brought on by our dependency on imported oil. My program offers a cost-effective method for promoting the commercial development of these domestic resources.

There are the resources. We have the ability to remove ourselves from the dependency upon the oil which we are now importing, the dilemma we are in in the Middle East. It is important that we not allow ourselves to continue the position of being dependent on the oil from the Middle East and subjecting our young people, not just now but in the decades ahead, to having to go over in order to ensure that supply is available.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. How much time does the Senator from Vermont have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 48 minutes and 16 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I support his resolution. I wonder if the Senator would yield 3 minutes.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Vermont that the idea encapsulated in this resolution is indeed one that could solve America's energy problem because this country is not energy short. What we are short of is oil and what we are short of is the kind of fuel that will permit our transportation in the United States to function, and principally our individual transportation; not exclusively, but principally.

Well over 65 percent of the oil that is imported and used in America goes to transportation needs. Clearly there is a way to substitute other components, other kinds of liquid energy for the refined oil product.

We have always been subject to the problem that in producing new kinds of energy we are vulnerable to the vagaries of oil. What the Senator is suggesting is we set a demand proportion on that fuel to come from other than oil-refined products. If that happened to be all from the United States, and I hope it is, then that new demand component would set up its own competitiveness. So while it might be high at the beginning, it would be merged and meshed with gasoline, as I understand it, oil-related gasoline, and used in a mixture that was adequate.

Eventually we would have a competition and a market for that new percentage that comes from other sources. It could be liquid coal, it could be ethanol from agricultural products. This resolution merely says this is what we ought to be doing. I think it is.

I am not so sure when we get down to the details in legislation that people will not find all kinds of excuses and reasons that we should not or could not. But I believe it is an idea whose time has come. I thank the Senator for offering it. I support it.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I am happy to yield back the balance of my time, unless someone else wishes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the majority manager yield back his time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment (No. 3026) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. McCLURE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, under the previous unanimous-consent request, the Senator from Tennessee will be now recognized for an amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that following consideration of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, the pending business be a sense-of-the-Senate resolution to be offered by Senators NUNN and BOREN.

Will the Chair withhold the ruling a moment?

Let me state, Mr. President, for the benefit of the distinguished ranking member, who was distracted momentarily, that I have propounded a unanimous-consent request to the Chair requesting that, at the conclusion of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, the pending business of the Senate then become a sense-of-the-Senate resolution to be offered by Senators BOREN and NUNN, and that the sense-of-the-Senate resolution not be subject to amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say to my friend who is here on the floor from Georgia, I need a couple minutes to check it out. It seems plausible to me and the thing we ought to do. If I get concurrence, I will ask Senator GORE to yield so I can then agree with the consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks the Senator from Tennessee, does he mean a sense-of-the-Senate amendment or sense-of-the-Senate resolution?

Mr. SASSER. Sense-of-the-Senate amendment. I apologize to the Chair. I misspoke myself.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I just have received confirmation that so long as the unanimous consent includes that it is not subject to further amendment and includes a time limit; is there one?

Mr. NUNN. One hour.

Mr. DOMENICI. Equally divided.

Mr. NUNN. That will be sufficient for us.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it so ordered.

The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 3027

(Purpose: To provide substitute revenue provisions)

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. BIDEN, proposes an amendment numbered 3027.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike section 7461 of the bill and insert the following:

SEC. 7461. ELIMINATION OF PROVISION REDUCING MARGINAL TAX RATE FOR HIGH-INCOME TAXPAYERS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] and I, are offering this amendment in behalf of ourselves and our original cosponsors, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY]; and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN].

Let me say in beginning my comments on this amendment something which I said briefly last evening. I deeply respect what the two leaders are attempting to do in bringing the Finance Committee bill and the reconciliation package to a successful conclusion.

Let me repeat my commitment, Mr. President. Regardless of what happens on this amendment, which I care deeply about, I will support the leadership package. I think it is extremely important that the package pass, that we go to a conference with the House, that that conference committee produce a bill that is acceptable to this body and to the other body, that it be sent to the President, and that he approve it.

I recognize fully that if that long, complicated process is going to work, we have to pay careful attention at each step along the way to the need for a sufficient consensus to allow the process to continue.

I am concerned about the conference committee and what will come out of the conference committee. I believe, Mr. President, that a majority of Senators in this body would like to see an outcome which distributes the burden of cuts and taxes fairly, in a manner that does not rule off limit increases in the rate of taxation to those who are most fortunate in our society, who are now paying a rate somewhat lower than Americans who make slightly less than they do, a marginal rate.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not want my comments to interrupt the Senator's remarks. We are getting in a situation where time is important, and we know Senator METZENBAUM cannot be back before 12:30.

I wonder if the Senator will entertain the idea of having a time agreement so that we could vote no later than 12:30?

Mr. GORE. That is perfectly acceptable. I have consulted with my cosponsor, and we have said all along that a time limit would be agreeable to us, and 1 hour equally divided seems fair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will say to my good friend from Tennessee, in the event we can do better, and do it in less time, we can call up another amendment and not insist on a vote. We would hope we could do the opposition in less than a half hour.

So I ask unanimous consent that the time be 1 hour equally divided, and whatever the vote is, it occur no sooner than 12:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask if the distinguished Senator from New Mexico will amend the request to make it that we have an up or down vote on the amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. No; I cannot do that. In fact, I was just going to make sure that my unanimous consent did not waive the right to move to raise a point of order on the amendment.

We cannot do that. Of course, the Senator does not have to agree on the time, either.

Mr. GORE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I was just saying a moment ago that I am concerned about the outcome from the conference committee, and I am convinced that a majority of Senators in this body, having heard from the President that new taxes are necessary, as well as cuts in spending, now face the question of how to distribute the burden of that new taxation.

I am convinced that a majority of Senators believe in their own minds that it is no longer fair to hold the so-called bubble as a sacrosanct item not subject to change. We have already heard a discussion of the bubble, and it is not my intention to go back over familiar ground.

But just to recap briefly the basic raw facts, the top effective rate of 33 percent comes back down for those making roughly more than $200,000 a year. And if in this measure we are going to raise taxes on lots of people in the United States, why should we continue to respect this mistaken anomaly in the present tax law which affords a special privilege to the wealthiest citizens in our country?

It is interesting to note that many of those who are in that category do not object to the principle of fairness being asserted here. It is the White House which is asserting that principle over the objections of some who would benefit from it. I just think that it makes good sense. If taxes are going to be raised, then the burden should be distributed fairly.

Mr. President, let me also say at the start of this statement, having given my commendation to the two leaders, I want to single out the majority leader because he has made these same points repeatedly for the last 4 years and has been the single most effective advocate of the point of view that this so-called bubble ought to be eliminated. I think all of us understand that the majority leader and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and some others, perhaps, felt bound to support the package which came out of the Finance Committee, notwithstanding the fact that their own personal view is that they would like to see something like the Gore-Mikulski amendment adopted.

I hope that a great many Senators, hopefully a majority, will say in their vote on this amendment that they would like the conference committee to burst the bubble and they would like to reduce the impact now being proposed on Medicare patients who will be asked to pay a great deal more if the Finance Committee package passes unamended.

Mr. President, I would also like to offer the highest praise to the chairman of the Budget Committee, my friend and colleague from Tennessee, Senator JIM SASSER. He has brought to this process critical leadership, endless energy, and a deep commitment to making Government work at a time when our country desperately needs men and women who will exercise that commitment with the kind of dedication Senator SASSER has shown. We are all in his debt and grateful for his service and dedication.

I would also like to compliment the Senator from New Mexico, my friend, Senator DOMENICI. I share with him the conviction that we are right to make deficit reduction our first priority. But in figuring ways to cut the deficit, I also agree that we cannot ignore the most important factor in any budget equation—the American people, working and middle-class families, seniors, and others who are already paying more than their fair share in taxes.

This amendment really poses a very simple question. Having accepted the need for sacrifice, here we have a chance to reorder the priorities a little bit and ask those who are the wealthiest in our society to pay the same tax rate as those who are making a little bit less than they do. And we use that money in this amendment to reduce the impact on Medicare recipients. We would also, incidentally, slightly cut back on the gas tax increase. But the principal focus of this is to reduce the impact on Medicare patients. All of the numbers boil down to that simple question. Do we want to ask senior citizens in the hospital to pay more so the wealthiest in our society can pay less? That is the question.

I do not want to ask the Medicare patients to pay more so that the wealthiest in our society can pay less. I do not want to tell senior citizens in Tennessee or anywhere else that they should pay more for health care so that those who are most fortunate in our society can get an unjustified tax break. It is just plain wrong, and it is a mistake that this amendment would correct.

Let me tell you what is not in this amendment. It does not include other changes in law relating to farm programs or relating to other programs. It does not include any change in the current practice of indexation to avoid bracket creep. People have different views on that. This amendment does not address that. It is very simple and very clear. It bursts the bubble with the accompanying provisions on the alternative minimum increase and the surcharge discussed earlier, and the money is used to reduce the impact on Medicare recipients and to slightly decrease the planned rise in the gasoline tax.

I believe it is only fair, Mr. President. I really hope that our colleagues on both sides of the aisle will take a good, hard look at this. I do not think it is subject to the criticism that has been made about some other amendments, that it kills the package, that it undermines the agreement. I do not think it does. I really believe that a vote for this amendment is the best and most effective way to influence the outcome in the conference committee.

Mr. President, I will have more to say about this amendment, but on this occasion, I would like to pause now and say that I am very, very proud and honored to be joined by my cosponsor, the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] in proposing this amendment. I now yield to her such time as she may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

I rise today to join with Senator GORE in proposing an amendment to bring more fairness to the deficit reduction package.

Mr. President, I would also like to ask that the Senator from Kansas, a member of the other party, be added as a cosponsor. She must be in her own conference committee meeting and cannot join us on the floor.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator KASSEBAUM be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, we need a new budget. There is no doubt about that. But we also need a new attitude on how we approach the budget process.

Mr. President, I believe that good government must listen to the people and the story of their lives. The message from the people has been loud and clear. They want a budget that cares about them and their day-to-day needs. They want a budget with real savings. They want a budget that does not forget what it means to live from paycheck to paycheck. They want us to be here not to worry about keeping our job; they want us to be here to worry about doing our job.

Last week I came to the U.S. Senate and spoke out on the budget and said that I had just left the bedside of my mother, who had been admitted to the hospital on an emergency basis. She sent me here to save Medicare. Mr. President, I was with my mother this morning. God and the Sisters of Mercy have taken good care of my mother, and I am happy to announce that she is off the critical care list. She asked me if the budget was off the critical care list and how are we doing. I said, "Mom, today we are going to offer an amendment that is going to save Medicare."

It is not only that I have talked with my own mom, I have talked with moms and dads who are worried about their future.

They are struggling to make sure their kids have a good education, a safe neighborhood. Seniors who spent their lifetimes contributing to this country's success want to enjoy their retirement and security. But then they see us asking them to pay more and more for Medicare. These moms and dads and grannies and grandpops know what it means to work hard. They are asking us to make Government work just as hard for them. Not more Government, but more effective Government.

When we focus on this budget we must represent the values of Main Street, not the values of Wall Street. We must stand for hard work, thrift and opportunity; not glitz and greed and lavish spending.

The world is unraveling and the economy is fading. We must lead with policies that attach consequences to behavior. Let us give good-guy bonuses to the people who put something back in our society; the people who go by the rules and make the extra effort.

I want this budget to reflect three principles: Burden sharing; that every American must pay his or her fair share. No gimmicks, we need real savings. And we have to get a dollar's worth of Government services for a dollar's worth of taxes. We want Air Force planes that fly. We want welfare reform that works.

Mr. President, I join in proposing this amendment because it takes these principles and puts them into policy. The Gore-Mikulski amendment makes sure that all Americans pay their fair share. It raises revenue by creating a 33-percent tax rate for those who make over 200 grand.

I think if you have the opportunity in this country to make $200,000, then you ought to accept the responsibility and make sure this Government works.

It adds a 10 percent surcharge on the megarich who make over $1 million a year.

It says that Leona Helmsley, Donald Trump, and Mike Tyson should pay their fair share just like the folks watching the World Series tonight in Baltimore. It makes sure the rich cannot escape paying taxes with smoke and mirrors. It says to the people who want to spend more on lawyers to avoid taxes then they pay in taxes, that they have to pay their share.

What I like about this amendment is we come up with the revenue in a responsible way that makes sure we do not increase Medicare payments. We do not raise the deductible. We do not raise the copayment. We do not tax the sick. We tax those who are well, and more than well off.

We cut 3½ cents off the gas tax, which is important to commuters, to watermen, to farmers. By eliminating the proposed limit on itemized deductions, we make sure we encourage charitable giving and do not freeze the deduction on local property tax.

We have heard a lot about fairness. Fairness means we give the American people a budget that makes sense and one that does not make the middle-class poor and the poor poorer. This amendment stands for these values, values for the 1990's.

I intend to vote to keep the Government going. Whether my amendment is agreed to or it fails, I will vote for final passage. It is this Senator's job to make sure Government keeps going and Government works.

I have respect for the leadership, the majority leader, the minority leader, the Budget Committee people, Senator BYRD of the Appropriations Committee, who has made the process work. I now want to do my best to make sure the Government works. When my name is called I will vote "aye" for this amendment and later on then I will vote "aye" to make sure Government keeps on doing its job.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, how much time remains to the proponents of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eleven minutes.

Mr. GORE. I have several requests for time. I would like to yield to the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] for 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am going to support this amendment. There are provisions in the amendment I do not agree with, namely the continuation of the gas tax. I believe that this is a tax that ought not to be imposed at this time, given the high price of gasoline we are already experiencing.

Nonetheless, this is a great improvement over what is currently pending as far as the Finance Committee package is concerned in that it distributes the deficit reduction responsibilities in a more equitable fashion.

I like particularly the provision dealing with Medicare. We have focused upon Medicare as being one of the principal sources of reducing the deficit simply because it is growing. Why is Medicare program growing? We have more people who are growing older and in need of services such as those discussed by the Senator from Maryland for her mother. Thank goodness we have the technology available. It is expensive, but it is also available to help make those declining years be at least more endurable and more enduring. I think it is wrong for us to shift the burden to the elderly and say they have to absorb higher copayments and higher premiums. It is wrong to tell the hospitals they have to absorb more. The hospitals are having a difficult time right now.

Last year in the State of Maine, Medicare reimbursements to hospitals fell more than $70 million short of actual costs. Maine hospitals absorbed another $10 million in Medicaid shortfalls and many millions more in costs for uncompensated care. People were treated, but the hospitals had to absorb the costs.

I think the proposal offered by my colleagues from Maryland and Tennessee moves in the right direction. Even though I might disagree with a specific provision in the gas tax, I intend to support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the amendment of both the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Maryland.

I voted against the budget resolution originally because of the inherent unfairness I saw in it. I have said since the beginning: In trying to further the interests of the citizens of Massachusetts I was going to try to find not only a budget that had real deficit reduction with real targets; but also one that was fair to our region and fair to the people of Massachusetts who have suffered enormously over the course of the last couple of years.

I believe the Gore-Mikulski amendment would be a great improvement in terms of the fairness of this resolution to our citizens. It would burst the bubble, impose a 10-percent surtax on millionaires, and also increase the current alternative minimum tax.

The revenues we gain by doing this are going to be used for purposes that I agree with and think are of great importance. One, is reducing the gasoline tax. We have already had a huge increase in gasoline prices in Massachusetts. Two, is eliminating the burden on the elderly imposed by cuts in Medicare.

Most important, when you measure this bill by looking at where people on the lower- and middle-income scale come out, this package is not fair. It is patently unfair to be asking the lower- and middle-income earner to be the ones to carry the largest burden. I was amazed in the original budget agreement to see how the distribution of its impact would fall. I was amazed to see that those over $100,000 would wind up paying less of a percentage of increase than those at lesser rates of income. It was contrary to a fundamental principle of fairness that we have always espoused in this country and one to which I am firmly committed.

The approach in our amendment eliminates over $17 billion of the unfair Medicare cuts. Mr. President, we can't sit back and let the elderly shoulder the burden of a deficit they did not create.

Mr. President, a number of amendments have been proposed on the floor to deal with the question of the bubble. One of them, last night, was Senator CONRAD's amendment, which was very similar to this. I voted against the Conrad amendment because the Conrad amendment took $7 billion of the revenue that it saved and reduced the level of the agricultural cuts from the $15 billion level. I supported those cuts in agricultural subsidies and do not want to see them restored. I believe those cuts are important. I thought it was wrong, in the name of fairness, to do so little to reduce the burden on the elderly in order to increase agricultural subsidies, which I believe ought to be decreased.

So this is the better approach. This approach is more fair. This approach is one that addresses the needs of our older citizens, it addresses the needs of our low- and middle-income citizens. And it simultaneously has fairness, for it asks those who earn the greatest amounts of money in this country to share better—not all of it—but to share better the burden of reducing this deficit.

All we have to do is look at the figures of the last few years in this country. In the last decade, the average after-tax income of the poorest fifth of American households will have fallen 5 percent by the end up of this year. Meanwhile, the richest fifth will have realized a 33-percent gain in after-tax income, and the richest 1 percent will have seen an incredible gain of 87 percent.

We have had a tremendous increase in the division between rich and poor in recent years, possibly the greatest widening of this gap in the history of this Nation.

I believe that the Gore-Mikulski amendment is an appropriate and proper way to try to redress that division while giving a proper definition of fairness to this effort, of reducing the deficit. It makes the wealthiest Americans pay their fair share. It eliminates the increased cost of Medicare to the elderly. And it cuts the regressive gasoline tax.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important effort at fairness and I yield back such time as remains to the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, how much time remains to the proponents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes.

Mr. GORE. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii is recognized.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of this revenue-neutral amendment offered by my distinguished colleagues, Senator GORE and Senator MIKULSKI. I am supporting this as a necessary alternative to the Finance Committee package because it brings us much closer to the more equitable plan adopted by the House. It takes the right steps toward reducing the Federal deficit in a manner that is fairer for the middle class and the elderly.

It seeks to remove the burden placed on elderly and disabled Medicare beneficiaries and scales back the gasoline tax.

It is wrong to say this amendment is an attack on the wealthy. I do not see how anyone can oppose fair taxes on those earning more than $200,000 a year. This amendment ensures that the wealthiest few pay their fair share. By piercing the tax bubble, the measure would return equity and fairness to our tax structure.

The amendment rejects proposals that seek to increase out-of-pocket payments by elderly and disabled Medicare recipients. By removing all of the new additional burdens—particularly the 100-percent increase in the part B deductible, the measure would ensure that the elderly, especially low-income beneficiaries, are not pushed over the poverty line.

Mr. President, a key provision of this amendment that directly affects Hawaii's consumers is a rollback of the gasoline tax to 6 cents a gallon. The Finance Committee proposal would double the current 9½ cents a gallon tax to 18½ cents. We already pay a higher toll at the gas pump than any other State. To ask that Hawaii residents shoulder further increases in gasoline prices is out of the question. We know that lower and middle income families use more of their income to pay for gasoline than wealthier drivers.

Again, the issue is fairness. And again, this proposal gives us a program that remedies the dramatic shift in the tax burden during the 1980's. I hope this amendment fares better than the Conrad amendment yesterday.

Thank you, Mr. President.

I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized with 1 minute remaining.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I would like to reserve my remaining minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Tennessee controls time in opposition.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am advised that the distinguished minority leader may wish to speak on this amendment. In anticipation of his arrival, I suggest the absence of a quorum, to be charged equally against both sides.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in light of the quorum, since we have 1 minute and the opponents have 30 minutes, I wonder if I might reserve the 60 seconds remaining to our side to close the debate?

Mr. SASSER. I think that is fair, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHELBY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the debate on the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee and the distinguished cosponsor, the Senator from Maryland.

I must say, Mr. President, that I find myself in total agreement with the motives behind the offering of this particular amendment. I also agree with the distinguished sponsors that a raise in the rate on upper-income taxpayers is certainly preferable to a 9-cent gasoline tax. I also agree with the distinguished sponsors that a 10-percent surcharge on those with an adjusted gross income of more than $1 million is certainly preferable to raising the deductibles on Medicare beneficiaries.

I remind the Chair and my colleagues that during the debate on the 1986 tax reform bill, I along with the distinguished majority leader, Senator MITCHELL of Maine, argued long and hard and we thought persuasively, but apparently not persuasive enough, that that 1986 tax reform bill ought to have a higher bracket. We argued and attempted to persuade our colleagues that it should have had a 35-percent tax bracket aimed at the wealthiest taxpayers.

The Senate chose not to accept our arguments on that particular occasion. The Senate chose to go ahead and adopt the 1986 tax reform bill with much lower brackets, leaving the tax bracket on the wealthier taxpayers, those who make over $200,000, at a 28-percent level. I say to my colleagues that is precisely the reason I voted against the 1986 tax reform bill, because I felt the wealthiest of the wealthy were not being asked to pay their fair share in the operation of this Government.

I predicted right here in 1986 that within just a very short period of time the wealthy and their agents and highly paid lobbyists would be right back seeking tax breaks for the wealthy; that we were not going to buy them off simply by giving them a 28-percent tax rate. I was precisely correct because some of the stormiest debates both in this body and around this town over the past 2 years have taken place around the question of capital gains, a capital gains tax cut that I submit would go to the wealthiest in our society.

So I agree with the amendment offered by my friend and colleague from Tennessee. I agree with the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Maryland. I think it is a Hobson's choice that many of us are faced with today. Those of us who are supporting this budget reconciliation bill are faced with the choice of either supporting it, and keeping it intact, and achieving the $40 billion in deficit reduction in the first year, $500 billion in deficit reduction over 5 years, or unwinding it by adopting these very attractive, equitable, and I think fair amendments that are being offered.

It is a painful choice, I know, for many of us to make on this side of the aisle. It is a particularly painful choice for this Senator. But in the final analysis I believe that it is in the best interests of our country to get the deficit reduction package presently pending before this body adopted intact, to take that package to conference, and hopefully more equity can be put into the package during the course of the conference, and perhaps when it emerges from conference those of us who supported the package here will feel that our efforts have been more than rewarding.

Mr. President, I say once again to my friend from Tennessee, and my colleague and Senator from Maryland, that I have no disagreement with the amendment that they offer today, but some of us are bound to support this deficit reduction package because we see that as the only way to move this economy forward. And this is the first step that we must take to reduce the staggering deficits that are essentially bleeding the Federal Treasury. In the long run, I believe that the adoption of this deficit reduction package is imperative.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SASSER. I yield for a question. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has remaining 20 minutes and 26 seconds.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Tennessee for his candor in indicating he would like to vote for this amendment; also for his candor in recognizing that the vote for it creates problems as far as passing the ultimate bill.

I wonder whether the Senator from Tennessee can give some of us who are concerned with the whole issue of progressivity the whole question of the wealthy paying more of the tax burden, that out of that conference committee we can anticipate that there will be more movement in the direction of the House bill.

Frankly, many of us are disappointed in the Senate bill. We understand how the Senate bill came into being. But having said that, we are now called upon to have a wish and a hope and a prayer that the Senate conferees will do that which so many of us think should be done.

We are concerned—I speak for myself, but I think I reflect the views of many others—that the President, sitting out there saying, "Do not increase the taxes on the wealthy" is going to pervade that conference committee, and this Senator believes we ought to pass what we should pass, do our job, send it to the President, and let him do anything he wants.

But I wonder what assurances the Senator can give those of us who want to be supportive of the leadership in the Senate but also have a concern about the unfairness and the inequity that we believe is present in the Senate package and we believe is better reflected in the House package?

Mr. SASSER. I say to my distinguished friend from Ohio, the majority leader is present on the floor. I believe that the majority leader, who will be an active participant in the conference, could give the Senator a more accurate appraisal than I could give him at this time.

I defer to the majority leader in response to the question.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. It must be stated at the outset in all candor, as I am sure the Senator realizes, having been in many conferences himself, that no person can give ironclad assurances in advance of a conference with respect to the outcome of the conference. The Senator is aware of that. He has participated in many conferences.

We do not yet even know who the House conferees will be. We do not know precisely which areas they will be prepared to compromise on, or not compromise on.

So all that can be done is to state an intention of what we hope will occur. And that arises out of our present situation and the whole record which we have with respect to these issues.

I happen to be somewhat familiar with an amendment to raise the tax rate because I was the first Member of the U.S. Senate to propose that. I daresay I have proposed it more often, and discussed it more frequently, than any other Member of the Senate, including the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Tennessee, and the Senator from Maryland. No one should misunderstand what my hope, intentions, and views are.

But I also recognize that we must deal with the reality of the situation in which we find ourselves, and that is that the President has said he will veto any legislation that includes a 33-percent rate on the highest income individuals. Therefore we are confronted with this dilemma.

We have three tax measures to keep in mind; three. We have current law. We all know what current law does or does not do. I believe, as the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Maryland, and think it is not sufficiently progressive. We would like to make it more progressive, and the only question is how much more progressive and can it be accomplished.

The second measure to consider is the Senate bill being debated today. That is clearly far more progressive than current law. It raised $53 billion from persons in the upper income brackets, through raising the health insurance wage cap from $51,300 to $89,000, and by limiting deductions on those whose adjusted gross incomes exceed $100,000. By definition those only apply to taxpayers above those levels. So there can be no dispute that if the Senate bill became law, it would make the Tax Code more progressive than it is now, not as progressive as the Senator from Ohio would like, not as progressive as I would like, but more progressive than it is now.

Then the third measure we are considering is the amendment of the Senators from Tennessee and Maryland. That would make the Tax Code, if it became law, still more progressive than either the current law or the Senate bill.

But the reality is, as we all know, that this amendment cannot and will not become law because the President has stated clearly, consistently, and unequivocally that he will veto any bill which raises the top rate to 33 percent on the highest-income taxpayer. That is the President's position.

Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me complete my answer.

I do not agree with the President. I think he is wrong. I have said so publicly not once, not dozens, but hundreds of times. But that is the reality, and this is America, where a law does not become a law unless the President signs it or unless we override his veto. And I think my colleagues will agree we do not have the votes in the Senate to override the President's veto.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. If I can finish my answer. I apologize for the length.

The Senator from Ohio raises questions. So, therefore, in reality, we have two choices. We either do not pass a bill in this Senate, in which case we have the current tax law; or we pass the Senate bill as is, or improved in conference, to the extent that we can improve it, which is more progressive than current law.

So I say to the Senator from Ohio and my very good friends, the Senators from Tennessee and Maryland, if this amendment is adopted, the certain result is that we end up with the current law, which is significantly less progressive than what we are trying to do in the Senate bill, or the Senate bill improved. It comes back to the same old question: Do you want to make a statement or do you want to make a law?

Adoption of this amendment makes a statement, but it produces a result that is directly contrary to the intention of the amendment. Rejection of the amendment permits us to pass the Senate bill, to go to conference, to do the very best we can to produce the most fair, progressive result that we can, and try to get that into law so that we have this increase in progressivity, which is substantial.

People may disagree. Remember, this amendment takes with one hand from the wealthy by raising the top rate to 33 percent and raises the surcharge, but then it gives it back to them by eliminating the limitation on deductions, which raises $29 billion from those whose incomes exceed $100,000. The net effect is to make it more progressive. But the difference between the Senate bill and this bill in progressivity is less than the difference between current law and the Senate bill.

So my colleagues have to decide, those who favor progressivity, whether to risk getting two-thirds of a loaf because we want to make a statement about the full loaf, knowing that we cannot have the full loaf.

Even though we disagree strongly with the President, even though we think the President is wrong, even though we think he ought to sign into law a bill that imposes a third rate of 33 percent on those with very high incomes in our society, even though we feel that very deeply, we know for a fact it will not happen.

The question is, in the real world, do we take a substantial improvement in progressivity even though it is less than we want? That is the question. We cannot guarantee a result out of conference, but we are going to do the best we can to produce the best result.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not have the floor.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired on the amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GORE. Under the prior unanimous-consent request, I believe 1 minute remaining to the proponents has been reserved?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, since I gave what I apologize for as an unnecessarily long answer to the Senator's question—I wanted to lay the picture out in full detail—I want to ask whether we have some time off the bill to permit others to speak on this. In effect, I gave my speech in response to the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The leader can yield himself time on the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not want to yield myself time. I ask the managers if they want to yield to Senators PACKWOOD, BENTSEN, and others who might want to speak on this. I regretfully used up too much time.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GORE. If a point of order is made and this Senator moves to waive the Budget Act for consideration of this amendment, will there be additional time to discuss these matters?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The debate on the motion to proceed on the motion to waive would be limited to 1 hour.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I just checked, just so we will know, I think the majority has about 50 minutes and we have about 3 hours. I want to be fair; I have already told the majority leader and Senator SASSER that I will try to be.

But Senator PACKWOOD desires to speak on this amendment, and there is no time left in opposition. He wants to speak, I assume, in opposition.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I do.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to yield the Senator off the bill to speak in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I would also like 10 minutes to speak in opposition to the amendment off of the bill itself.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will yield that. Following Senator PACKWOOD, Senator BENTSEN will have 10 minutes from the Senator from New Mexico to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Who yields time?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Will the Senator yield 20 minutres?

Mr. DOMENICI. I thought I had. I so yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I want to talk both procedurally and substantively on the amendment, if I might. What the majority leader said procedurally is absolutely correct. I talked with Governor Sununu within the last hour. If the amendment that passed the House becomes the conference report and it is sent to the President, it will be vetoed. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Tennessee becomes the bill, it will be vetoed. The veto will be sustained, and we will not have succeeded in reducing the deficit.

The President will veto the bill; the veto will be sustained; and we will be deadlocked on the budget again. I do not know whether that means we will have the sequester and shut the Government down or not. Or if we are adjourned, whether the President will call us back immediately.

The majority leader is absolutely right as to the effect of adopting the pending amendment. There will be no bill. That is the procedure as to where we are now, and no one should have any mistake in their mind about that.

But I want to talk about the substance, and in particular the taxation of the wealthy, progressivity, the 1986 Tax Reform Act, and the direction we should be going in terms of taxing the wealthy.

It was a short time ago, and I guess our memories are short, when the scandal in this country was not over the tax rates. The tax rates were relatively high. Just 10 years ago, the income tax rate on the rich was 70 percent. But remember the stories. Every year, the Internal Revenue Service put out a press release, going about as follows: The Internal Revenue Service announced last year that 522 Americans made over a half million dollars a year and paid no taxes. Yes, zero taxes. It did not matter that the tax rate was 70 percent. Some wealthy people did not pay any taxes. And recall General Dynamics and General Electric: They made record profits, but paid zero taxes.

So it did not matter that the tax rates were high. The wealthy knew how to escape paying taxes legally. Why? Because Congress was pressured to make exceptions from the rate, so that people would undertake activities thought to be desirous but would not otherwise be undertaken with the rate that high.

Let me explain in a simple illustration how it works. The rate used to be 90 percent. Former President Regan remembers that well; he was in that bracket in World War II when we put the rates at 90 percent.

Let us assume for purposes of illustration a 90-percent tax rate on all income. And assume someone makes $200,000 in a year. From that, deduct some passive losses—I will explain what these are—and various other deductions. Taxable income goes down to $20,000, because all these legally allowed deductions have been deducted from the income. We then levy a 90-percent rate on the $20,000 and we collect $18,000 in taxes on the person's $200,000 income.

However, we discovered that we could cut the tax rates rather dramatically by eliminating many of these deductions and at the same time increase the taxes on the rich. Let us now take the same example. Instead of a 90-percent tax rate, let us say that you eliminated all deductions and you had a rate of 20 percent. That person making $200,000 would now pay $40,000 at a 20 percent tax rate instead of $18,000, because we got rid of the deductions.

So you can raise taxes on the rich either by raising the rates or by eliminating the deductions. The problem with high rates is that they encourage every lobbying group, every special interest group, if you want to call them that—although I do not mean the term pejoratively—to come in and make a plea that their particular special interest is so critical to the Nation that they should be excused from the rates in one form or another.

I mentioned the term passive losses. Passive losses sometimes are called paper losses. Depreciation on real estate would be a passive loss. In 1981, we mistakenly lowered the depreciation on real estate to a 15-year life. This was ridiculous. A building has a much longer life than that. But under the tax law real estate was depreciated as if at the end of 15 years it was worth nothing. This means that one-fifteenth of the cost of real estate could be deducted from your income every year, although you knew the valve of the real estate was not depreciating that much. The result was to allow you to offset these paper losses against what tax lawyers call active income.

Say you are a wealthy doctor in Boston or a wealthy lawyer in New York and you invest in a tax shelter. All you had to do in those days was look at the ads in the Wall Street Journal and invest in a share of a recording contract or a cattle ranch or all kind of things that you knew were going to lose money from the standpoint of paper losses. Then you would offset those paper losses against your actual income that you made practicing medicine or practicing law, and you got your taxable income down to zero. That was the scandal.

So in 1986, in the tax reform bill, we, in essence, got rid of the deduction for paper losses or tax shelters. We put in an iron-clad minimum tax. We had not had an effective minimum tax before. We had a minimum tax on the books, but there were so many exemptions to it that people could still pay nothing. And we eliminated the lower tax rates for capital gains.

But I want to put it again in perspective as to what we were talking about then and now and where the big money was. In 1986, by eliminating the passive loss deduction, in 1986 dollars, we picked up about $36 billion over 5 years. By tightening the minimum tax, individual and corporate, we picked up another $30 billion; $66 billion in all.

Today, when we are arguing about capital gains, depending upon whose figures you believe, it either raises $11 to $12 billion or loses $11 to $12 billion over the next 5 years. But that is no comparison against the $66 billion 5 years ago that we picked up by eliminating the loopholes.

When we debated this at the summit, we decided that we would prefer to go the route of taxing the rich by further eliminating deductions. And in this bill we have very clearly done that. The majority leader made reference to the fact that if you make over $100,000 a year, you lose some of your deductions. This raises about $30 billion and all of it is raised from people who make over $100,000 a year. I do not know if you want to argue if that is rich or not. It seems rich to me. But it all comes from that income group.

So let us not argue about who wants to tax the rich more or less. You can tax them in one of two ways. My hesitancy in taxing them by going up on the rates is that it will inevitably lead to start having exemptions from the rates. We will then restore exemptions from the rates which basically favor people who itemize, who are more likely to be upper income than lower income. And from time to time the arguments will be made that the rich are not paying much because we have exemptions. So we had better raise the rates again. And again we will raise the rates and again we will increase the deductions.

People talk about a simple income tax. If you want to eliminate all itemized—personal—deductions, such as State and local income-tax deductions, charitable deductions, real estate property deductions, you could have a simple tax return that you could fill out on a postcard, staple your check to it, and send it in. You could have a low rate of about 14 percent of incomes starting at $20,000—below that, you would be excused from tax—and going to a top rate of around 22 or 23 percent on incomes above $65,000. You would get no itemized deductions.

Under that system, the rich would pay more in revenues to the Government than they pay today. It is understandable why. About 70 percent of the people do not take itemized deductions now.

Whether we eliminate deductions or do not eliminate deductions to those people it does not make any difference. The people who take deductions are at the higher end of the income scale. And if you eliminate their deductions, they pay more in revenue.

So we could do that if we wanted, and you would never have to hire a CPA to do your income tax. You would simply add up what you made for the year, go down the chart until you come to your income, go across to the percentage, and pay it. Then you would fill out the check, staple it to the postcard, and send it in. So that is why I am opposed to going up on the rates. I am not opposed to taxing the wealthy.

Now, the next issue. Who is wealthy and how much did the wealthy pay. All of us in this Senate know when you speak to any group—I do not care how much money they make—they do not think they are wealthy. So let us just talk about people with incomes of $100,000 or $200,000 without calling them wealthy.

How much should a person who makes total gross income of $200,000 pay to all of the governments in the United States, Federal, State and local? Thirty percent, forty percent, fifty percent, sixty percent? I think that is a fair debate. And I have asked that question to audiences. I have yet to find an audience that thinks anybody should pay more than half of all of the money they make to all of the governments combined. More likely the answer is, well, it is not fair that you should have to pay more than 30 or 40 percent total to all governments.

I will use my own State of Oregon. Oregon has a high State income tax. In Oregon, after you reach $10,000 on a joint return, you pay our top tax rate, which is 9 percent. It is a relatively high rate at a very low threshold. So if you adopt a 33-percent rate for the wealthy in Oregon—again, let us say over $100,000 or $200,000, wherever you want to set it—and you pay Oregon's 9 percent income tax, you are now paying 42 percent of income in taxes, not counting any Social Security taxes, gasoline taxes, real property taxes, or local taxes you may pay. I am not here to defend whether that is enough or not enough. But I find we do not often argue it on that basis, as to how much taxes should be. I am not in that income category. I never expect to be in that income category. I am perfectly happy with my job here, and hope I stay here for the remainder of my career.

I am intrigued with the majority party and the method they want to tax the rich. I have talked with enough of them now to realize this is a political gambit, not a financial gambit. They well know that you can tax the rich without increasing the rates. But in the public's mind, they see that a high tax rate is equated with a tax on the rich. It is a wonderful political maneuver, because it is much more difficult to explain taxing the rich by eliminating deductions than by raising the rate. Even if the rich will not pay the high rate.

So, time and again when we were at the budget summit at Andrews Air Force Base and the further budget negotiations here, the majority party in the House and the Senate kept coming back to the symbolism of the rates. I do not mind arguing the fact and debating how much the rich should pay, but it was the symbolism of the rates that was most important.

A classic example we talked about at Andrews Air Force Base was means testing the Medicare part B premium. There are two parts to Medicare. Part A pays the hospitals and part B pays the doctors, as a general statement.

Part A is financed by a 1.45-percent tax on your wages which is matched by your employer. That just about pays for the hospital part of Medicare. At the rate we are going, that part of Medicare will be bankrupt by the end of the century, but it is in the black now.

Part B is the doctors. This is voluntary. You do not have to take part B coverage. You can opt out of it. But almost 99 percent of the people on Social Security participate in it for a very specific reason. The part B coverage costs, today, approximately $1,200 a year to buy. Social Security participants, if they choose to participate in part B—and I emphasize they do not have to—pay about $300 of that cost and the general taxpayer pays about $900.

This is not funded by your Social Security tax. The general taxpayer puts up about $900 as subsidy. The total cost is approaching $40 billion a year and it is taken from the general taxpayer—every man, woman, and child who works in this country making $15,000, $20,000, $25,000, $30,000 a year. That money is shifted over to pay this roughly $40 billion in subsidies on Medicare part B.

Is there any wonder that 99 percent of the people participate? They don't have to, but do my colleagues think they could go out and buy a policy with comparable coverage for the $300 a year they are currently paying? Of course not.

What we thought of doing at Andrews Air Force Base was to means test the part B premium—that is, the rich would have to pay more for Medicare part B than the poor. One of the ideas we thought of was that if a person has $100,000 of retirement income outside of Social Security—they would have to have about $1 million in assets to generate $100,000 in retirement income—how about making them pay 100 percent of the cost of part B, making them pick up the $900? That is the way we could have taxed the rich.

No, we could not get that. We could not get that because it is not as symbolic as a higher tax rate.

So what we are going to do instead is tax everyone who makes $15,000, $20,000, $25,000, $30,000, $35,000 in this country, roughly $40 billion a year, so that somebody who has $100,000 of retirement income can get a $900-a-year subsidy from everybody else.

Had we said that the part B premium would be a sliding scale up as your income increased, so those at $100,000 retirement income paid 100 percent, we could have picked up between $26 and $30 billion from taxing upper income people. But it is not as symbolic as the rate. Never mind that the rich will not pay higher tax rates.

So this debate on this particular issue is not a debate on taxing the rich. It is a debate as to whether the proponents of this amendment can force this through the Senate, can force it through the conference between the House and the Senate, and can force the President to veto it. Make no mistake, the President will veto it and the veto will be sustained. Then the elections can be held with the Democrats attempting to complain that the Government is in chaos because a sequester has occurred and people have been laid off because the Republicans would not tax the rich.

Only the Democrats in the House made a slip. I do not know if they grasped what they were doing or not, because in their proposal to raise the rates to 33 percent they did one other thing that really reveals what it is they want to do. They delayed for 1 year—and if you delay it for 1 year, you are going to delay it year after year—what we call indexing the tax brackets. We put this indexing in the Tax Code in 1981. What used to happen before 1981, was bracket creep caused by inflation. Inflation in 1979, 1980, 1981 was 10, 11, 12 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, if you made $20,000 one year and there was 10-percent inflation, for your employer to keep you even, he had to pay you $2,000 more, $22,000 total. But if the tax rate on $20,000 was 22 percent and the tax rate on $22,000 was 25 percent, you got pushed up to a higher bracket. You did not have any more money. Inflation put you up there, but you paid more in taxes.

We got rid of that in 1981 by indexing for inflation the income levels for each tax rate. In 1986, we also indexed the $2,000 personal and dependency deductions. This prevents you from being pushed into higher tax brackets and pay more than is fair for you to pay.

The Democratic proposal in the House eliminates that. Here is the interesting hook. For the rich in this country, this type of indexing has already been eliminated. The so-called bubble does this by eliminating the benefit of the 15-percent tax rate and the personal exemptions when someone's income goes over a certain amount in the Tax Code. When your income reaches a certain point, you pay a flat 28 percent and have no dependency deductions.

So what the House did—a 1-year freeze on tax indexing—has no effect on the rich. Their rate brackets and deductions are not indexed. The effect of the bubble is to eliminate them. So what the House effectively did by freezing the indexing is to raise the taxes on everybody in this country, whether they make $10,000, $20,000, $30,000, $40,000, except the rich. And that tells what it is they want to do and it is: Tax and tax; spend and spend; elect and elect; and try to hide it under the rubric of, "we are taxing the rich."

We can tax the rich any way we want. We can raise rates. We can lower deductions. That is not hard to do. But it does not produce enough money. Unfortunately, there are not enough rich in this country. We could confiscate all of their income—take 100 percent of over $100,000 income—and it would not be enough to balance the budget for 1 year. At the end of that I think it is gone because nobody is going to make over $100,000 again if they have to give it all to the Federal Government.

So, in order to get the money the House Democrats wanted to spend, they had to tax everybody and attempt to hide the fact under the rubric of "we are taxing the rich." So, on the substance, that is what this debate is about.

I will conclude by saying on the procedure, if my colleagues want to pass a bill the President will sign, if my colleagues want to reduce this deficit some $42 billion next year, and roughly $500 billion accumulated over the 5 years, they have to turn down the amendment that is presently pending.

Turn the amendment down both on the substance and on the procedure.

If we want to have a serious debate about taxing the rich and how much the rich should pay, let us have it. I am for taxing them more. But let us not do it by raising the rates so we get back into the spiral of, "please give us exemptions from the rates," and then we raise the rates again, and then they say "please give us further exemptions from the rates," and we do it until we are back at 50 percent, and 70 percent, and then 90-percent rates. And the rich end up paying nothing because of the exemptions and deductions. I thank the Chair.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, yesterday I spoke about the need to make the Senate's deficit reduction package more progressive. We have to ask more from those most able to pay. We have to ask more from those who gained the most from the debt-driven policies of the 1980's. I supported Senator CONRAD's amendment last night because it shifted burdens in line with these principles. And I support the amendment of Senators MIKULSKI and GORE for the same reasons.

Like many of my colleagues, I am concerned about the depth of the proposed Medicare cuts. No one in this body would seek to penalize the elderly or support a policy designed to impoverish the frail elderly. We have an obligation, I believe, to do all that we can to assure access to health care and a retirement of dignity and honor.

However, we have numerous obligations, and this legislation is about balancing and fulfilling them. I support the amendment of the Senators from Tennessee and Maryland because I believe it does a better job of balancing than does the Senate package. But I want to make it clear that no package we have seen today does this perfectly, or even near perfectly.

Yesterday, the distinguished President pro tempore spoke eloquently of the responsibilities and obligations facing us. In that speech, he reminded us of those whose needs are not represented in this budget, those who do not have high-powered lobbyists combing the corridors of the Capitol today. He spoke of the future heirs of this Nation, of the children who will inherit this crippling debt if we do not act courageously and responsibly. In a way that only our distinguished colleague from West Virginia can do, he pricked the consciences of all who listened.

I am concerned for our working families, their children, and the children of their children, Mr. President. They will pay the highest price if we fail to reduce the deficit. And to eliminate the deficit, we will have to ask something for everyone. My one concern with the amendment before us now is that it does not ask for anything from Medicare beneficiaries.

Medicare is the second fastest growing piece of our budget, and a full 75-percent of the Part B Program is paid for out of general funds. Medicare, on its own, represents a full 6-percent of the Federal budget. The current $75 deductible is a mere $25 more than it was in 1963 when Medicare was created. It is not unreasonable to seek some savings in the beneficiary side of this program, but the bill before us seeks too much.

The amendment before us, in my view, seeks too little. It is designed to hold Medicare beneficiaries harmless. In the long term, given the rising costs of the program and the range of needs we face, I do not believe that is a viable policy. Everyone has to contribute something to deficit reduction, or no one will be willing to contribute anything. In that context, I would use some of the revenues generated in different ways: certainly to reduce the cuts in Medicare, but also to achieve other important policy goals too.

But while I do not endorse every element of the amendment, I do endorse the notion that we ought not ask Medicare beneficiaries to make a greater sacrifice than we are asking the most fortunate in our society to make. That is a matter of simple fairness. On those grounds, I will support the amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I will vote for this amendment because I believe that the wealthiest members of our society should bear a relatively larger burden of deficit reduction than middle income families. The amendment accomplishes this by adding a 33-percent rate to the individual income tax as well as a 10-percent surtax on taxpayers with incomes above $1 million. It uses the revenues from these changes to restore funds to medicare. This is a fairer outcome than what was produced by the Senate Finance Committee bill, which I do not support.

However, I wish to correct a widespread misperception about the so-called bubble which the distinguished sponsor of this amendment seems to share. Contrary to the statement of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, the bubble is neither unfair nor unprogressive. Certainly it does not reward the rich as too many of my colleagues seem to believe.

The bubble results from phasing out the advantages of the 15-percent rate and the personal exemptions for those in the top income bracket. As a consequence, the wealthiest Americans pay a flat 28-percent rate on every dollar of their income. Taxpayers in the bubble pay less than 28 percent—between 20 percent and 25 percent. The bubble is a consequence of the Congress' desire to reconcile two competing demands: the demand for a rate no higher than 28 percent on the one hand, and the damand for a progressive tax structure on the other. The bubble is the mechanism by which both demands are accommodated.

Nor is the bubble even as anomalous as some of its critics contend. Bubbles occur whenever tax benefits are phased out, yet few complaints are heard. If my colleagues want a bubble to worry about, I would urge them to focus their attention on the bubble at the bottom of the income scale rather than the one at the top. I refer of course to the earned income tax credit. Doubtless many people would be surprised to learn that low-income taxpayers who are eligible for this benefit have a marginal tax rate of 25 percent rather than the nominal 15-percent rate in the Tax Code. The following example illustrates why this is so:

MARGINAL TAX RATE OF INDIVIDUAL IN PHASEOUT RANGE FOR THE EARNED INCOME CREDIT

A tax credit equal to 14% of earned income is available to eligible individuals. In 1989, the maximum credit was $910. If the taxpayer's earned income or adjusted gross income exceeded $10,250, however, the allowable credit was reduced by 10% of such excess. The allowable credit was completely eliminated for a taxpayer with income in excess of $19,340.

Thus, for a taxpayer whose income increased within the phaseout band (from $10,250 to $19,340), the marginal tax rate was more than the nominal 15% income tax bracket. The following example shows the effect of the credit phaseout on the marginal tax rate of a 1989 joint return when earned income of $15,200 is increased by $1,000. The marginal rate becomes 25%.

	Base case	Base case with $1,000 additional income
Earned income	$15,200	$15,200
Additional income		1,000
Adjusted gross income	15,200	16,200
Standard deduction	[5,200]	[5,200]
Personal exemptions (2)	[4,000]	[4,000]
Taxable income	6,000	7,000
Tax at 15 percent	900	1,050
Earned income credit, per IRS tables	[413]	[313]
Net tax liability	487	737

Note.—Marginal tax rate on additional $1,000 of income: ($737 − $487 = $250 ÷ $1,000 = 25%).

Since the EITC is in the code for the express purpose of encouraging low-income families to choose work over welfare, and since there is general agreement that high marginal tax rates, especially for those at the bottom of the income scale, are a disincentive to work, perhaps those of my colleagues who have lavished so much time and attention on the rich people's bubble could deploy their energies to mitigating the poor people's bubble.

In sum, Mr. President, the bubble is essentially irrelevant to the debate over whether wealthy taxpayers should pay a higher rate of tax. That is an entirely separate issue from the progressivity of the existing tax system. I believe that if taxes are to be raised, the rich must pay their fair share and a 33-percent rate is one way of achieving that goal. Provided of course the rate increase on ordinary income is not coupled with a reduction in the rate on capital gains. That combination, which the Senate will have a chance to vote on later today, will not only not enhance the progressivity of the tax system but will actually diminish it. So I would hope that those of my colleagues who care about fairness will resist that amendment when the time comes.

Finally Mr. President, while I support this rate increase amendment, my strong preference would be to close loopholes first and go to rate hikes as a last resort. The best incentive is the lowest tax rate on income, whether it comes from labor or capital. Higher rates just encourage the proliferation of loopholes. That is why we had tax reform: to get rid of the loopholes and the tax shelters that distort investments and enable the wealthy to avoid paying their fair share. Unfortunately the pending legislation moves in the opposite direction. Instead of closing loopholes, it adds them, which is one reason why I will vote against final passage.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the hour is late in this Congress and the Nation has no budget. The massive Federal deficit looms over our economy. Each day brings bad economic news of further weakening. Far away, in the deserts of Arabia, an American expeditionary force of almost a quarter of a million men and women are poised on the brink. This is a time for action, not words.

On October 2, President George Bush spoke to the Nation in a televised address on the perils of the deficit, and the need to pass a deficit reduction package.

He said: "Here at home there's another threat, a cancer gnawing away at our Nation's health. That cancer is the budget deficit."

President Bush is right, the deficit is gnawing away at our economy. The decade of the 1980s saw an explosion of national debt as the Federal Government attempted a massive fiscal experiment with our economy called "supply side economics." This theory made the nonsensical claim that you could reduce revenue, and increase spending, and still balance the budget.

The American people are now getting the bill for this colossal failure. Paying for this massive run up in debt, that is paying the interest on the Treasury bonds, now amounts to the fastest growing part of the Federal budget. In a few years, left unchecked by a deficit reduction package, paying interest on the debt will be the second largest item of the budget.

The deficit is not only a disaster for Government finance, it is a massive transfer of wealth from the American people to foreign interests and the wealthy. It is not the average American small businessman, truck driver, or senior citizen, who purchases the billions of dollars in American treasury bonds issued each month. No, it is the representatives of Japan, Middle East oil barons, and large financial institutions. Because the American Government failed to bring the deficit under control in the 1980s, our children will owe this money into the next century.

The effort to disguise the failure of the Presidency and the Congress to deal with deficit has led to the plundering of the Social Security Trust Fund. There is no pile of hard earned cash sitting in a vault awaiting use for the workers of today, for the retirement tomorrow. In a massive slight of hand, the Federal Government takes the Social Security Trust Fund and uses the funds for daily expenses. The Senior Senator from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, aptly describes this process in one word: embezzlement.

To stop this embezzlement, one of the first bills I introduced was a bill to take the Social Security Trust Fund off budget. I also supported Senator MOYNIHAN'S effort to roll back the Social Security tax increase.

Borrowing from abroad, transferring working peoples' money to financiers, raiding the Social Security Trust Fund, weakening our economy, this and more is the legacy of the 1980's.

Now we are engaged in a great debate on how to reduce this deficit. The year began with President Bush's State of the Union Address in which he said we had made "real progress" on the deficit. Yet if there was a failure of leadership at the start of the year, by mid year the crushing reality of the deficit had a sobering effect on all but the most obstinate.

The economic statistics pointing to economic weakening and recession appeared to becoming a reality. Whole regions of America slipped into recession. In once vibrant New England, the economy plunged into recession, with housing values falling so far that a whole new sector of the financial industry was imperiled.

No longer able to ignore the growing signs of economic peril, President Bush and the congressional leadership came together at the budget summit.

Hindsight, always preferable, may indicate that putting together a deficit reduction package in a closed door summit may not be the best way to educate the public about the tough issues involved. There are those who hold that view now, but it should be pointed out, that the chorus of voices now criticizing the summit process were virtually silent when the summit was convened.

The budget summit produced a compromise, that reached the important goal of $500 billion deficit reduction over 5 years, with $40 billion in deficit reduction in the first year.

There is much to criticize in the summit agreement. I think the summit agreement did not spread the burden of deficit reduction fairly, but held those making more than $200,000 relatively harmless compared to the middle class. The original budget summit agreement was particularly hard on the elderly, forcing increases in the Medicare premium and raising the deductible. Those living in the Western United States were hurt by the heavy reliance on gasoline taxes to raise revenue.

By protecting those who are wealthy, earning more than $200,000 a year, the budget summit agreement failed the important test of spreading the burden of deficit reduction to everyone.

There is now before the Senate, the Gore-Mikulski amendment which does a much better job of spreading the burden of deficit reduction. Under this amendment, the elderly are spared the increase in Medicare premiums and increased deductibles. Moreover the amendment reduces the gasoline tax increase, not as much as I would like, but it is reduced. An additional benefit of the Gore-Mikulski amendment, is that it does not delay the indexing of income taxes next year.

Under this plan the wealthy will pay more, so that the middle class and the elderly do not have to pay the wealthy's share of the tax bill.

This is my preference, along with increased restraint on Federal spending. Yet, this may fail, for a variety of reasons.

Though our individual preferences for deficit reduction may fail, we should keep our eye on the goal, not just how we reach the goal. If every Senator in this chamber voted only for the package he preferred, and not for a compromise, we would doom any effort to reduce the defict.

President Bush told the Nation at the beginning of this month: "If we fail to enact this agreement, our economy will falter, markets may tumble, and recession will follow."

Tumbling markets, a faltering economy and recession is what is at stake, and here is where we find out who really wants to govern America rather than hold office. We are all against the deficit, and are willing to make speeches in a vain attempt to talk the deficit away. Unfortunately, deficits are invulnerable to the medicine of speeches by politicians. Now is the time for some leadership, whatever the individual political risk. A deficit reduction package should pass the Congress and be sent to the President's desk for signature.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I believe that the reconciliation bill asks too much of middle income taxpayers, who are having a hard time making ends meet, at the same time that it does not ask enough of the wealthiest members of our society, who benefited the most from the decade of the 1980's. That is why I oppose the gasoline tax increase in this bill. It is the wrong tax at the wrong time.

The Gore-Mikulski amendment would improve the reconciliation bill by eliminating the additional burdens that are placed on Medicare recipients by the provisions in this bill. This amendment would also "burst the income tax bubble" so that the highest income taxpayers would pay the highest marginal income tax rate. I have long supported doing that. Fundamental fairness requires no less.

However, the Gore-Mikulski amendment includes a 6-cent gasoline tax increase. Although this is less than the amount in the reconciliation bill, it is still, even at 6 cents, the wrong tax at the wrong time. That is why I will vote against the Gore-Mikulski amendment. However, I will support the amendment which Senator HARKIN intends to offer to raise the taxes on those with incomes over $1 million and reduce the Medicare cuts in this bill.

Mr. BENTSEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURDICK). The Senator from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, what we are trying to do is take care of a decade of indulgence, a decade when we wrote $150 billion and more in hot checks year after year, piling on the debt for future generations. But now those hot checks are coming due. I can recall seeing a kid with a T-shirt that said, "How can I be broke? I still have checks." That has been the attitude that we have seen for a dozen years now.

Last year, I walked out of the budget summit meeting and said there was too much blue smoke and mirrors, too much creative accounting; that it would not work. Time has proven that right. We did not have too much trouble putting together a solution last time because the agreement did not call for a credible cut.

It was tough this time putting the budget together because we have done a credible cut. We are talking about some $40 billion in the first year. We are talking about $500 billion over the next 5 years. We have had 5 months of negotiation in the budget summit, and 11 days of intensive negotiation in the Finance Committee between Republicans and Democrats.

I went down and visited with the President to talk to him about a 33-percent rate. We had some indecision in the White House for a while as to whether he would or whether he would not support that proposal, depending on which day. We restructured the plan to try to accommodate for that.

Do I think the wealthy should pay more in this country? Yes, I do. I watched what happened when we looked at the last decade as to who gained income and who did not. I looked at the average family, middle-income family from the 40-percent quintile to the 60-percent quintile. Average family incomes increased by 3 percent. The top six-tenths of 1 percent increased by 87 percent. Ability to share the burden, and capability of paying taxes has to be a part of the consideration.

I think we ought to break the bubble. I think the top rate ought to be 33 percent. I think that is the way to address the problem, but the President of the United States says he will not sign such legislation. My good friend, the ranking member of the committee, has said that just within the last few hours, he has been told that the President would veto such legislation.

This is a compromise. So we came through the back door to try to see that those who are best able to share this burden of cutting this deficit pay their fair share. I must say I think most of them are ready to and expect to.

So we took itemized deductions and wiped those out to the extent they exceed 5 percent of adjusted gross income for those people over $100,000. We brought together a package that raises some $29 billion with that proposal. Then we took the health insurance payroll tax, which is at a 1.45-percent rate on the first $50,000 or so of income. I originally proposed raising that cap to $125,000. We finally compromised at $89,000, a substantial increase, and picked up some $19 billion in that process. Then we put a tax on luxury goods. When we finished, we had an increase of over $50 billion that hit those who could best afford it in this country.

It is a compromise, trying to put a package together. Here we have had almost 16 hours of debate. It is not a perfect bill, but a bill I think that will do the job and increase the progressivity of our tax system.

As I look at what we brought out of the summit, with those with the lowest income having an increase in taxes of some 7 percent, and those at the top having an increase in their taxes of 1.7 percent, I note that that is not the case with the one we brought out of the Finance Committee. We had 15 out of 20 members of that committee, bipartisan, a majority of both sides, vote for this compromise. But it has progressivity. Instead of a 1.7-percent increase for those who are the wealthiest, it is now 3.7 percent. Instead of a 7-percent increase on the poorest, it is zero. They are held harmless. Those are the positive things that have been accomplished with this package.

We are up against tight deadlines. What we have tried to do is put together a package the President would sign. We have substantial divergence from what has come out of the House, and we will go into conference and, obviously, we will accommodate to each side to a degree. There will be give and take, and we will end up with something that is in between these two pieces of legislation. It will not be easy to settle those differences in the time period that we have left.

We can go on making partisan points against each other; Republicans against Democrats and Democrats against Republicans. But I must tell my colleagues I think the American people are fed up with it. They want us to put the country first above that partisanship and to bring out a package that is equitable and will start turning this deficit around.

We are playing a high-stakes game if we have a veto; the President will be playing one and so will the Congress. We will have to turn the Government off again or resort to sequester with all the problems that go with it. It is a high-stakes game because the financial markets of the world will decide we cannot handle our economy; that we have lost control, that the democratic process in this country is not working any more; that we are in political paralysis and in economic chaos.

How will those other countries react to it? We have seen a precipitous drop in Japan's stock market and some of their banks are having serious problems. With the interest rates in Japan escalating and the change in the prime, they say, "Maybe we better invest at home. We have seen a lessening of the value of the dollar. As we buy the securities of America, we have seen the value of those go down as fast as the interest rates go up, so it is a bad buy to us."

Or we turn to the West Germans, who have just taken in East Germany. They are going to spend billions and billions of dollars trying to bring up the standard of living there to that of West Germany. They will say, "We have a need for our capital here. We have invested in those U.S. dollars and we have seen them depreciate as related to the mark; there is more stability here at home." We want to establish beachheads in those Eastern European countries. Now is the time to invest there. And then there's Europe, EC '92; how do you compete for those funds?

The only way we can compete for capital is if we have a serious credible cut in this deficit. We do it now. We do not go through another veto, and we do not turn off the Government again, and we do not go to sequester. When we get into one of this kind of negotiation, we cannot operate in an ivory tower; we do not get perfect equity. None of us gets to write his own version of this piece of legislation. It is the compromise of a democratic system.

I think the time has come to pull this thing together. I like many of the things in the piece of legislation of my friend from Tennessee, and I have argued for them, talked about them and supported them, and I would like to do the things on Medicare.

When we started out at Andrews, do my colleagues know what they were arguing for? $117 billion worth of cuts in Medicare. Finally we agreed on $60 billion. Then in the committee we cut it back to $50 billion. One of the things the Senator has in his proposal is not to take the deductible to $150. The deductible is $75. It was $50 in 1965 when it was put in. But what we are talking about here is suddenly doubling it to $150 over a year.

May I have 3 more minutes on the bill?

Mr. DOMENICI. Three additional minutes.

Mr. BENTSEN. So, we turned around and said for the near-poor, for those who are going to have a tough time making the $150 deductible, we will expand the assistance already provided to them to help pay for it out of Medicaid. At the present time we have about 4 million low-income beneficiaries for whom Medicaid covers the Medicare premiums, deductibles, and cost sharing, and this bill will expand that number by some 700,000.

So my friends, this is a compromise piece of legislation, but one that increases progressivity substantially above what came out of the summit and one which does not have some of the problems that we have seen in the House piece of legislation. Let us go to conference and pick the best of each bill and put together a package that we think Democrats and Republicans can get behind, and let us get control of the economic destiny of this country again.

I yield.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. BENTSEN. I could yield for a question if I have any time left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. METZENBAUM. We appreciate all the Senator has said, but we are concerned as to what is going to happen in the conference. This amendment moves in the direction we are concerned about. We know the Senator has been in negotiations. Frankly, we have not heard the Senator indicate whether or not he is prepared to move forward on progressivity, whether or not it will move more toward the House bill, and that is concerning us.

Mr. BENTSEN. Let me say to my good friend from Ohio that I made it very clear that we would move and try to pick the best of each, and that there would be a compromise between us, and that has to mean increased progressivity as far as I am concerned.

Now, as to how far one goes, how can you say ahead of a negotiation? There is no way we can do that. I have been in many negotiations with the Ways and Means Committee in the House and they are tough negotiations, but reaching that kind of compromise will be the objective.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it will be my intention, if a point of order is made, to move to waive the Budget Act for consideration of this amendment. It will not be my intention nor that of my cosponsor, to use all of the time allotted under that procedure. We will have some brief statements in the nature of closing statements, but we will not attempt to use the entire time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time has expired on the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, before I yield time off the bill, off this side, I want to ask my friend from Tennessee, I am getting a lot of inquiries from Senators about how much time remains on the overall process, and we are down into a couple hours, a little more than that. We have a lot of things that we are going to try to do and a lot of people to accommodate.

I wonder if the Senator is willing now to agree that there would be 10 minutes on a side on the motion that he will make once I make a point of order.

Mr. GORE. If the Senator will yield, we have had several requests for time. We would be prepared to agree to 15 minutes on a side.

Mr. DOMENICI. I make such a request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, pursuant to section 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act, I raise a point of order that the pending amendment is not germane.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I move to waive the Budget Act for consideration of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive.

Who yields time?

Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if we might get the yeas and nays, I ask my friend from Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. BRYAN] be added as an original cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I would like to talk right off the bat about the debate we have just heard. I was extremely proud of the statement made by my senior colleague from Tennessee, Senator SASSER. In his generous comments about the substance of the amendment, he also exercised leadership in his role as chairman of the Budget Committee in explaining the reasons why he and the majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, and the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator BENTSEN, who made a fine statement on his own behalf, all three are obligated by virtue of their roles to oppose the amendment, even though they agree with the substance of it. I understand that. I am proud of their leadership roles, especially that of my colleague from Tennessee. I want to acknowledge that.

I would also like to reiterate something the majority leader referred to in his statement, and that is he has played the lead role in attempting to inject more progressivity by virtue of a 33-percent rate and the elimination of the bubble. I acknowledged that earlier. All of us in this body know that.

I would like to take issue with one statement he made. He has made the statement when I felt it was valid. But he said on this occasion the choice is between making a statement or making a law.

Mr. President, my cosponsor and I are participating in the process by which a law is going to be made. Laws are not made only by a few leaders, the majority leader, the Republican leader, negotiating an agreement and then the rest of us sit here and either vote yes or no. Laws are made in the process this body is very familiar with, and that process in this case will include a conference committee. We are participating in that process.

I hope this amendment passes. It will require 60 votes to pass because it requires 60 votes to waive the point of order that was just made. If 60 Members of this body vote in favor of this amendment, that in itself will be a strong message to the conference committee and to the President that the outcome has to be more progressive. Then the same negotiation with the President will take place that is going to take place in any event except the Congress will have a stronger hand.

Now, what if 51 Members of this body vote in favor of our amendment?

In this procedural situation 51 votes will not be enough to pass the amendment over the point of order. Mr. President, if 51 Members vote for this amendment, it will affect the process by which this law is being made, and it will serve notice to the conference committee and to the President that we want a more progressive outcome.

We have heard on numerous occasions here that the President will veto anything with a 33-percent rate. I have not heard the President say that. I have heard the President make contradictory statements, one of which was he will veto the House bill. I heard that. This is not the House bill. I heard him complain about suspending indexing. This amendment does not suspend indexing.

I heard him say to a distinguished Member of the other body, a Republican, who visited him at 10 o'clock in the morning one day last week, that he would accept a 33-percent rate. Then, a few hours later, after visiting with a few distinguished Members of this body from the Republican side, he had his press spokesman issue a statement that directly contradicted his earlier endorsement of the 33-percent rate. We have, in other words, had some recent evidence that President Bush is capable of changing his mind about the kind of outcome he will deem acceptable.

Mr. President, a few Saturdays ago I had an early morning breakfast in my home town of Carthage, TN.

Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DODD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. I had breakfast with the members of the 1175th quartermasters unit, men and women who had just been called up to go to Saudi Arabia and participate in the deployment of our forces there. I supported the President in his decisions on that matter. But here we stand with 200,000 soldiers in the deserts of Saudi Arabia prepared to make sacrifices in behalf of our country. The senior citizens here at home are being asked to make sacrifices of a different sort. Motorists who pay gasoline taxes are being asked to make sacrifices of a different sort. I am prepared to vote for those.

But the President is going to tell us that it is too much of a sacrifice for those who are the best off in our society to pay a 33-percent tax rate, the same marginal tax rate paid by those who make just less than $200,000 a year? I cannot believe that, Mr. President.

The statement was made that this is a political statement. It is not intended as a political statement. It is intended to change the law and, failing that, to influence the conference committee to give us a final bill that is more progressive and more fair. That will involve negotiations with the President. But I believe very deeply that those negotiations will be more successful in the event the President understands the strong feelings on this matter.

Mr. President, in conclusion, this amendment keeps our commitment to seniors and meets our responsibility to control the deficit. It says very clearly that the people who can least afford it will not be forced to pay the tab. It says we are not going to ask seniors to pick up the tab after the administration chose the restaurant.

Mr. President, I yield to my distinguished cosponsor of this amendment, my colleague and friend of long standing, the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, as we wrap up this debate, I just want to say this. I am here today to speak for the middle class. In speaking for the middle class, they have no more to give, no more to give. They are either tuition poor, or they are mortgage poor; or they are poor because they do not have a long-term care policy, and they are taking care of their mothers and fathers.

They have no more to give because they pay high property taxes, they pay high health insurance, and they pay for their car insurance. When they get to their bottom line, they have no more to give.

We have two parents working now because they need to out of economic desperation. Our middle class is shrinking.

Mr. President, regardless of what we do on this amendment, all subsequent amendments and so on, let us remember the middle class in this country has no more to give. The poor have nothing to give. So let us go and get it from those who have it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GORE. How much time remains, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes and 11 seconds. The opposition has 15 minutes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have two additional requests for time but I would prefer to have a back and forth if there are speakers on the other side.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes and 11 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield all of my time in opposition other than 5 minutes. I reserve 5 minutes. I yield the rest.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I hoped I could get more time. I will seek more time later today. However, this Senator has to be chairing a conference committee on labor, health, human services and education appropriations. At some point later today I hope to get the floor to describe an amendment that I will be offering if the Gore-Mikulski amendment does not pass.

I want to make it clear that I support the Gore-Mikulski amendment because it moves this country in the right direction. The distinguished Senator from Maryland says it moves us toward fairness, but just in case, I will have an amendment later that will do much the same as what the Gore-Mikulski amendment does; it will simply impose a surtax of 18 percent on the income tax paid on taxable income over $1 million a year. That would move that top rate up to 33 percent for people making over $1 million a year. Then it would completely take out the increase in the part B deduction.

So, Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee for giving me this time. I want to say that, as he said earlier, we have seen the President change his course of direction innumerable times. Now I believe is the time for us to set the President straight on the course of making the superrich in this country pay their fair share, ease the burden on the middle class, and do not take it out of the hides of our elderly, the people who can least afford it, those who are living on Social Security, the average one getting $560 a month. They have to pay increased gasoline taxes too. They have to pay higher heating bills this winter. They have to pay more for their food and everything else.

The increase in the part B deductible represents a cut of over one-half of their increased cost-of-living adjustment under Social Security. I would like to know how many Senators here would like to have their pay increases coming down the pike cut in half. Well, that is what we are asking the elderly to do. That is why I am supporting the Gore amendment, because we are asking those who can least afford it to pay for the mess left by the rich who had the party in the 1980's.

I say let us make the rich pay for their own party they had during the last decade.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield 1 minute?

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Delaware had earlier requested 2 minutes. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will be necessarily brief. A lot of us end up supporting the same measure sometimes for different reasons. I do not think this has much to do with soaking the rich. Nor do I think it has to do with how we would feel about whether or not a pay increase which is coming down the pike is cut in half. From this Senator's perspective, it has nothing to do with that.

It has to do with the fact that we have a lousy job to do. It seems to me that there are two issues. First, how are we going to raise half a trillion dollars over the next 5 years in order to reduce the deficit, to allow the economy not to go into a complete nosedive, and to have growth in the economy? Second, how you do it with some equity and fairness. I cosponsored this amendment because it does just that. There is still a hit on the Medicare sector of $32.1 billion. It is not from the elderly directly, but from benefit providers. There is still a 6 cents per gallon gasoline tax increase in here. And it leaves the overall goal of $500 billion in deficit reduction over 5 years unchanged.

What it does do, Mr. President, is bring some equity back into the process. Senator MIKULSKI said it well, in my view: Middle-income taxpayers have had it. They are bound by debt, whether it is tuition or mortgages or auto insurance or health insurance. They cannot give any more.

So we are not asking to soak anybody. All we are asking in here is to see to it that people who make joint incomes over about $185,000 pay the same marginal rate as those who make under $185,000. It's that simple. Today, you make $175,000 joint income, you pay the marginal rate of 33 percent. But if you make $250,000, you pay at a marginal rate of 28 percent. For the sake of fairness, the higher income person should not be paying a lower rate.

Last, this amendment has a surtax on millionaires. I support this. And I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an article by Lester Thurow which I believe supports my view in favor of a more equitable solution to the deficit problem.

There being no objection, the article ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BIG LIE THAT CAUSED THE BUDGET CATASTROPHE

(By Lester C. Thurow)

In 1980 the American electorate embarked on a grand experiment—supply-side economics. Ten years later, that experiment continues to warp the political process. Its enduring influence explains why Congress and President Bush found it so difficult to reach any budget agreement at all; why the failed agreement was so peculiarly shaped; and why the public, nourished on a decade of false promises, seems unwilling to make even modest sacrifices to assure the nation's economic future.

In the current economic climate almost any solid deficit-reduction package would be welcome. Still it is remarkable that the initial deal struck last week would aggravate the very features of the current tax system that seemed most generally objectionable to tax experts and the public: Its "small business growth incentives" would offer new tax dodges to the wealthy—who had supposedly traded away their shelters for the much lower tax rates provided by the 1986 tax reform; its tax-deduction limit would worsen, rather than eliminate, the disreputable "bubble" feature which grants the very, very rich lower marginal income tax rates, and hence lower capital-gains tax rates than those faced by the merely well-to-do taxpayers; and it would increase the relative tax burden borne by low- and moderate-income taxpayers. All this in a package endorsed by Democratic leaders who claimed to have tax fairness as their top concern.

What explains the persistence of supply-side mythology? From where comes its power to so constrain American politics?

When America first jumped on the supply-side bandwagon, people felt, rightly, that the economic performance of the 1970s was unacceptable. The political and military affronts in Tehran were compounded by the vision of a chained economic giant wilting in the face of Japanese and German competition.

A GNP growth rate of 2.8 percent was unacceptable when compared with the 4.1 percent growth rate of the 1960s. That dismal record was compounded by an even more important measure of economic performance, productivity growth—the rate at which a nation is becoming more efficient and hence more affluent. The 1960s' growth rate of 2.9 percent had fallen to only 1.4 percent in the 1970s. Such a decline meant that instead of doubling every 24 years, America's standard of living would take 50 years to double—each generation could no longer expect to have a standard of living twice that of its parents. Facing these facts Americans were willing to try something new and different.

Supply-side economics, as enunciated by President Reagan and later embraced by Bush, promised that lower taxes on upper income groups would stimulate savings and hence permit more investment—the argument used by Bush to advance his capital-gains tax cut proposals in the recent budget summit. Higher investment would lead to higher growth. In addition to restoring economic vigor and rebuilding international competitiveness, higher growth would accomplish two other important objectives—without asking for painful sacrifice from anybody.

First, with a larger economy, government tax revenue could go up even though tax rates had been reduced. In 1981 Reagan promised that the federal budget would be balanced in 1985 without having to make significant spending reductions. Second, although most of the tax cuts would go to high-income individuals (it was they who had the capacity to save more), higher growth would lead to better paying jobs for middle- and low-income Americans. In the short run their total tax rates would go up—for 80 percent of the population the extra payroll taxes they would be asked to pay to fund Social Security would be larger than the income tax cuts they would get. But with higher earnings they would in the end benefit. All gain, no pain.

Politically supply-side economics delivered the goods—three presidential elections have been won using it—but economically it has not delivered on any of its promises.

Where higher GNP growth was promised, lower growth was delivered—2.6 percent over the decade of the 1980s. In 1990 the economy is stalled on the lip of a recession, just where it was in 1980. Because of the debt and banking problems built up during the 1980s, any recession in the 1990s will produce levels of bankruptcy not seen since the Great Depression. Even without a recession, middle-class wealth is melting away as housing prices fall in much of the nation in reaction to the debt excesses of the 1980s.

Instead of growing faster, productivity slowed down—1.2 percent during the 1980s. In 1989 productivity actually declined. There is only darkness visible at the end of the productivity tunnel.

Savings rates plunged. In the last four years of the 1970s, American families saved 7 percent of their disposable income; in the last four years of the 1980s, they saved only 4 percent. The rich saved nothing from their tax cuts. In contrast, the Japanese saved 15.7 percent of their income in the past 12 months.

If total national savings (a measure that includes corporate savings and government dissavings) is examined, savings fell from 17.4 percent of GNP in the last four years of the 1970s to 11.3 percent of GNP in the last four years of the 1980s. As a result, in 1989 Japanese investments in plant and equipment per worker were three times as large as those in the United States.

At the beginning of the decade the United States had a small surplus in its trading accounts ($1.5 billion in 1980 and $8.2 billion in 1981). At the end of the decade it recorded a current-account deficit of $129 billion in 1988 and $110 billion in 1989. What was a competitive problem at the beginning of the decade was a competitive disaster at the end of the decade.

In 1981 the United States was the world's largest creditor nation with net assets totaling $141 billion. Every year the rest of the world paid interest, dividends, and profit to Americans. By 1989 the United States had become the world's largest net debtor nation with debts totaling $620 billion. Where Americans used to get, they now give.

The federal deficit did not, of course, vanish in 1985. In the year ahead, the deficit is estimated to be $254 billion and rising if last week's deficit reduction proposals are passed by Congress ($294 billion if they are not) and over $300 billion if the Social Security surpluses are excluded from the totals, as they ought to be. A budget summit that reduces the deficit by $40 billion is essentially the equivalent of Nero fiddling while Rome burns. The difference is that Nero wanted to burn Rome so that he could rebuild it—the Roman Colosseum was his. Unfortunately there is no evidence that the current fiddlers have any real rebuilding in mind.

President Bush is fond of saying that "we have more will than wallet." He has it exactly backwards. Our GNP after correcting for inflation is four times as large as it was in 1947 when we were paying to rebuild the world after World War II. Our per capita GNP is 2.3 times as large. We can afford to do what must be done abroad; we can afford to do what must be done at home.

America is not an over-taxed country. In 1989, Americans paid fewer taxes as a percentage of GNP (about 30 percent) than the citizens in any other industrial country. Taxpayers in 22 industrial countries, including the Japanese and the Germans, paid more. Moreover, there are places where the budget can be cut without harm. Based on the performance of other countries (far lower spending levels: for better performances when it comes to health and longevity), substantially less could be spent on health care if the system were fundamentally reorganized. The events in Eastern Europe mean that big defense cuts can occur while still maintaining our ability to fight wars in the Third World. America has more than 2 million troops; fewer than 200,000 are in the Middle East.

The American problem is will—not wallet. In a democracy, will depends upon leadership and in the United States that means presidential leadership. It isn't leadership to spend months arguing that a capital-gains tax cut is the most important issue facing the American economy.

Whatever one believes about the growth-enhancing aspects of a capital-gains tax cut—or other "tax incentives"—everyone agrees that they leave more after-tax income in the hands of the wealthiest. In the last decade America has already had a heavy dose of that kind of "sacrifice."

Recently the U.S. Census Bureau confirmed that inequality in the distribution of income had increased substantially in the last decade. Every statistic points in the same direction. In the decade of the 1980s, the average real income of the top 5 percent of the population rose from $120,253 to $148,438. At the same time the average real income of the poorest 20 percent fell from $9,990 to $9,431. After-tax measure of income would report an even wider gap. As the income share of the top 20 percent rose in the 1980s, the income share of each of the bottom four quintiles was falling—the lower the quintile the bigger the decline. Despite a 21-percent rise in the real per capita GNP, the average real hourly wages of rank-and-file workers fell 5 percent. Those promised good jobs for middle- and low-income Americans did not appear.

If the income share of the rich is rising at the expense of the rest of the population (it is), if government is directly altering its policies to augment the income share of the rich (it has), if the campaign contributions of special interests increasingly dominate the political process (they do), if fewer and fewer middle- and lower-income individuals vote (it's happening), America is, under the cover of supply-side economics, rapidly moving towards becoming (dare we say it openly?) a plutocracy.

Unfortunately history tells us that as a social and governmental system, plutocracy does not for long work.

Mr. BIDEN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want Senators who have not yet had an opportunity to present their amendments to know that from the best I can tell, there are about 40 minutes remaining on the majority side on the whole bill and about 2 hours and 10 minutes remaining on the Republican side on the whole bill.

The only thing that does not count is the time that we take to vote. Everything else counts, including quorum calls. So I would very much appreciate it, speaking only for myself, if those who follow with amendments would agree to as short a time as is humanly possible so we can accommodate as many Senators as possible in this timeframe.

I yield the remainder of my 5 minutes to the distinguished Republican whip, the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before we go to that just for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to.

Mr. CONRAD. The question will be directed to the two bill managers. Is there any list formulated on amendments remaining? I have an amendment, and I would be willing to take a very short time agreement, 15 minutes equally divided, something like that, and be part of an attempt to expedite this.

Mr. SASSER. I say to our friend from North Dakota that there is no list, although there are, as I understand it, approximately 15 amendments that may not still be pending. I am not sure how many of those our colleagues will seek to call up.

There is an order entered now to take up the Nunn-Boren amendment following the disposition of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee and the distinguished Senator from Maryland. But there is no list, per se.

Mr. CONRAD. Would it be possible to make a unanimous-consent request that the Conrad amendment follow the Nunn-Boren amendment, with a very tight time agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. If we could save time, if we could, I might say to my good friend, there are a number of Senators who have had no amendments. The distinguished Senator has had a very lengthy opportunity to address his most significant amendment.

We will try our best on our side to come up with a list while the Nunn amendment is going. Let me say, however, I greatly appreciate the Senator's willingness to significantly reduce the time, and I thank him for that and hope I can accommodate them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator has 22 minutes remaining on the time.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the last colloquy is part of that, it should not be.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield what I have remaining off the bill sufficient to give the Senator from Wyoming 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wyoming is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the action of the Senator from New Mexico. I have been listening with fascination to this debate. I thought, of course—that is, if you are on the side of the angeles—that Senator PACKWOOD said things that were just beautifully appropriate.

It is fascinating to hear the horror stories of how Ronald Reagan and George Bush got us here. Do you really believe the American people think that? They do not at all. The reason they do not think that is for a very simple reason: Because the Congress was largely controlled by the Democrats during the years when that happened. The Republicans had a brief swing at it, and it was a lot of fun for a while, trying to be responsible. You quickly learn the people who are responsible here and those who do the heavy lifting and those who are always ready to do the long haul.

So this did not happen to us by the hand of Presidents. It happened right here in this Chamber. It happened by a Democrat-controlled Congress. That is how it happened. People are going to figure that out. It is good that all of this stuff came up with 3 weeks to go before the election—because we will have the time to tell the honest story by then.

I ask you to go look at the original debate on the Tax Reform Act in the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate in 1986. It was a dazzler, and Democrat after Democrat rose at that time and said: "This is the greatest tax reform package we have ever had; we finally stuck it to the rich; and we also took good care of the middle class". And now this is the same thing they are talking about today, and this is the same Tax Reform Act. Come on. Read what they said about this package. Go read it.

Then here's another terrible distortion as floated in the great world of Washington—I do not know how much we will hear about Medicare anymore, because in the great world of Washingtonese, what we really did to Medicare part B is give it an 11½ percent increase and in our budget effort we cut it back to only a 10-percent increase. And that is called a cut in Washingtonese. Come on.

Let me tell you, Medicare part B premium is going up $3.90 a month. And if we had not done anything at all, it would still go up $3 a month. If you want to really help "old Joe Six-Pack"—I hope somebody can answer this for me—how do you think Joe Six-Pack feels about paying 75 percent of the premium on part B, and yet he does not get a single nickel's worth of benefits? Go ask him that; because only 25 percent of the entire premium on part B is paid by the beneficiary of the services. The taxpayer paying 75 percent of the premium gets no benefit whatsoever. Fair?

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMPSON. I have only 5 minutes; I will soon conclude.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Did the Senator ask the question?

Mr. SIMPSON. The Senator will have the opportunity to respond after I conclude.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I know how Joe Six-Pack feels.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is fine; we both like good engagement. We both give as good as we get in here. Let us review the issue of Joe Six-Pack, when the lady from Maryland may have the time remaining. I only have 5 minutes.

May I inform you all again here is what is really occurring. The beneficiary, under part B premium, is paying the sum of 25 percent, and the remaining 75 percent of that premium is being paid solely by the average taxpayer in America and he or she are not getting one single thing out of what they pay for part B premiums.

And that is the way it is, folks, whether it is in a bar in Baltimore or in the Long Horn Saloon in Meeteetse. That is the way it is. You cannot do this job with demagoguery. You have to go cast tougher votes.

Here we are now 2½ weeks from the election. I am very pleased about that because in 2½ weeks, we will be able to explain to the American people that the mysterious "bubble" was put in the Tax Reform Act by some thoughtful Democrats. We will explain to them that that tax reform bill was done by some thoughtful Democrats and Republicans and it was done to seal loopholes of the rich and to make all corporations pay their taxes. That is what we said we did.

And then to sit here and listen to the dismantling of it all in this extraordinary way, and also to watch the indexing disappear that takes place in the House proposal, and it is elimination of indexing that is tearing Joe Six-Pack up. He cannot index anymore, and for 1 solid year he then is going to lose about 31 billion bucks. I would love to hear the Democrats' explanation of that one. We will have 2½ weeks out on the road to discuss it.

I guess what it really comes down to is this. If you are going to just talk the talk and never walk the walk, then put part of your own pay raise on the table. Where is your cut? I would like to see somebody step up to the plate. I happen to have personnally done that. I have turned back 20 grand this year. So let us hear the cheers over there from somebody on that other side of the aisle. Put your money where your mouth is.

And if you really believe in this game, then get in there and cut your own salary. I have done that now for 2½ years. I mail a yearly check back to the U.S. Treasury. Let us hear from the advocates about that one. That is called toadying up to the bar and laying your money on the line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 33 seconds remaining.

Mr. GORE. I yield my remaining time to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, 535 Members, were elected on their own to the Congress of the United States. For 2 years now all we have heard is, "If you do not do this, I will veto the bill." Whether it had to do with child care or minimum wage or civil rights or senior citizens or clean air or balancing the budget by taxing the wealthy, the President is telling the Congress how we have to act.

I believe this bill has something implicit in it, that it is time for us to stand up and send the President a bill that we think is right and let him do anything he wants with it. I am sick and tired of hearing the President every night on TV telling the people of this country, "If they do not do it my way, I am going to veto it." Let him veto it. I think the people understand what the issues are all about. He wants to protect the wealthy, and the rest of us would like to come up with a decent, balanced-budget bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All times has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act for consideration of amendment No. 3027, offered by the junior Senator from Tennessee. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 45, nays 55—as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 45; the nays are 55. Three-fifths of the Senators present and voting having voted in the negative, the motion to waive the Budget Act is rejected.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected.

Mr. GORE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Georgia is recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, what is the time allocated on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has 60 minutes equally divided.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I yield so much time as my colleague from Oklahoma needs to present the amendment on behalf of himself, myself, and others. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator from Oklahoma be willing to yield to me for the purpose of raising a point of order on an extraneous matter in my own bill? I will be raising a point of order to knock out a portion of the bill that is in the budget bill. It is noncontroversial. I think everybody is in agreement.

Mr. BOREN. Let me inquire.

Mr. METZENBAUM. It will take 2 minutes.

Mr. BOREN. Has this request been cleared with the leadership?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I do not think there is any objection with the leadership.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I object. We are trying to work it out. I do agree he has a proper point of order, but we are trying to work with other Senators on the same issue. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, I do not believe it is in order for him to raise the point of order now.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I asked unanimous consent.

Mr. DOMENICI. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 10 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3028

Mr. BOREN. On behalf of myself, Senator NUNN of Georgia, Senator LIEBERMAN of Connecticut, and GRAHAM of Florida, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], for himself, Mr. NUNN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. GRAHAM, proposes an amendment numbered 3028.

At the end of title VII, insert:

SEC. . SENSE OF SENATE WITH RESPECT TO GROWTH AND SAVINGS INCENTIVES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) the President and Congressional leaders have worked diligently to fashion a broad bipartisan budget;

(2) any budget package should pass the following three tests to truly serve the national interest:

(A) first, it must be fair—the heaviest burden should not be placed on those least able to bear it;

(B) second, it should help rebuild our economic strength and make us better able to compete in world markets so that we will have jobs for the next generation of Americans; and

(C) third, it should provide savings and investment incentives to the middle income people of this country—those who work on our farms and in our factories, and create our small businesses; for they are the backbone of America.

(b) SENSE OF SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate conferees should work towards a final budget package that meets these three important tests by increasing the tax rate on incomes above $200,000 by an amount sufficient to—

(1) allow middle income Americans, those with family incomes below $100,000, to set aside up to $1,000 of their income in individual retirement accounts to be used not only for their retirement but also to provide for education and medical expenses and for first-time home purchases;

(2) reduce the tax on capital gains for designated amounts over a lifetime to provide incentives for Americans, with special incentives for middle-income Americans, to make long-term investments that create jobs, reduce America's growing dependence on borrowing from abroad, and increase the productivity and competitiveness of our Nation; and

(3) reduce the proposed increase in gasoline excise taxes.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I want to lay before my colleagues the reasons for this amendment. It is well-known the Senator from Georgia, Senator NUNN and I had planned to offer an amendment which would write these changes into law as an amendment to the pending leadership package. We all understand the pressures that are operating on us and the need to move this piece of legislation forward so that we can avoid the chaos of another shutdown of Government. We also have strong sympathy for the burdens that are placed upon those in leadership positions at this particular time. We also recognize, Mr. President, that the final package will have to be written in any event by a conference committee. And so Senator NUNN and I and Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator GRAHAM felt it would be more appropriate, as the final decisions will have to be made in the conference committee, for us to send instead a strong signal from this body to our conferees to encourage them to work toward the objectives that have been outlined in our original amendment.

Mr. President, I would like to summarize what our original amendment would have done.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the original amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the amendments ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the end of title VII of the bill insert the following new subtitle:

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, under our original amendment, we would have increased the marginal tax rate on those with incomes at the highest levels above $180,000 a year to 33 percent. That would have raised approximatley $44 billion in revenues. We would have expended those revenues in the following way: we would have reduced the proposed gasoline tax increase by 2 cents. That utilizes $10 billion of the $44 billion that would have been raised by our original amendment.

Second, we would have established the right of all families with incomes of $100,000 or less to have individual retirement accounts, tax-free savings accounts, allowing them to set aside up to $1,000 per year per person or $2,000 for a working couple and a family each year into a savings account. That savings account, tax-free savings account, could have been used not only for retirement but it could also be used for nonpenalty withdrawals for educational expenses of the children in that family, for first-home purchases, and for unusual and necessary medical expenses.

That individual retirement account or tax-free savings account for middle Americans would have cost $10 billion in revenue. Under our original plan, the remaining $24 billion of revenue would have been used in the following way: we would have established a lifetime amount of $600,000 in capital gains against which individuals who held property for at least 5 years would have been given a maximum tax rate of 20 percent, and those that held property for 10 years or more, or assets for 10 years or more, would have been given a 15-percent rate. This targeted the greatest amount of incentive, the greatest benefit in the capital gains tax reduction to those people in this country who are really creating the jobs, the small business people, the farmers of our country who would therefore in amounts up to $600,000 in capital gains in a lifetime be able to get the lowest possible rates.

In addition, we would have encouraged long-range investment by all Americans under our plan by providing a maximum 25-percent rate on capital gains for assets held for 5 years or more for any American without regard to a cap or a 20-percent rate for assets held for 10 years or more. That program would have cost approximately $24 billion.

Mr. President, so that my colleagues might know the effect that we would have had if that amendment had been adopted today on the income distribution of tax burden, I want to insert into the RECORD a tax distribution chart prepared by the Joint Committee on Taxation for the current plan now before us versus the Boren-Nunn proposal.

Under the current plan now before us, for example, tax rates, effective tax rates, on all taxation for those with incomes of $50,000 to $75,000 is 25.2 percent; $75,000 to $100,000, 26.5 percent; $100,000 to $200,000, 27.1 percent; $200,000 or over falling back to 26.1 percent.

And so while we have an improvement over the current law in terms of distributing the tax burden, those between $75,000 and $200,000 still have, even under this proposal pending before us, a higher marginal tax rate or an overall tax rate than those making $200,000 or more.

By contrast, the Boren-Nunn proposal gives us a completely progressive result. For those $50,000 to $75,000, the tax rate would be 24.8; $75,000 to $100,000, 26 percent; $100,000 to $200,000, 26.5 percent; and $200,000 or over, 27 percent—a perfect glidepath, progressivity. In no instance would those above $200,000 under our proposal be paying a lower effective total tax rate than those with incomes under 200,000.

I ask unanimous consent that both the Joint Tax Committee distributional table for the current plan before us and the distributional table for the Boren-Nunn proposal be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, let me summarize what we are now saying in this sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

What we are saying in this resolution now before the Senate is that we should encourage our conferees to take action to make sure the final plan that comes out of conference is fair; that we do not end up putting more of a burden on middle America than we are putting on those with incomes over $200,000 a year.

We are saying something else that is exceedingly important. We are also saying that in addition to addressing this problem of the deficit, as we work on the largest budget package that has come before this Senate in many years, we should not miss this opportunity to also do something to make this country more able to compete in the world marketplace, to encourage economic growth, to encourage improvement in productivity so that the next generation of Americans will have jobs and will have a future with a high quality of living and a high standard of living.

Mr. President, if we miss the opportunity now to do something to change our tax policy, to bring it into line with sound economic policy, we may not have another such opportunity in this decade as we get ready to go into the next century.

We have all come to understand—and I have seen it acutely as chairman of the Intelligence Committee—that the leadership role for the United States in the next century more than on our military strength is going to depend upon our economic strength and our social strength in this country.

When the cold war began we had nine of the 10 biggest banks in the world; now we do not have any of the top 20. When the cold war began we had a 68-percent share of world markets; now we have less than 18-percent share of the world markets. The Japanese have a higher per capita income, and in 1992 the Europeans will have a larger combined market than we will have in this country.

Mr. President, we must do something to restore and rebuild the economic strength of this country. We can take a giant step forward by bringing down the budget deficits and reducing the need for the importation of foreign capital in this country, and the sell-off of America to people outside the country, out from under the next generation.

But we must do more. We must also have a solid plan that will encourage more investment, increases of savings in this country, to get the cost of capital down to the margin to make ourselves competitive, to restore America's productivity.

We should encourage our conferees to come forward with a balanced plan to do just that. That is what we are saying here. We have not tried to put anyone in a box. We have not tried to put anyone on the spot. We have not tried to pull the rug out from under our leaders.

We are saying the Senate should go on record to our conferees to encourage them by raising the rate of tax on those with incomes of $200,000 a year or more to raise enough revenue so that we can first of all give some relief to middle Americans. These are the people paying most of the bill, receiving the smallest amount of benefits under our current tax system, and even under the plan now before us.

These are the people who make just enough—very often two-wage-earner families—that their children do not qualify for scholarships to go to college. They earn just enough that they do not qualify for subsidized housing. They earn just enough that they do not qualify for any special help for their medical expenses. In fact, all they get are not benefits, but they get the privilege of paying the bills with little help coming back to them.

Mr. President, if there is any group of Americans who are forgotten, it is this group of Americans. We often focus our attention, as we should, on the underprivileged of our society, on those at the bottom end, in poverty, on those that perhaps cannot help themselves.

There is a lot of attention given to special interest groups, highly organized all over this country, who protect the tax breaks for the wealthy. Who has been standing up for those middle Americans who are footing the bill, who are paying for our Government and getting the least in return? It is time that we did something for them.

It is time we changed these distribution charts so they do not end up, two-wage-earner families, with family incomes of $50,000 to $75,000, they do not end up paying nearly all of the bill, the highest rate, and getting no benefits back.

Children of these people are not going to qualify, for example, for scholarships and help to go to college. The least we can do is allow these families to be able to set aside tax for each year up to $1,000 per person so that they can meet those responsibilities themselves, so that they can have, for example, an amount of money saved to help send their children to school or to help take care of medical emergencies. That is the least we can do for middle America.

Mr. President, we must do something here to encourage middle America; we must send a message that we understand their problems, and the burdens that they are bearing. This is fair. It will not only help middle America, it will help increase the savings rate of this country. And by also reducing the gasoline tax by another 2 cents, we put more progressivity into this package.

We give the American people to understand be all of us who are asked to sacrifice, and no one group more than its fair share.

At the same time we also encourage long-range investment in this country—capital gains reductions, not for speculators, not for the Milkens and Boeskys who simply shuffle around assets in this country, not those who want to buy a share of stock, turn around, sell it 6 months or a year later and turn a profit.

We give under our plan a capital gains break to encourage only those that engage in long-range investment a 20-percent rate for those that hold for 10 years or more and a 25-percent rate for those that hold for 5 years or more.

This one encourages long-range investment. It will get down the cost of capital in this country, help us get back part of our competitive edge in world markets.

Finally, we craft and we target this package in the sense of the resolution to give the lowest capital gains rate especially to that group of people in our country who are really creating the most jobs—small businesses, farmers, and others—by saying that amount of up to $600,000 in a lifetime should get the lowest capital gains rate of all, 15 percent on assets held for 10 years or more.

When you look at where the jobs are being created in this country, they are coming from small business. Large business in this country over the last decade had a net loss of jobs. To increase employment in this country, the millions of new jobs that have been added have been added in net terms by the small businesses of this country, by people who are starting businesses anew, and then seeing them grow, create employment, by the small farmers of this country.

What this amendment would say to them, this sense-of-the-Senate resolution would say to them is we want to recognize and reward what you are doing to help the economy of this country, we want to encourage people to start new small businesses and be innovative, and therefore to a maximum amount of $600,000 for a lifetime in capital gains, if you build that small business, if you build that small farm, you are going to get the lowest rate, in this case 15 percent, under our plan for those small businesses and those farms that have built up over a lifetime of achievement.

(Ms. MIKULSKI assumed the chair.)

Mr. BOREN. Madam President, this is a package I think that is good for America. I think it is appropriate for us at this time to send this kind of message to our conferees. Let us not miss this opportunity to deal in a responsible way with the deficit problem.

I salute those on both sides of the aisle, the leaders on both sides who have been so responsible in trying to put together this package. But let us also seize the opportunity to do something to create economic growth in this country, to help get us past this bad time in which a recession appears to be beginning in our country, and to look forward to create jobs for the next generation.

I urge my colleagues to join in a bipartisan spirit and help us adopt this resolution, this expression of encouragement to our conferees.

Mr. NUNN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. Madam President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 16 minutes and 20 seconds.

Mr. NUNN. Madam President, I thank my colleague from Oklahoma. He has outlined this proposal, and has done it very well. He has made what I think is the case that is not made very often around here but should be made every day, that is middle America is the heart and soul of our economic productivity in this country.

We have a lot of protection for our low-income people, and we should. We have an awful lot of debate about whether the brackets should go up for those at the very highest tier of income in this country. Those are legitimate debates. But I think it is time for us to settle that debate.

We have been urged in this resolution to take out the word rate so we would simply say we will not compromise on people. I think that would be inadvisable because at some point we have to decide that issue, and I see this as a vote to decide it now.

We have to decide whether we are going to sacrifice the economy of our country, the fiscal condition of our country, our trade position, our interest rates, on an obsession to keep a rate down at a level that never should have been there to begin with. For the first time in the income tax history that I am familiar with, we have a situation where the rates when they reach a certain point of income start going down so that those who have more income are paying less on their incremental income than those below them in the income bracket.

I think it is time for us to face that issue. I think it is time for us also to face the issue that we do not have the kind of incentives in our Tax Code that middle America needs to save money and to provide for the education of their children and the kind of incentives they need for their retirement savings.

That is what we are trying to do. We are trying to repair some of the damage and some of the inequities that flowed from the 1986 tax bill and, even before that, the 1981 tax bill. We are also trying to do it in a way that is compatible with economic growth.

We have a lot of debate around here about how much taxes should be increased or revenue increased. We have a lot of debate about how much spending should be cut and which spending account should be hit. What we do not talk nearly enough about is economic growth.

The aspect in both of these packages, both the Senate package and the House package, that is now missing, is any real emphasis on economic growth.

And one of the things I think we all are aware of, and I know those who head the Budget Committee are aware of it more than any of us, no matter what we do in the deficit package and how legitimate it is—and I think it is legitima for the first time in 10 years, it is going to be legitimate—no matter what we do in terms of reducing the expenditures of our Nation, no matter what we do in terms of increasing the projected revenues of our Nation, unless we have economic growth continuing, the deficit of this country is going to go up. I think that is the missing part of this debate.

We have to encourage people to save money. We have to encourage people to invest in capital assets. We also have to then encourage people to go ahead and sell assets that they would like to sell, but are not going to sell. They are going to be locked into those assets because of the tax rate which we have on people who held assets 10 or 20 years.

If we want to do something about the real estate and savings and loan debacle and the peril of financial institutions, we better start thinking about incentives here and we better figure out a way to do it in the near term.

Madam President, some people spend an awful lot of time talking about economic growth, but it always turns out that the way they want economic growth is to give the people in the very highest brackets the most benefits and hope that it will stimulate the economy as it moves down.

I think it is time to try another route. I think it is time for us to try giving the people in the middle income brackets an incentive to save and invest and watch what will happen, because I think middle America is the heart of this economy. The middle-income people are the most productive of people. The small businesses create the most jobs in our economy. They pay the most taxes. And as the Senator from Oklahoma said so well: Unfortunately, too many times they make just enough money not to qualify for most of the Federal programs. I think our national tax policy has to recognize that.

I do not want to take too much time today because others want to speak, but I think those who are worried about tax rates and never want to move off the 28 percent, and never want to close the bubble, ought to consider what President Ronald Reagan said in May 1985 when he was introducing his ideas for tax reform at that time. He said, and I quote the former President:

We would take a giant step toward an ideal system replacing the present tax code with a simple 3 bracket system with tax rates of 15 percent, 25 percent, and 35 percent. Only taxable income above $70,000 would be taxed at the highest third, the highest rate of 35 percent; no matter how much you earn you would pay 35 cents on any dollar to uncle Sam. That is the top 35 percent.

That was President Reagan. I find it really puzzling that some of our colleagues will not vote for 1 single percent above 28 percent, when the 28-percent bracket, as we all know, helped create the bubble. That now means that the marginal rate for people between $70,000 a year in income and $185,000 a year, their marginal rate is higher than those people who are making $200,000; $400,000; $500,000; $700,000; and $1 million a year. It does not make sense now. It did not make sense then.

We have a chance to correct that inequity and to continue to have incentives for people in those brackets, because they will have incentives if you believe Ronald Reagan and what he said when he introduced his package. I think it is time for us to face that, to acknowledge the errors that were made in 1986—there were some good things in that reform package, but to acknowledge the errors—and at the same time, do something about middle-income America and our economic growth in this country.

It is very important that we understand that we are moving toward a recession. We had better think about what we do in this package toward that. Otherwise, the promise of reduced deficits will become an illusion.

Madam President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I assume I am controlling the time in opposition?

Mr. SASSER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator controls the time if the Senator from Tennessee favors the amendment?

Mr. SASSER. Yes, Madam President; the Senator from New Mexico, I understand, will control the time in opposition to the Nunn-Boren amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, let me just state to the Senate, I understand that in opposition we have Senator ROTH, who wants to speak for about 10 minutes; and we probably will yield back time so we can get on with things. I yield myself 3 minutes.

First, let me say that I have to oppose the amendment, simply because we have been busy trying to put together a package of deficit reduction proposals, including revenue measures and other savings, reforms, and the like, for nigh on 5 months. And every time we got to a point where we could not move ahead, it had to do with this issue. If not precisely, almost.

It was capital gains; no capital gains; raise the brackets; do not raise them. Frankly, I believe that we would be performing a rather idle act to tell our conferees to do what we know will not succeed.

We have defeated a number of amendments on the basis that if we went to conference with those, there is no way to get a deficit reduction package.

Having said that, I say to my good friend from Georgia and the senior Senator from Oklahoma, it is refreshing—I have already stated my position and why I must be there, but let me say to them—it is refreshing to hear two U.S. Senators talk about the lack of growth and sustained productivity as a major American problem. We are blissfully thinking that because America has succeeded in the past, we are just going to continue competing in this world; our productivity is going to continue upwards; inflation is going to come down.

I am very appreciative, as one Senator, that two Senators talked about the fact that we ought to seriously look at what we can do to make America have a better chance of producing jobs, investment, and growth.

When I first became involved as a designated negotiator, I had objectives. I think they were the same as the President's: Get the deficit down as much as possible in a way that is least damaging to the American economy; reform the budget process so whatever you do is believed by the American people. We hope to do that before the day is out today. Next was to do what we could to enhance America's competitiveness and opportunity to grow, invest and save.

What we are going to end up with is part of the package. We are going to get the deficit down substantially, hopefully. They may get interest rates down, and by cutting the deficit that much, we may be encouraging savings because we will not be spending savings on debt, at least to the extent that we reduce the deficit. I am very hopeful that will happen. The research and development tax credit and a few of the others that are in the package indeed are necessary.

I do not believe it is possible now to get something as significant as a real workplace capital gains in this package. I personally would like to see that happen. I do not believe it will happen.

I close by saying, with reference to the Tax Code and all the talk about the rich and the poor, I want to thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon, Senator PACKWOOD, for his very enlightening remarks this morning. I hope people listened to them.

They were not filled with cliches. They were filled with the reality of why we were enthusiastic and excited on both sides of the aisle when the Tax Code that is now the law, with the two brackets, was adopted, bipartisan and with very large votes. The enthusiasm was tremendous because we had true reform.

I do not quite understand how it has turned so bad, so quickly. I do not really think it has.

But with that, let me suggest that there are two Senators who want to speak, and I am going to yield 10 minutes to Senator ROTH and 10 minutes to Senator BRADLEY, in that order, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Madam President, it is with great reluctance that I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the distinguished Senators from Oklahoma and Georgia. It is with reluctance, because there is much in it with which I agree. I, too, am happy to hear them talk about responding IRA's, a fight that I have helped lead in the Finance Committee. But, unfortunately, that will not even be in conference between the Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee.

But as much as I admire the work of these two gentleman, I have to say that I strongly oppose any increase in taxes. When we talk about growth and jobs and opportunity, it absolutely makes no sense, no sense at all, to be raising taxes on the American people. And that is what these proposals are doing the economy is stagnant.

Mr. President, two recent editorials offer some truth about the budget debacle and the proclivity of Congress to raise taxes almost at whim. The first ran yesterday in the Washington Post. It was an editorial by David Broder, who debunked the myth of fairness—the strange myth liberal spenders use to play one class of Americans against the other—as if all are not bound to lose by a tax increase.

The second editorial, in today's Wall Street Journal, complements the Broder piece by reporting that Americans are seeing through the myth. On Tuesday, the Civil Rights Commission voted in support of a resolution warning that the current thrust of the budget could cause economic difficulties for minorities, women, and the disabled. The Commission requested, "on behalf of America's disadvantaged, no general spending increase and no general tax increases. Instead, the Commission would freeze spending at the fiscal 1990 level."

When are the big spenders in Congress going to wake up and smell the coffee? They want to play Santa Claus, but they want someone else to pay the bills. Why? Because there is one fundamental truth in America: Santa Claus makes people happy, the IRS does not. Fortunately, the people are beginning to revolt. Because in the end, the big spenders are not even playing Santa Claus right. According to the Broder editorial, "People are sick and tired of paying taxes and getting nothing in return. They're convinced Government isn't working. The schools don't educate, the streets aren't safe, and traffic gets worse all the time. And yet there are still people who want them to pay more taxes!"

Of course, the big spenders belly up to bar, they smile and say: "But well spare the middle class. We're only going to make the upper class pay its fair share." That is bunk. I know it. The taxpayer knows it. And what is most insulting is the big spenders know it, too. They know that if they took every dollar from American families and individudals earning over $200,000 a year, they could not keep Government running a single month. They know that only 5 percent of taxpaying families and individuals earn over $70,000 a year—far too few to finance the liberals' free-wheeling ways.

No matter what they say, no matter how nicely they smile and how convincing their pleas—taxes will be raised on middle America. It is that simple. The bill passed by House liberals last night does not even try to hide the fact. By delaying indexing, the big spenders increase taxes on middle American families by $300 annually—and that is just the beginning. It does not even include the other tax increases that will lower their standard of living. And lest we grow complacent—or the American taxpayer is lulled into a false sense of security—that the Senate bill will redeem the middle class, let us make no mistake; it will not. It is going to hit the middle class too. In fact, a likely scenario is that the worst of both bills will emerge from conference between the House and Senate.

The Senate leadership made it very clear on television last Sunday that, when the conference convenes, all bets are off. There are no guarantees that the Senate leadership will even defend the Senate bill and that they will not tip-toe toward the House plan—a tip-toe that will end up a tap dance on the taxpayer's forehead. It is outrageous.

The simple fact is the liberal Democrats have declared war on the American family. They are not out to soak the rich. Even the Senate bill has tax breaks for certain industries.

Mr. NUNN. Will the Senator yield for just a moment on my time?

Mr. ROTH. Yes. I am happy to yield.

Mr. NUNN. Madam President, the Senator is making a good case against the House bill, but he has not said anything about this amendment, because this amendment basically makes the rates on people that make over $180,000 a year the same as the rates on people that already make between $70,000 and $180,000 a year. This amendment is revenue neutral. It does not raise taxes on anybody one penny if they make under $180,000 a year, but it helps them with incentives and it lowers the gasoline tax.

So I ask the Senator, is he talking about this amendment or is he talking about the House bill?

Mr. ROTH. Let me answer my distinguished friend and colleague. I am opposed to any tax increase. And in that sense, I am in opposition to his resolution.

Mr. NUNN. If the Senator will yield further.

Mr. ROTH. I would like to, if I could, finish my statement. As I said, there is much in the Senator's proposal that I appreciate and support. But, unfortunately, IRA's will not even be in conference. The main point I am trying to make here—and if I have any time at the end, I will be happy to continue the dialog—but the simple fact is the liberal Democrats have declared war on the American family. They are not out to soak the rich. Even the Senate bill has tax breaks for certain industries. Of course the big spenders want the voter to think they are aiming at the rich, but they are going to hit the target they really want—the middle class. And our economy is going to look like something designed by Bart Simpson and Stephen King. The only thing is Bart Simpson might be smarter and Stephen King certainly is not that sadistic.

The way out of this deficit is to cut spending. Neither the House nor the Senate bill addresses this in any responsible way. The way out of this deficit is to eliminate waste, fraud, and abuse. Neither bill addresses this—period. The way out of this deficit is to create incentives for economic growth—to protect the American family, the workplace, the competitive well-being of our country. Both bills move in the exact opposite direction. They are antifamily, antibusiness, anticompetitiveness.

That is why I stand firm in my position that is supported by millions of Americans who see the big spending freight train coming through the tunnel—no new taxes.

Madam President, just let me say, with respect to the resolution before us, that, of course, it raises taxes. As I said, I think raising taxes at this juncture when our economy is, at best, stagnant makes absolutely no economic sense. We are running the risk of tipping this economy into a recession. And so I do not care how well motivated the proposal is, we should have no new taxes at this time.

I strongly agree we ought to be doing something about individual savings. I support what the distinguished Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Oklahoma are doing. But they are not included in this legislation at any time. So it will not be a matter for conference.

Let me point out in 1986, when the Senate backed off of the IRA, I finally got the Senate to yield to the House, to agree we would not undercut or cutback on IRA's. The House would not let us agree with their position.

What I am saying is, as much as I support what Senator NUNN is proposing, I see absolutely no change, no opportunity for IRA's to be strengtnened and expanded in the coming conference.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition? The Senator from New Jersey is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Madam President, I rise in opposition to the resolution, although I am very appreciative that the distinguished Senators from Oklahoma and Georgia did not offer an amendment but are only offering a sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

There have been any number of misstatements during the last several weeks about the so-called bubble. They were repeated today. I think there are just one or two points to make.

Never did someone filing a joint return, earning between $74,000 and $155,000, pay more taxes or pay a higher average tax rate than someone earning more than $155,000. Opponents of the bubble constantly mix up marginal tax rates with average tax rates. Unfortunately they do not make that admission.

I ask unanimous consent that an article from Tax Notes of October 2, 1989, an article from the New York Times of April 29, 1990, and an article from the May 15, 1990, Wall Street Journal be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMENTARY: THE BUBBLE IS NO "ANOMALY"

(By Byrle M. Abbin)

The written press as well as the air waves recently have become overcrowded with rhetoric relating to the 33 percent marginal tax rate. Frequently, as part of this rhetoric, the term "anomaly" has been used to describe the tax rate applied to single filers with taxable incomes between $44,900 and at least $93,130, and to joint returns with incomes between $74,850 and $155,320. This 33 percent rate is often referred to as the "bubble" because it applies to a limited band of income, after which a 28 percent rate is applied. Unfortunately, politicians, pundits, and even financial analysts discussing this situation tend to confuse marginal tax rates with effective tax rates, and they imply, by the use of these terms "anomaly" and "bubble," that the middle-income taxpayers subject to the 33 percent rate are somehow being treated unfairly in comparison to higher-income taxpayers whose top marginal tax rate is 28 percent. The erroneous impression that is left is that these 33 percent taxpayers pay a higher percentage of their income to the government than do those with more income. The misconception, simply put, is that people do not pay marginal tax rates; rather, they pay taxes in cold hard cash.

In analyzing the significance of the "bubble" and arguments to correct this alleged "anomaly," it is important to recognize initially that, for those with taxable incomes above the threshold levels, the 28 percent tax rate is taxed on all taxable income. In contrast taxpayers with incomes below that level apply a 15 percent tax rate to a portion of their taxable income (the first $18,550 for single individuals and the first $30,950 for joint returns), and may also deduct personal exemptions of $2,000 for each exemption, including dependents. The purpose of the 33 percent rate is to ensure that the benefits of the 15 percent rate and deductions for personal exemptions eventually are denied to higher-income taxpayers who are then subject to a 28 percent average tax rate on all their income. It is, as the technicians like to say, a means for "phasing out" the 15 percent rate and personal exemptions and "phasing in" the 28 percent rate.

It must be clearly understood that in no event will those in a middle-income category ever pay tax at a higher average rate than those at the highest income levels. Rather, middle-income taxpayers would pay at less than the 28 percent rate. Consider a family with $50,000 of taxable income, after deducations other than two personal exemptions. Their 1989 Federal income tax would be $8,864, reflecting an average tax rate of 17.7 percent. Next, consider another family with a taxable income (before exemptions) of $150,000. In their case, the tax would be $40,414, for an average rate of 26.9 percent. A similar family making $250,000 of taxable income (before personal exemptions) will pay a tax of $70,000 or, on average, 28 percent of each dollar of income. Different tax rates would apply to different bands of income but the family with the highest income would incur the highest tax rate and would pay the most tax.

The fact that Congress chose in the 1986 Tax Reform Act to use a five percent surtax (33 percent less 28 percent) to implement its decision to deny the benefit of a 15 percent tax bracket and personal exemptions to some high-income taxpayers is not anomalous. Indeed, it is quite common to encounter phaseouts of tax benefits as a means to achieve a tax policy objective and, in this case, it was a technically clever way of doing so.

In fact, phaseouts often are used to accomplish social or political goals in the tax system. Many of these can seem, at first impression, to be as arbitrary and "unjust" as the 33 percent "bubble" when their underlying purpose is ignored. For example, generally a retired individual receives Social Security payments tax free. However, if his or her income exceeds a certain level, a portion of those Social Security payments becomes subject to tax. When coupled with the fact that benefits are reduced when earned income exceeds a specified level, the total tax (including lost Social Security benefits) can be as high as 71 percent of incremental earnings. Similarly, those who benefit from the earned income credit will find their additional earnings between $9,850 and $18,570 taxed at a marginal twenty-five percent rate—the basic 15 percent rate plus an additional 10 percent effective tax due to the phaseout of the credit.

Other items that could as easily be characterized as "anomalies" that modify the effective tax rate based on the level of income include the disallowance of those itemized deductions that do not exceed a certain percentage of adjusted gross income—such as deductions for medical expenses and casualty losses. In addition, the phaseout of the allowable deduction under the passive activity loss rules for real estate rental losses from properties that the taxpayer actively manages, effectively raises the tax rate for individuals whose adjusted gross income exceeds $100,000. In fact, the combination of phaseouts, phaseins, and floors, can cause an individual's marginal tax rate to be higher under the 1986 tax act than it was before 1987, when the top tax rate was 50 percent. Moreover, due to the 1986 tax act's limitations on investment interest deductions and passive activity losses, many individuals have found their total taxes have increased even though tax rates were reduced significantly.

There is a host of examples that could be cited, showing that marginal rate can far exceed the 15 percent/28 percent structure adopted in 1986. However, this would only obscure the fact that taxpayers pay taxes and not rates. That is where the focus in this debate should be—on effective as rates and total tax.

This analysis is intended neither to justify nor criticize the tax rate structure Congress has ordained or will adopt. Rather, my aim is to bring a semblance of factual understanding into a process that has become politicized through the use of buzz words and pejoratives like "anomalies" and bubbles"—characterizations that have been cast about as if they create verity.

OVERSIZED TAXES FOR THE MIDDLE CLASS?

(By Norman Ornstein)

One of Washington's annual springtime rites is the required Congressional budget resolution. This year, the debate will encompass many things, but a centerpeice will be the proposal by many leading figures in Congress to raise tax rates for the rich, starting with the infamous "bubble." The bubble is, of course, the anomaly in the income tax code that has marginal tax rates rising to 33 percent for taxpayers at roughly the $75,000 level, then dropping back down to 28 percent for those with incomes over roughly $200,000.

On the surface, this seems like a perverse artifact of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, enacted simply to punish upper-middle-income taxpayers and reward their wealthier counterparts. Those calling for the bubble's abolishment say we should simply extend the 33 percent marginal rate to the upper income levels. But the fact is that the bubble was put in place for a very good reason—it does not reward the rich.

When reformers created the new, simplified system, their goal was to move from 14 separate marginal tax rates to two—15 percent for lower income, and 28 percent for upper income—while moving poor Americans off the tax rolls entirely. To keep the fair share of the tax burden on the highest-income groups in America, they eliminated or reduced many of the loopholes the wealthy had been using in the old system. They went further, however. They moved to eliminate from wealthier taxpayers both the benefit of the personal exemption and the advantages of the 15 percent rate for the first $32,400 in income.

They could have done so without any rigmarole in rates—by having complicated tables to phase out both the personal exemption and the lower rate, adding to the headaches of taxpayers and the bills of tax accountants. In the spirit of simplification, the reformers, perhaps naively, chose the bubble. The end result of the bubble is that the richest taxpayers have no personal exemptions and pay a flat 28 percent on all their taxable income, with no 15 percent rate at all. Although taxpayers with incomes between $75,000 and $200,000 do pay a higher marginal tax rate, they also retain some of the benefits of the personal exemption and the 15 percent rate, and thus have lower average tax rates than the rich. In other words, the bubble actually adds to the progressiveness of the tax system.

Not realizing the widespread confusion that would result when the discussion turned to average tax rates versus marginal tax rates, reformers left themselves open to the attacks that have become so common. But the bubble does raise the tax bills of wealthy taxpayers and over time will add even more to their relative tax burden.

Congress and the President may well make the public policy decision to raise the taxes of the richest Americans. But if they decide to do so, it should be with a full understanding of why tax reform tried to create the most simplified rate structure it could, and why and how the so-called bubble fits in with its philosophy and spirit. That, so far, has not been a part of the debate.

DON'T POP THE BUBBLE

(By Byrle M. Abbin)

As White House officials and House and Senate negotiators begin their deficit cutting budget "summit" today, the federal tax system seems to be one of the targets in their cross-hairs. And at the center of the bull's-eye is the "bubble"—the 33% marginal tax rate on some middle-income taxpayers.

Democratic leaders are entering the summit claiming that they are determined to pop the bubble in the name of fairness and simplicity by extending a 33% tax rate that allegedly falls on middle-income taxpayers to "the rich." But intentional or not, this is a delusion. The Democratic leadership is using public confusion over the difference between average and marginal tax rates as a reason to impose a tax increase on the American economy and to undo the 1986 tax reform.

TWO RATES

Ironically, the bubble exists because Congress wanted to introduce more progressivity into the 1986 tax reform. That reform set two marginal tax rates, 15% and 28%. In order not to treat upper income taxpayers too generously, however, Congress decided to deny taxpayers with the highest incomes the benefit of the 15% rate on their first increments of income.

So, at certain levels of taxable income—between $44,900 and $93,130 for single filers and between $74,850, and $155,320 for joint filers—the benefits of the 15% rate are phased out. This is accomplished by applying a 5% surcharge to this band of income. A taxpayer whose income level falls within the band must pay back some, but not all the benefit received from the 15% rate. A taxpayer whose taxable income is above this income band gets no benefit from the lower rate.

In addition, that taxpayer's personal exemptions are also taken back by extending the surcharge to income above the band. Once the tax benefit ($560 per exemption) has been fully negated, the surcharge no longer exists and the 28% tax rate resumes. But all of this refers only to marginal tax rates—the rate on each additional dollar. Nobody's average tax rate ever exceeds 28 cents on every taxable dollar of income, before personal exemptions.

So, three marginal rates exist, but, as the chart shows, no taxpayer ever pays an effective or average rate of tax of more than 28%. Unfortunately, many people find it hard to grasp this concept: The bubble may be the first major tax provision ever repealed simply because it was hard to explain why and how it works.

Clearly, as the chart again shows, it is incorrect to suggest that those upper middle-income taxpayers subject to a 33% marginal tax rate on a portion of their income are being treated unfairly compared to higher-income taxpayers who pay a flat rate of 28% on all their income. The higher the income level the more "pain" there is from the additional tax.

There is no lower-bracket loophole for the "rich," as some have maintained; the "rich" in fact pay a higher effective tax than do the middle-income taxpayers subject to the bubble. In fact, the bubble actually augments the progressivity of the tax code.

The hue and cry over the bubble has failed, curiously, to direct attention to the rate structure that its detractors intend to replace it with. As one listens to Democratic leaders bemoan the decline of progressivity in the federal tax system during the 1980s, it becomes quite apparent that their true objective is not simply to eliminate the confusion created by the phaseouts and surtaxes of the 1986 tax reform.

Instead, it seems that the bubble poppers want to make 33% the effective rate for taxpayers with the highest incomes. If so, the bubble won't go away: It will just float upward to apply at a higher level of income. Applying a third rate of 33% to the current rate structure and retaining the current phaseouts would mean that taxpayers over a certain level of income would find every dollar, not just the marginal dollars, of their taxable income subject to a 33% tax rate. Meanwhile with the 5% surtax still in place, upper middle income taxpayers would find themselves facing yet another bubble—but this time of 38%, not 33%.

Efforts to eliminate the bubble have been brewing for some time, and though defeated, they remain on the tax legislative agenda. The idea lingers on partly because of widespread ignorance of the probable impact of the bubble's elimination. Any plan to pop the bubble would probably impose sizeable increases in tax rates on many taxpayers. One likely result of those higher rates would be increased political pressure to reverse the basic tradeoff of lower rates for a broader tax base that formed the foundation of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

The plan the House of Representatives considered last September would create such pressures. The plan would have created three marginal rates, of 15%, 28% and 33%. It was defeated then, but some Democrats would like the White House to consider it again now. The effect of the adoption of this plan would be to increase the average tax rate above the 28% level, so that it would approach, though never actually hit, 33% for taxpayers with the highest incomes.

"NOT A TAX"

For a family of four, the tax increase would kick in at about $200,000 of taxable income. For those taxpayers, this simple "correction"—"in correcting that, we are not creating a new tax" said Speaker Thomas Foley in September—would be traumatic. The Joint Tax Committee staff estimates the proceeds of the "correction" at $4.2 billon in fiscal 1991 and $44.3 billion over the next five years. That's no correction—that's a tax increase.

Fairness and clarity, if they are indeed the purposes of the bubble-poppers, don't require more revenue. Bubble popping does not have to be code for soaking the rich. Instead, current law could be replaced with three marginal rates, but the income levels at which the 28% and 33% marginal rates apply would be adjusted so that no more and no less revenue would be raised than is raised under current law. The fact that this option is not being taken seriously is a sure sign that the bubble poppers are interested in something other than fixing the technical quirks of the tax system.

Mr. BRADLEY. One last comment on the bubble, and that is the so-called bubble between $74,000 and $155,000 on the joint returns is not the only bubble in the Tax Code. There is another bubble in the earned income tax credit at the low end of the scale where any number of people who are near poor are paying a marginal rate at 25 percent, higher than people just a few thousand dollars higher in income. There is also a bubble in the phaseout of the IRA, between $40,000 and $50,000; a higher marginal rate in that category of income, above lower.

The point to be made—and I think the chart I submitted illustrates that—is a couple earning under $155,000 never pays a 28-percent rate. It is always lower than a 28-percent rate. Above, you pay a 28-percent rate.

Madam President, my concern here with this amendment does not relate only to the higher rate, it envisions a 33-percent rate. I just voted for a higher rate of tax on people who earn more money. I am prepared to support a higher rate of tax.

The thing that concerns me is the inclusion of a capital gains cut in any package that comes out of the conference. The reason that bothers me is on several levels. On one level it is the simple fact that the people who benefit most from this cut are people at the very high income levels.

Let us talk about a few statistics. There are 107 million taxpayers in the country and of that, about 15 million take capital gains. So it is about a 14-percent number.

Who benefits from the capital gains? The people earning between zero and $20,000 get 2 percent of all capital gains for an average capital gain of about $5. People earning $220,000 or more get 65 percent of all capital gains with an average capital gain of $16,000.

It even gets worse than this. If we look at income levels we see the higher we go in income, the more the total income comes from capital gains. For example, if you earn between $200,000 and $500,000, 14 percent of your total income comes from capital gains. On the other hand, if you earn between $500,000 and $1 million, 21 percent of your income comes from capital gains. If you earn $1 million or more, 35 percent of your income comes from capital gains.

Therefore, it should not surprise people that the individuals who benefit most from a capital gains cut are the individuals who have most of their income in capital gains. It bewilders me why the top 1 percent of income earners, who have an average income of $972,000, need a $27,000 tax cut, which is what would come from the enactment of an exclusion at 15 percent, particularly when we look at people earning under $80,000 who would get an average capital gains cut of $59.

Madam President, it is extremely clear the beneficiaries here are the people who earn the highest amount of income. As I said, people who earn over $200,000 receive 65 percent of all capital gains. People who earn over $1 million take 35 percent of their income in capital gains, that is $350,000.

In summary, on the equity point, this capital gains cut does not affect a lot of people. It affects only about 15 million of the 107 million taxpayers in the country. It is a small number of taxpayers that it affects. It goes disproportionately to people who earn more than $200,000. And again that should not be a surprise because they take 35 percent of their income over $1 million in capital gains. That should not be a surprise to anyone when we look at who owns the assets in the country.

If we look at the stock in the country, the top 1 percent of income earners in the country own 58 percent of the stock. The top 1 percent of the income earners in the country own 49 percent of the bonds. The top 1 percent of the income earners in the country earn 51 percent of the business assets. And that top 1 percent has an average net worth of 43,443,000.

It should not be surprising, and the statistics clearly demonstrate, that the prime beneficiary from a capital gains cut will be those who are making more than $200,000.

The amendment envisions a rate going to 33 percent. Let us take that $1 million individual, who makes $1 million, and 35 percent of it comes from capital gains and the rest comes from ordinary income. So he makes $650,000 in ordinary income and he has a 5-percent increase in tax from 28 to 33. So he will pay $32,500 more in tax.

However, on the $350,000 in capital gains, he gets a 13-percent cut under the Senator's amendment; if he holds the stock for longer than 10 years, the 15 percent rate. The result is even with a tax rate of 33 percent and a capital gains cut at 15 percent, the individual who makes more than $1 million comes out in terms of saved taxes $13,000 ahead.

Mr. BOREN. Will the Senator yield for a question on my time?

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BOREN. Madam President, I ask the Senator—I am doing this on the time of the Senator from Georgia—if he is aware of the fact that the package which we are proposing is not only capital gains only on long-term held investments, and also with a lower exclusion for those under $600,000, but it also is a cut in the gasoline tax and also gives IRA's—the right for people in the middle income to save to educate their children.

If he looked at this chart which I had printed in the RECORD, under current law, the current tax law according to the Joint Tax Committee, the effective tax rates for people above $200,000 a year is 25.2 percent. It is higher, it is 25.8 and 26.2 for those people between $75,000 and $200,000.

In other words, current law has a higher effective tax rate on people who have combined family incomes of $75,000 than it does those over $200,000. Whereas under our package, according to joint tax, we go to a 27-percent rate on those above $200,000 and less than that on those that are below, on all income categories below, because we finally do something for the middle income people and for the small business people.

I wonder if he opposes that portion of our plan which allows these people who do not qualify for scholarships for their kids' education just because they earn a little bit too much, to finally be able to save for it?

Mr. BRADLEY. I certainly approved the Senator's efforts to cut the gasoline tax. I think that is very good. In fact if we did that but did not cut the capital gains tax, this chart the Senator is showing to the Senate would even be more progressive.

The point of my comments is to say that we should not be cutting the capital gains tax in this package because it disproportionately benefits people who are over $200,000 a year who take 65 percent of the capital gains.

But let me go on and address the economic aspects of the capital gains issue. It is frequently described as the answer to all our economic problems. We passed the capital gains, and we have the savings and loan crisis; we pass capital gains, and we have booming economic growth, et cetera.

I happen to think the best tack is the lowest possible rate of tax on all income. I think that it is important to treat all income the same. If you look at what has happened since 1986, savings is up, business fixed investment is up, industrial equipment investment is up, and up substantially. Business industrial equipment, for example, is up 19 percent since 1986. From 1981 to 1986, it dropped 8 percent. Fixed business investment is up 6 percent. From 1981 to 1986, it was up only 2 percent.

So things seem to be working. Why is that so? I would argue that that is so because as a result of the 1986 act, there is improved efficiency in the economy. People invest money to make money, not to lose money for tax purposes. The result is, you get a bigger punch for economic growth.

If we put back in a capital gains tax, we are then going to be moving back to an inefficient, wasteful tax shelter system in which people will be fighting over existing wealth and figuring out how to game the tax system instead of investing in growth industries for new wealth. That really is the difference here. Do we want new wealth and growth or do we want to fight over the existing wealth?

What happens in this country too frequently is, we fight over the existing wealth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BRADLEY. I ask unanimous consent for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Before I do that, and I probably will, I want to make a point how much time we have left on the whole bill with 15 or 20 amendments. How much time remains on this side and how much on the majority side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this side, it is 5 minutes and a few seconds. On the other side, it is 7 minutes and a few seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am sorry, total time left on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senators will withhold. It is so noisy in the Chamber with the variety of other conversations taking place.

Will the Senator from New Mexico state his question?

Mr. DOMEMICI. How much time remains on the Republican side on the entire bill and how much on the Democratic side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If all time on the amendment is used, it will be approximately an hour and 45 minutes for the Republicans and only 9 minutes left for the Democrats.

Mr. DOMENICI. I regret to say to my good friend I will yield only 2 minutes, if he can use 2 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the distinguished Senator.

I think the result of the 1986 act, the lower rates, the improved efficiency have kept this economy out of the recession. What concerns me about the bill is that it raises $170 billion but gives a lot back in the form of special breaks to this industry and that industry. The result is going to be increased taxes and reduced economic efficiency, which is my fear, and will be a drag on the economy and pull us into a recession.

If I can briefly summarize other arguments and try to refute them on the capital gains and other issues, it is savings investment, venture capital incentive. The fact is it increases the deficit. By the Senator's own comments, this will increase the deficit by $24 billion. That drives up interest rates and cost of capital, far more than you would get from a marginal capital gains cut. Venture capital, 1987, the year after we ended the capital gains special rate, we had the highest venture capital investment in our history. In the last 10 years, venture capital has gone from $3 to $30 billion.

Finally, some of the bigger investments in venture capital. Pension funds, universities, et cetera, are tax exempt and therefore a cut in capital gains will not help them at all.

So, Madam President, I simply argue that we should have low rates, we should not change the code and we should reduce the budget deficit. The plan envisioned in this amendment would raise rates, would increase the budget deficit, would reduce efficiency, would not stimulate new investment and would be grossly inequitable because the big benefit would go to that seven-tenths of a percent of the population that earns more than $200,000 and gets 65 percent of the capital gains.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has used all of his time.

The remaining time, I say to the Senator from New Mexico, is 2 minutes 58 seconds. The Senator from Tennessee, the manager, has 7 minutes 26 seconds. This is on the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that the time be charged equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the time charged to the amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. The time is charged to the amendment as far as my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NUNN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NUNN. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the proponents, 7 minutes, 26 seconds; for the opponents, 2 minutes, 58 seconds.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I realize that this is just a sense of the Senate resolution and that it is nonbinding. However, I find the concept behind it unacceptable.

It is like winning a shopping spree at the local grocery store. You know the kind of contest where you win the opportunity to spend 5 minutes in a grocery store and whatever you can throw in your cart is free.

Today, Mr. President, the Senate has an opportunity to pass an amendment to say that this is the concept we want to base this budget agreement on. We want to give everyone who makes less than $100,000 a $1,000 tax break for savings. How many people will take advantage of this? How much will it cost? The resolution does not say.

We want to reduce the capital gains tax. To what rate? Over what period of time? Who gets the break? How much will this cost? The resolution does not say.

And finally we will reduce the increase in the gasoline tax. By how much? The resolution does not say.

This sense of the Senate does not set any parameters. All of the provisions are good provisions. I would vote to give some savings incentives. I would vote to reduce the capital gains tax. And I would vote to reduce the gas tax.

The problem here is that there are no parameters. How much will this cost? We do not care; the owner of the grocery store is paying.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I support the Boren-Nunn amendment because it expresses the sense of the Senate in favor of modifying the reconciliation bill so that it is fairer to middle-income taxpayers. It expresses the sense of the Senate that the proposed increase in the gasoline tax should be reduced. I believe that it should be reduced to zero because a gasoline tax increase is the wrong tax at the wrong time. It would be possible to reduce the reconciliation bill's increase in the gasoline tax to zero and to take steps toward achieving the other objectives in this resolution by increasing the maximum income tax rate on taxpayers making over $200,000 to 35 percent.

The authors of the resolution have assured me that a reduction to zero is consistent with the wording of this resolution.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the Boren-Nunn sense of the Senate resolution.

First and foremost, I would like to express my support for introducing greater progressivity into the Tax Code. As we struggle to rebound from the excesses of the decade just past, we must strive to ensure that the burden of deficit reduction is fairly shared. Mr. President, any budget that I can support must be fair to working families.

The approach proposed by Senators BOREN and NUNN would restore progressivity by bursting the bubble. Bursting the bubble could generate about $50 billion over 5 years.

I fully support this measure in the sense of the Senate resolution that would increase the marginal tax rate of the wealthiest Americans to the level that we tax upper middle income Americans. In fact, I voted for this measure in several other amendments.

Mr. President, I also support many of the uses to which the Senators propose to spend the new revenues. This is because these revenues are given back to middle and lower income Americans and, therefore, progressivity is enhanced.

In this resolution, half of the revenues, Mr. President, are given back to lower and middle income Americans. And this half makes the Tax Code fairer than it would be under the proposed reconciliation package, and I support that.

Half of this half would go to reducing the proposed increase in gasoline taxes. And this is something that I support. The people of Massachusetts deserve a break. Having just experienced a spike in gasoline prices due to the events in the Persian Gulf and due to an increase in State gasoline taxes, they cannot handle yet another increase. That is why I voted for the Symms amendment last night to completely eliminate the gas tax increase.

The other half of this half would go to allowing individuals to make tax-free contributions to IRA accounts and withdraw the funds for retirement, catastrophic illness, education, and the first-time purchase of homes. I am a long-time supporter of this as a way to encourage savings and of giving average middle income Americans a break. I hope the conferees can also find a way to include this provision in the final budget bill.

My problem with the resolution, Mr. President, is how the other half is used.

I have worked long and hard for a targeted capital gains tax cut. The need for Congress to undertake measures that would encourage growth is obvious. With growth slowing and international competiveness eroding, we must act to encourage savings and stimulate productive investment. And I believe that a carefully targeted capital gains tax cut would do just that.

However, I cannot support the version of the capital gains tax cut as articulated by the authors of the Boren-Nunn amendment.

I cannot support this tax cut because it will not effectively encourage investment. It proposes a lifetime limit to income eligible for a lower capital gains tax rate. And even this lower tax rate is not low enough; it is not as low as what I propose in my bill.

Instead of targeting investors and giving them incentive to invest in small, growth-oriented companies, the proposal would diffuse investments much more broadly and into a wide variety of types of investments.

The result, then, of this particular proposal could be to give away as much as $20 billion in tax cuts to wealthy and upper income Americans. In doing so, it is also doubtful that it would produce any significant growth.

It is for these reasons that I must withhold support for this proposed tax cut and instead continue to support my own targeted capital gains plan.

I have worked diligently for several years to provide a tax incentive for highly targeted tax incentives aimed directly at small, growth companies. My legislation would dramatically reduce capital gains but solely for long-term investment in such capital-starved small growth companies. This proposal would cost only a small fraction of the revenue that this proposal would suggest is necessary. I want a targeted growth incentive in the reconciliation bill. I have urged such a provision on the majority leader and on the chairman of the Finance Committee. I have done everything one Senator can to enact such a provision. But this proposal is not consistent with that concept.

As described by the sponsors and as specified in their earlier amendment upon which this amendment is based, this provision would encourage the conferees to use $20 billion in revenues generated by increased taxes on the wealthy to return these revenues to them in another form.

Therefore, as much as I agree with and have voted for cuts in the gas tax, as much as I agree with the need to increase IRA's, and as much as I agree that a highly targeted, and extremely deep, capital gains cut specifically for small growth companies is needed, I cannot support an amendment that would suggest that as much as $20 billion in new revenues go to a very broad and expensive reduction in the overall capital gains tax.

Mr. NUNN. Madam President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] had wanted to say a few words on behalf of this amendment. I do not know whether he is here. I do not want to hold up our colleagues. I will be prepared to yield back the time, but I would not want to foreclose his opportunity to speak as a cosponsor of this amendment.

Madam President, while we are waiting to see if the Senator from Florida would like to make a statement, let me just say that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH] talked about all the things that are wrong with taxes. Without deciding whether he is correct or not, that has nothing to do with this amendment. The question is, which taxes? This amendment will help guide the conference, if it is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Georgia will withhold. It is difficult to hear the Senator because of other conversations going on. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Chair. This amendment, Madam President, has no effect in terms of raising taxes. This amendment decides which taxes are more equitable and which taxes will do more for our economy and middle income people.

I do not understand an argument from someone who says they do not want to raise taxes when this amendment lowers taxes on gasoline from what it would otherwise be, lowers taxes on middle income investments and lowers taxes on middle income savings. The ones who pay more taxes to pay for that are those who make over $180,000 a year.

I do not understand that argument. I think the Senator from Delaware was arguing against the House bill. I hope he will be persuaded to vote for this amendment if he is against taxes. It is just a question of whether you want to vote for higher income people paying more taxes, paying the same rate that those between $70,000 and $180,000 pay, in order to lower taxes on middle income savings and middle income investments in the lower income brackets so they can educate their children and, in the case of young people, apply it to their first home.

I am also puzzled by the Senator from New Jersey who is quite an expert in this area who ignores in his argument the entire chart that shows this amendment is more progressive than the current law, which he is defending. That is the analysis. If the Senator disagrees with the analysis, perhaps he can tell us where it is wrong. The Joint Committee on Taxation analysis is that the bill is more progressive by far and more progressive than the current law the Senator is defending.

I do not understand the arguments against the amendment. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment as an indication to the conference that there is a consensus in this body. I think this could be an important indication to the conference about how we can solve this problem we are in, in terms of coming out with a consensus that people can support.

So I urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment. Madam President, I do not see the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator allow me to answer?

Mr. NUNN. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BRADLEY. I simply say that if the interest is progressivity—and I would applaud that to mean the intent of the sponsors—the amendment would be even more progressive, even more progressive, if you eliminated the exclusion for capital gains which is, of course, the objective of my comments. All of the interest in having growth and all of the interest in having lower taxes on middle income I fully subscribe. I am very dubious about the growth effect of lower capital gains and I am quite skeptical of the distributional analysis as to who benefits from capital gains because the amendment is structured in a way that makes it very difficult to get excellent revenue estimates.

Mr. NUNN. One thing we know, if the Senator will yield, we know who is going to pay for it, and that is the people who make over $200,000 a year. There is no doubt about that. So it cannot help but be progressive if people below that get any of it.

Madam President, I would yield back the remainder of my time if the Senator from New Mexico is so prepared.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time on the amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 56—as follows:

So the amendment (No. 3028) was rejected.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, in the interest of expediting the business of the Senate this afternoon, and in an effort to accommodate as many Senators as possible, I am going to propound a unanimous-consent request in a moment.

Mr. President, also in an effort to be evenhanded and balance off the amendments on either side of the aisle, I might say that we have had, I think, three or four straight amendments on our side of the aisle here. We are going to propound a unanimous-consent request that will go back and forth.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, at this time, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] be recognized for a time not to exceed 3 minutes, for the purpose of offering points of order regarding OSHA criminal penalties; that upon disposition of the points of order raised by Mr. METZENBAUM, Senator HATCH will be recognized to offer an amendment in the form of a motion to strike OSHA penalties; and that there be 30 minutes equally divided and controlled in the usual form; that no amendments thereto be in order; that upon disposition of the Hatch amendment, Senators HOLLINGS and HEINZ will be recognized for a time not to exceed 10 minutes for calling up and disposing of an amendment; and upon disposition of the Hollings-Heinz amendment, that Senator STEVENS be recognized for 3 minutes for the purpose of making a point of order pursuant to the Byrd rule.

Mr. President, I make this unanimous-consent request in an effort to expedite our business and to dispose of these matters just as quickly as possible, so that we can conserve additional time for other Senators wishing to call up their amendments.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that no amendments to the language proposed to be stricken by Senator HATCH be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would just like to say that the exercise that we have been going through here for the last day and a half, and probably going on into the wee hours of the morning, at the rate we are going, I think it is not wise. It is not the proper way to set policy.

I would like to just make a suggestion that maybe the majority leader and the Republican leader should recess this body for an hour at an appropriate time, if we can get some agreement, to get the two caucuses together to see if we could not come up with some kind of an agreement on limitation.

Certainly those on this side have offered more amendments than those on the other side. It is possible, as a matter of suggestion to the people who are struggling to move this along, that maybe we could come to some agreement in the caucuses to limit the number of amendments?

Could we have order please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not in order. The Senate will be in order. Those who have discussions other than before the Senate, please adjourn to the Cloakroom.

Mr. EXON. I simply say, Mr. President, that because of the critical situation, this is not the time for dilly-dallying; this is not the time to be offering, in my opinion, a whole series of amendments. This Senator would like to offer a freeze amendment that I have offered frequently in the past with the help of other Senators. I am withholding that because I believe, under the present situation, it would be a meaningless gesture on my part and just confuse and delay the process further.

I am just appealing to all of those who want to offer amendments, for whatever the cause, to hold that back a little bit in the interest of trying to do something under the critical situation that the leadership is faced with and with the time constraints that we have.

I make that suggestion. Maybe it will not work. But something along that line is going to have to come to pass or we are going to find ourselves hung up once again with no Government over the weekend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has propounded a unanimous-consent request. Are there objections?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, might I explain to my fellow Senators, this is by no means an effort to dispose of the amendments. This takes care of four Senators who have been requesting to be recognized. We have about an hour left and we have asked those Senators to reduce their time. One major amendment is 10 minutes. We would like to get on these, and we will start a list for those that follow. This is not conclusive; we are going to have some more, and we will start working on them, but we would like to get on with these.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving the right to object, and I might object, this Senator has been waiting for 2 days to get recognized to offer an amendment. I know what is going on. I know people do not want this amendment, but it is going to come up. I am going to offer this amendment. Under the rules when all time expires, I can offer it. Obviously, there will be no time for discussion. I just hope, in the interest of fairness, that this Senator will at least get recognized. I have been waiting 2 days. My name was first on the list that was published yesterday to offer that amendment, and somehow that list got put aside.

I keep hearing these unanimous consents come up to recognize different people for different amendments. I might not object if I could get included in that. Give me about 20 minutes, equally divided, or 30 minutes, equally divided, on my amendment and I probably will not object. But it seems quite unfair that other people can step in and get a unanimous-consent request to go ahead when this Senator's name was the first on the list yesterday.

Mr. HOLLINGS. If the distinguished Senator will yield, we have been waiting 2 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please withhold. The Senate is not in order. The Senate is not in order. Senators at the rear of the Chamber, please adjourn to the cloakroom.

The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee if Harkin-Riegle, and a whole list of other people that are on this amendment, SIMON, MIKULSKI, HATFIELD, DECONCINI, GRAHAM, and others, if we could have our amendment listed there, too?

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator would allow us to proceed here—we are simply burning up time on the bill discussing these matters—if the Senator will allow us to proceed here, then we will attempt to accommodate the Senator from Iowa, and any other Senators who have amendments here, within the time that is left.

But I point out to my colleagues that we have wasted about 5 to 10 minutes here just discussing back and forth. Let us get going on this under this unanimous-consent request, then let us meet with the Senator from Iowa and any other Senator to work out a unanimous-consent request under which they can proceed. It appears to me that is the logical way to move.

Mr. HARKIN. If the distinguished chairman will yield further, I am just counting up the time that this unanimous consent is going to take and how much time is left on the bill. May we be informed of that? After all of this discussion—you have a half-hour on the Hatch amendment, and some other time in here—how much time is going to be left on the bill?

Mr. SASSER. We have a half-hour on the Hatch amendment, 3 minutes for Senator METZENBAUM, 10 minutes for Senators HOLLINGS and HEINZ, 3 minutes for Senator STEVENS. That is going to leave us, I think, adequate time to take up two or three other amendments if Senators will be reasonable about the time that they wish to discuss them.

But we can continue to stand here and talk about how we are going to proceed and use up all the time, I submit, Mr. President.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, again, if the distinguished chairman can assure me that I will get at least 20 minutes, 10 per side, to offer my amendment, I will not object. But, like I said, I have been waiting 2 days now. I cannot seem to even get that much time. I would like to have a half-hour, but I understand the time constraints. If I could have 20 minutes, that would be fine.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, at this juncture I cannot assure any Senator how much time they would be allowed. We will do our best to accommodate the Senator from Iowa. But Senator DOMENICI and I have about five or six other Senators who are coming in here wanting time on their amendments, and they are saying that they have had their amendments at the desk and filed since the reconciliation bill was taken up.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wonder if Senator HARKIN would do this for us. Senator HATCH has just agreed that he would reduce his time to 10 minutes on each side, instead of 30. And if the Senator would let us proceed, we will work with him and Senator NICKLES, who have been waiting the longest, and see what we can do and follow it up as soon as we can.

Mr. HARKIN. With that good-faith assurance, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, there are some extremely onerous provisions that are in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please suspend. The Senate is not in order. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from New York.

Mr. D'AMATO. There are some extremely onerous provisions in this bill, Mr. President, that have absolutely nothing to do with budget reconciliation. It talks about airport expansion, slots, noise. As a matter of fact, it goes from page 65 of the bill to page 104. I think probably it contains more in there than any other provision, even, that does deal with reconciliation. This Senator has attempted to work with the administration and with others. I do not believe, in the short period of time that is left, we are going to be able to do that. I am going to say that I want to serve notice now, and I have indicated to the authors of this legislation, I am going to move to strike, and I hope that the administration and the leadership will be supportive of this effort. I do not want to get caught in a situation where we are down at the end, where, at 11 o'clock at night or 12 o'clock at night, everybody is running every which way. I would like to be assured we are going to have an opportunity. I do not mind an orderly flow. That is why I mention that to the managers of the bill.

Mr. SASSER. We will attempt to work it out with the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. D'AMATO. So I am in no way precluded. I hope we do not get in a situation where we find ourselves with the clock ticking at 10 o'clock or 9 o'clock, and I hope that I am going to have that opportunity.

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend from New York, it is not going to be that late because we do not have that much time left. But I am sure the Senator is aware that, even if we run out of time, any Senator who has an amendment filed can call it up at that time or make a motion to strike. You are not precluded from doing that.

So, Mr. President, I renew at this time my unanimous-consent request in order that we can get started and get underway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise to raise the point of order at this time against two particular provisions, on page 1017, line 5, through page 1018, line 19, and on page 1018, line 22, through page 1019, line 18. The point of order is that these two provisions violate section (D)(1)(d) of the Byrd rule. We have been discouraged from including extraneous matters unrelated to deficit reduction.

I should point out that the matters that I am urging be stricken from the bill are matters that are in the Labor Committee's title of the bill. They are in my proposals. I agree with the leaders that we should discourage extraneous matters in this package.

We consulted with the Budget Committee experts before including the OSHA criminal penalty provisions in the reconciliation package. Based on the revenue estimate by the Congressional Budget Office, those experts indicated that the criminal penalty provisions were not extraneous under the Byrd rule. But I understand this may be a close question. I want to support the leaders in their effort to keep extraneous provisions out of this package; therefore I am willing to put the question to the Chair and to abide by the Chair's ruling.

If the Chair rules that the OSHA criminal penalty provisions of subtitle B of title X of this bill are extraneous, this Senator will not challenge that ruling.

Therefore I raise a point of order that the OSHA criminal penalty provisions, page 1017, line 5, to page 1019, line 18, not including lines 20 to 21 on page 1018, are extraneous provisions because the budget impact is merely incidental to the nonbudget aspects of the proposal under section D(1)(d) of the Byrd rule, which is section 20001 D(1)(d) of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the two points of order will be resolved together by the Chair, in conjunction.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I am sorry, I did not hear the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the two points of order will be resolved together, in conjunction.

The Chair sustains the point of order on the basis that the budgetary savings are incidental to the provision.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senator from Utah is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 3032

(Purpose: To strike provisions relating to minimum penalty levels under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Mr. PRYOR and Mr. KERREY of Nebraska, Mr. COATS, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. COCHRAN, and myself, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for himself, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. KERREY, Mr. COATS, Mr. NICKLES, and Mr. COCHRAN, proposes an amendment numbered 3032.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1016, lines 17 through 19, strike ", but not less than $5,000 for each willful violation and not less than $1,000 for each repeated violation";

On page 1016, lines 22 and 23, strike ", but not less than $500 for each such violation"; and

On page 1017, lines 1 and 2, strike ", but not less than $100 for each such violation"

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators PRYOR, KERREY, COATS, NICKLES, COCHRAN, and myself, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be waived.

Mr. President, the motion-to-strike I am offering at this time addresses a very important policy issue which I believe cannot be ignored in our haste to reach a budget agreement.

In the budget package before us, there is a provision which would establish, for the first time, minimum penalties which must be assessed for violations of the Occupational Safety and Health Act. The issue is an unprecedented expansion of the Occupational Safety and Health Act. I am not sure that we have adequately considered the significance of this policy shift.

Under section 17 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act, "any individual who willfully or repeatedly violates the requirements * * * of the Act * * * may be assessed a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each violation." That is current law.

This proposal would expand this to require a mandatory minimum penalty.

Requiring a minimum penalty would be especially onerous for small businesses who cannot afford the time and expense of challenging the penalty in settlement conferences—which would be the only way for the employer to have the penalty reduced.

I suggest that we stop for a moment before accepting this proposal on face value and ask ourselves why Congress did not include penalty floors when enacting the Occupational Safety and Health Act in 1970.

I maintain that there were some excellent reasons for excluding mandatory floors then and that the same reasons apply today.

Not that many years ago, there was widespread agreement across the country that OSHA was a miserable failure. Organized labor critized the agency for being totally ineffective; small businesses classified the agency as the most abusive in the Federal Government.

What had OSHA done to deserve this reputation? The answer is that at least then, OSHA fostered confrontation rather than cooperation—the product of their workplace visits was to initiate a drawn-out legal process rather than to institute changes that would contribute to the safety and health of workers.

Today, OSHA has earned new respect from workers, labor leaders, and businesspersons alike.

Perhaps there is disagreement over priorities, but no one doubts the sincerity of OSHA efforts to promote cooperation—cooperation which leads to the more rapid abatement of workplace hazards. Such cooperation has not come without a conscious effort. Through hard work and mutual trust, OSHA has created an atmosphere in which small businesses across the Nation no longer think of OSHA as a dirty word. This change in attitude serves everyone well.

That frames the policy issue we face today. The provisions for minimum OSHA penalties in this reconciliation bill asks us to trade rapid abatement of workplace hazards for revenue increases. Currently, OSHA has discretion to assess penalties based on the circumstances, as well as the severity of the violation. Setting floors on penalties will tie OSHA's hands and their enforcement effectiveness.

The bottom line is that the flexibility to assess penalty levels is essential to OSHA's ability to tailor their enforcement efforts to the circumstances at hand. And, in doing so, OSHA is able to avoid confrontation and ill-will in favor of cooperation and rapid abatement.

Now, I do not want anyone to confuse minimum penalty floors with OSHA going light on businesses who violate standards. In fact, just let me share a few of the press releases which have crossed my desk in the last few months dealing with OSHA's handling of businesses who violate the act:

This release is dated April 19, 1990. It reads: "Dole Proposes More Than $6 Million in Penalties."

Here is a release dated November 1, 1989. It reads: "Dole Announces Record $7.3 Million in Proposed OSHA Penalties."

Does that sound like an agency who wants to go lightly on businesses who violate standards and place the safety and health of workers in jeopardy?

Lastly, Mr. President, I want to make it clear that the institution of any penalty floors and the criminalization of OSHA is a small business issue. Let me read a letter from the National Federation of Independent Business which explains why this is the case and why small business organizations such as the NFIB will be key voting this motion to strike.

The Labor Committee provisions in the reconciliation package are likely to include the establishment of minimum OSHA fines, and criminal penalties. These changes are blatantly unfair to small businesses and are likely to result in a marked deterioration in workplace safety.

The ability to negotiate fines is vital to small businesses and OSHA. Often, high penalties do not fit the crime. In other cases, targeting limited resources toward abatement is more important than fining businesses.

The original purpose behind OSHA penalties was to improve the health and safety of American workers—not to raise revenue. If safety is still the goal, inflexible penalties will destroy further progress.

This letter from John J. Motley III, vice president of Federal Governmental Relations at the National Federation of Independent Business ends as follows:

I urge you to support amendments to delete the above changes in OSHA penalties. Votes on these amendments will be considered Key Small Business Votes for the 101st Congress.

The issue here is much more than revenue gain. The issue is whether we will today make a sweeping policy change in OSHA which will influence how it is able to perform its job in the future.

Mr. President, the Labor Committee can meet its reconciliation instructions without these floors, and without jeopardizing the progress being made to improve safety and health in the workplace.

In closing, Mr. President, last night, I received a statement of administration policy relevant, in part, to this issue. Let me read from this document:

The Senate bill raises the ceilings on most OSHA and MSHA fines, and makes certain safety and health violations of OSHA a criminal offense. While the Administration has agreed that some increase in OSHA and MSHA fines may be acceptable, it strongly objects to provisions that would include floors in the amount of fines that may be levied and would criminalize certain OSHA violations. If the floors on fines and the OSHA criminal provisions are included in the version of the bill that is submitted to the President for signature, the President's senior advisors would recommend that the bill be vetoed.

My amendment covers nothing more than those areas addressed in this SAP. And, because the Labor and Human Resources Committee's reconciliation instructions are not violated by this amendment, there is no consequence other than to rid this package of major, unprecedented expansions of OSHA law which are not needed to satisfy the goals of deficit reduction.

With passage of this amendment, the Labor Committee still meets our reconciliation instructions.

Mr. President, with out losing my rights to the floor, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not in order. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank the chair for recognizing me and I thank my good friend from Utah for yielding for just a very short time—2 to 3 minutes.

What we have just done by Senator Metzenbaum of Ohio raising the point of order about the extraneous matter in this bill, is to remove the criminal sanctions—the new criminal sanctions, senators—that were imposed in this legislation and give new authorities to the OSHA inspectors to provide a new system, of guilt and penalties, and expand those penalties even to members of the boards of directors of companies where there are violations of OSHA laws.

I join with the distinguished Senator from Utah in taking this a step further. It says in the amendment of the Senator that in this legislation the minimum floor will be removed now from the civil penalties. For example, if an inspector find a violation, the minimum floor is $5,000. He has to charge that business $5,000, rather than, if it is a minor violation, perhaps $300.

The amendment of the Senator from Utah clarifies that and eliminates this floor. The problem with the amendment of the Senator from Utah that I am a cosponsor of, is that I wish it went further and addressed the five fold increase in penalties. It is my fear—not necessarily in this amendment but in the legislation before us—we are going to create a new wave of OSHA inspectors who are revenue agents raising revenue, and a new generation of bounty hunters, who are going to be out there attempting to meet financial quotas and financial demands to comply with the Budget Act.

Next year when we can get this issue extricated from this 1,600 pages of budget morass, I am going to attempt, and I hope my colleagues are going to attempt, to study this issue to see if we cannot roll back these severe penalties that this legislation imposes upon business.

I wish the amendment went further. I think if we do not agree to the amendment we are going to absolutely wreck hundreds and hundreds of small businesses out there because many agents of OSHA are going to be established and hit with a quota and mandated figures that they should raise.

I applaud the Senator from Utah for this amendment. I am proud to be a cosponsor of it, and I think it is at least a step in the right direction.

Next year, early in the year, I hope we can complete some other steps to see exactly how high these penalties should be. Frankly, I think they are going to be too high. I wish we could lower them.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah controls 11 minutes 9 seconds.

Mr. HATCH. We had agreed to reduce the time down to 10 minutes, and I asked 2 minutes to be given to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

I would like to have at least 8 minutes left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asked unanimous consent for 8 minutes?

Mr. HATCH. Both sides only have 10 minutes on this. I would like to have 8 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SASSER. Reserving the right to object. I did not hear the unanimous consent.

Mr. HATCH. As I understood it, we agreed to divide 20 minutes equally. I yielded 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, but he went a little longer than that. The Chair did not rule. I would at least like to have 8 minutes left because I have to yield some time to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma as well, and then the other side, of course, has 10 minutes as well.

Mr. SASSER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Utah controls 8 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I am delighted to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague, Senator HATCH, and join with him as a cosponsor to strike the minimum penalties under the OSHA provisions. This language was originally going to strike both the civil and criminal penalties under the bill. However, the Senator from Ohio has just stricken the criminal provisions by point of order. They need to be stricken. We should not put criminal penalties in this bill, so I am glad they were taken out. That was a very serious objection of mine which I discussed last night. I will not repeat that discussion.

We should not try to set criminal penalties in this bill. We also should not have the increase in civil penalties that we have in this bill. In the amendment that Senator HATCH, Senator PRYOR, and I have, we eliminate at least the minimum penalties. That is a giant step in the right direction. We should not have minimum penalties in this bill such as $100 for what we call "other than serious violations." That can amount to a fine for trash on the floor.

Did my colleagues know that OSHA issued thousands of those citations, I think 60,000 to 90,000 of "other than serious," and we are going to say that each citation has to be for $100. On most of the citations last year, OSHA said "no penalty", just clean up the trash or do what needs to be done to comply.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that documents relating to OSHA inspection activity and the penalties they assessed, together with a detailed statement be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Do we want to have OSHA running around the country now trying to raise a lot of money? Under this bill we say that OSHA and MSHA will raise over $1 billion in 5 years. Do my colleagues know how much money they raised last year? Last year, 1989, OSHA assessed penalties of $66 million. They adjusted those down to $51 million. And $22 million is still being contested.

So their net for 1989 was $26 million, but in this bill we say we are going to raise over $200 million a year. We are going to increase the fines and penalty by five times.

That is absurd. We will have OSHA inspectors going out and having to assess unbelievable penalties. And these regulations are not comprehensible.

This is one volume. OSHA field inspectors take this with them. They have to have six; six volumes of regulations to implement so-called safety standards.

I am interested in OSHA doing a good job to increase safety in America's workplaces, but frankly, Mr. President, if we do not reduce the assessments, penalties, and fines under this provision, we will have small businesses either being put out of business, or small business harassed by the Department of Labor. Instead of really working together to make changes, to make adjustments, to eliminate some of the problems in the workplace, they are going to be in court because they are going to be assessed and they are going to be fighting those assessments. We will increase litigation between the Department of Labor and employers. That is not satisfactory to this Senator. We are going to have to redress this and change these penalties that are called for in this legislation. OSHA will not be able to raise a billion dollars under this provision over the next 5 years. It will not happen.

Several statements have been made on the floor today regarding the removal of minimum penalties under the Occupational Safety and Health Act. The opponents of striking the minimum penalties have told stories of tragic situations where employees are injured or killed as a result of negligence on behalf of the employer.

I listen with great sympathy and sadness to these terrible stories where employees are injured. As a manufacturer, I felt a strong responsibility to provide a safe workplace for my employees. I think most employers are very serious about ensuring the safety of the workplace.

My colleagues from Massachusetts and Ohio have argued that employees are being injured and maimed at the workplace, and employers are not being penalized adequately. The Senator from Ohio described a situation where a woman lost her hands in a machine which the employer neglected to provide certain safety precautions.

Senators should not be misled to believe that this amendment would prohibit OSHA from fining employers under these egregious situations. This amendment simply strikes the minimum penalties or so-called floor. It does not effect the maximum penalties which may be assessed against an employer. OSHA can still penalize the employer up to five times the current penalties under law.

For example, in the situation that my colleague from Ohio described, if the employer were cited for a willful violation of the OSHA safety standards, OSHA could fine the employer up to $50,000 per violation. This amendment does not prevent the maximum penalization of employers in these egregious situations.

Instead, this amendment would strike the provision which sets a new floor for OSHA penalties. Under current law, OSHA often cites a company for a violation and does not fine the employer if he comes into compliance. This situation works well because in many cases, the violation is not likely to cause death or serious injury, but simply is classified as "other than serious." OSHA issues 60 to 90 thousand of these a year and always requires correction but usually does not fine the employer.

For example, if the worksite contains debris. OSHA would issue a citation but generally no penalty. Another example is an employer who lawfully maintains medical records of an employee and makes those records available to the employee but fails to give the employee the name of the person to contact to obtain the record. This is a violation of the Act and was cited 671 times in fiscal year 1990. The violation was corrected in each case but fines were generally not issued.

Another example. The employer maintained a log of injuries but was one day late in recording the occupational injury. He recorded the injury on the 7th day following the injury instead of the 6th day as required. OSHA issued a citation and assured that the process was corrected but again did not fine the company.

Let us look at our goal here. Our goal is not to harass and eventually wipe out small businesses. Instead the goal is to provide a safe environment for employees. These minimum penalties will not further safety and health in the workplace. Instead, they will simply unduly burden small business, without necessarily making gains in workplace safety.

The Department of Labor is opposed to the establishment of minimum penalties (floors) under the OSH Act.

(1) The recommended floors reduce OSHA's flexibility in dealing with an employer who has violated the OSH Act.

In adopting the OSH Act Congress intended that OSHA have flexibility in issuing civil penalties. No floors were established and OSHA is required to consider such factors as the employers citation history, the seriousness of the violation and size of the company. Monetary maximum penalties under the Act are thus available to OSHA for purposes of deterrence and punishment. The current OSH Act has a range of maximum penalties graduating from $1,000 for the other than serious or serious violations to $10,000 for repeat violations or willful violations. In 1989 OSHA, in fact, proposed a range of fines from $0 to over $7 million (USX) for violations of the OSH Act. Minimum penalties would not appear to be necesary to assure that the more serious violations are addressed by OSHA so as to accomplish the objectives of the Act.

Further, OSHA's enforcement program is not only aimed at punishment and deterrence it is aimed at abatement of hazards and agreements which assure protection of the workers. OSHA will often through settlement reduce a penalty if the company agrees to the plan that will enhance long term worker safety and health at the facility.

Further, under current law, a company is not required to abate a hazard until final resolution of the case. The proposed minimums will reduce OSHA's flexibility in abating hazards and in all probability delay abatement of hazards.

Flexibility Example:

A small beryllium copper casting company was cited for a willful violation of the Act. The company allowed molten material to fall into water creating steam which burned an employee. OSHA proposed a willful penalty of $10,000.00 The company and OSHA settled on the following: The company would (1) pay a $2,000 penalty; (2) implement the following (not specifically required by the Act)—(a) preventive equipment maintenance program (b) written operating procedures (c) a comprehensive training program; and (3) redesign its entire process to eliminate hazards.

OSHA believes it achieved much more for worker safety and health at this facility with this agreement than it would have with an inflexible $5,000 minimum penalty (as required by the Senate Labor proposal.)

(2) The level of the proposed minimums is unnecessarily burdensome to small business.

This is contrary to the past intent of Congress as expressed in the OSH Act. Congress intended that OSHA have flexibility and certainly did not intend that OSHA put a small business out of business. Currently OSHA is required under the Act to consider many factors including the size of a business in proposing and assessing civil penalties. Currently OSHA may propose a penalty level for a small business which it considers adequate punishment or deterrent but which may be less than the minimum level proposed in the Senate Labor package.

Two minimum penalty levels in the Senate Labor Committee floors which are particularly inappropriate for small business are the willful penalty of $5,000 and the other than serious penalty of $100.

An example of the willful penalty proposals effect on small business follows:

A small sawmill business was cited for a willful violation of the OSH Act. The company did not have a written hazard communication program for the employees (although the company did have information on the workplace chemicals available to its employees). The company had 20 employees at the worksite. OSHA proposed a penalty of $1,000 and settled for $500 and correction of the hazard. The company agreed not to contest.

Under the Senate Committee Proposal, the minimum penalty would be $5,000.00. Such penalties are likely to be contested proving costly to OSHA but more importantly delaying abatement of the hazard. Further, such a penalty may be inappropriately burdensome to a small company as the one above.

Another category which has inappropriate minimums is the "other than serious".

OSHA cites for "other than serious" when there is a violation of the Act but the violation is not likely to cause death or serious injury. OSHA issues 60 to 90 thousand of these a year and always requires correction but usually does not fine the employer.

"Other than Serious" Examples:

1. A worksite contains debris. OSHA would issue a citation but generally no penalty.

2. An employer lawfully maintains medical records of an employee and makes those records available to the employee but fails to give the employee the name of the person to contact to obtain the record. This is a violation of the Act and was cited 671 times in FY 1990. The violation was corrected in each case but fines were generally not issued.

3. The employer maintained a log of injuries but was one day late in recording an occupational injury. He recorded the injury on the 7th day following the injury instead of the 6th day as required. OSHA issued a citation and assured that the process was corrected but again did not fine the company.

All of these "other than serious" violations of the Act which are not likely to cause death or serious injury would require a $100 fine under the proposed Senate Committee bill. This poses an unnecessary burden on a small business and is not likely to promote an OSHA/employer relationship which furthers safety and health in the workplace.

The result of the Senate proposal may in fact backfire with regard to safety and health in that OSHA inspectors may avoid issuing appropriate citations (and following up on the hazard).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator has expired.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Nebraska, Mr. EXON, is a cosponsor and I yield 1 minute.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend and colleague. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this amendment. Time and time again on this floor, we have had discussions with regard to what we do and do not do to penalize small businesses, in particular, and large businesses as well. The amendment that has been offered by the Senator from Utah is the minimum action we should take at this time, and I hope we can take it swiftly. The very concept of trying to balance the Federal budget by increasing fines in this fashion not only is unconscionable, it is unworkable. I hope we swiftly agree to this amendment. I thank my friend for yielding time.

Mr. HATCH. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no amendments be in order to the Hollings-Heinz amendment, to follow that on the list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the amendment that is being urged by the distinguished Senator from Utah and others would reduce the committee-reported savings by $300 million over 5 years. The bill that was reported out of the Labor Committtee was scored as saving $1.1 billion. We are now down to $800 million, and $1.1 billion beyond the committee's instruction for civil penalties and that met their instruction. Now we are reducing the savings. These penalties at the $1.1 billion level were assumed, I might say, in the original summit agreement. Everybody agreed on it: The administration, the Representatives of both Houses of both parties.

They have been around for a long time, and the question here is the same as it has been on other amendments that have been debated today: Are we simply going to jettison savings, throw them away and increase the deficit because we do not happen to agree with a particular policy?

The committees have already modified their policy without a major budget loss by eliminating criminal penalties. And that is as it should be. We have no disagreement with that. Let us not open the floodgate now and let $300 million escape here to be followed by $1 billion somewhere 15 minutes from now, and $2 or $3 billion 30 minutes from now, and before we know it, this package is going to be severely reduced. I urge my colleagues to consider the financial and fiscal implications of the amendment being proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield for a point?

Mr. SASSER. No, I will not yield. We are running out of time.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield to me on this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield just for a question?

Mr. SASSER. Just for one quick question.

Mr. METZENBAUM. On whose time?

Mr. HATCH. Let me do it as quickly as I can.

Mr. METZENBAUM. On whose time?

Mr. HATCH. I only have 4 minutes left.

As I understand it, it is simple mathematics. The budget committee reconciliation instructions required the Labor Committee to reduce the deficit by $3.480 billion over 5 years. The committee bill produces a total of $3.788 billion, or a surplus of $308 million over 5 years. That is what is in our instructions. Simply stated, then, the reductions in revenue which would result from the elimination of the penalty floors covered by this amendment would total $279 million. That is less than the $308 million surplus. In other words, absent the penalty floors, we would still fall below our instruction by $29 million.

Mr. SASSER. Let me respond, and then I will yield to the Senator from Ohio. We have a double account. The Labor Committee and the Finance Committee are counting the same thing. We cannot count the same savings twice, I say to my distinguished friend from Utah.

Let me yield now to the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. How much time is left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 6 minutes 27 seconds.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask I be allocated half that time and the remainder to Senator KENNEDY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee so allocates.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, OSHA civil penalties are included in reconciliation because they are necessary to meet the Labor Committee's budget instruction. The Budget Committee instructed the Labor Committee to do it. In order to help meet that instruction, we raised OSHA civil penalty ceilings by five times and instituted mandatory minimums.

But this is more than just a matter of budget policy. It is the right thing to do. It is about saving the lives and limbs of America's workers.

These changes to not target small business. The penalties only impact employers who break the law. I understand it is politically convenient to beat up on OSHA or to suggest that somebody is going to be hurt unnecessarily, but these are people who are violating the law. Let us be honest. What you are really saying is "Let's beat up on America's workers and do not ask the employers to have any responsibility in connection with violations of the law."

Civil penalties have never been adjusted in the 20-year history of OSHA. That means it is now cheaper to violate the law than it is to obey the law. Everyone who has looked at this program agrees we must increase OSHA civil penalties. The inspector general at the Department of Labor insists that we must increase penalties to stop needless injuries and deaths. The General Accounting Office recently completed a study documenting the need to increase deterrence, including higher OSHA civil penalties. Penalties of 20 years ago are not credible today.

The current civil penalty structure is an embarrassment that produces gross injustices. Under the current system, a steel mill in Pennsylvania was cited for serious violations but fined only $1,000 when a worker was literally boiled alive when he was doused with scalding water. I challenge my colleagues to explain to that man's widow that the current fine structure is fair.

Under the current system, OSHA cited a contractor for eight violations when a scaffold collapsed killing a young worker. The total civil fine imposed, $800. You tell me that we should not be raising it. I challenge my colleagues to explain to that young man's family in Kansas that current civil penalties are too onerous.

Under the current system, an auto parts maker in Michigan was cited for willful and repeated violations when a stamping machine chopped a woman's hands off: she has no hands any more. If the employer installed a safety device in the machine as previously ordered by inspectors, that mother of three children would have her hands today. The total civil fine that the employer paid in the case—the magnificent sum of $100. I challenge my colleagues to look that worker in the eye and tell her, without hands, that current OSHA civil fines are a burden on law-abiding employers.

There are thousands of cases like these every year and you come to the floor and say the burden is too great on employers. I ask you to talk to those employees who have lost their arms and to the families of workers who lost their lives. By eliminating floors, we lose nearly $300 million in revenues over 5 years. We cannot, we must not eliminate the mandatory minimums. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will be glad to respond. Can I go now or before I hear the arguments of the proponent?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I want to speak in support of the amendment, although I did agree with the Senator from Ohio that we needed to increase the maximum penalties because inflation had put them in a situation where they were somewhat ridiculous, compared to the seriousness. I also supported criminal penalties. I do not support them in this bill, and I do not support the minimum if it is not necessary to reach our quota that we had before our committee. As I understand it, it is not necessary to do so because by doing that, by putting the minimums in here we allow substantial penalties for trivial things.

In my mind, we will interfere with the process of trying to reconcile differences between business and OSHA. If we err, we should err on the side of tampering as little as possible with these very basic problems that we have to deal with in this particular area. So I urge that the Hatch amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes 54 seconds.

Mr. HATCH. In sum, Mr. President, this is the small business amendment of the year. Penalty floors of $5,000, $1,000, and so forth are going to drive small businesses wild. They cannot afford to defend this type of thing in legal proceedings. Minimum penalties cut away the flexibility that OSHA needs to be able to do its job.

I can tell you right now last year OSHA, under its egregious policy, penalized several businesses in the multimillion dollar range. They are not loathe to do that when it is appropriate. The thing that caused OSHA to fall into despise a few years ago is that it had forsaken the cooperative spirit Congress envisioned it to be, and had turned into a burdensome bureaucracy that interfered with small business. OSHA had turned cooperation into confrontation. Nothing can be worse than what they are trying to do here because a return to confrontation is what we will accomplish if we knock these floors away. And for what? We are within the committee's budget reconciliation instructions by eliminating these senseless penalty floors.

The statement I read into the RECORD from the National Federation of Independent Businesses covers this matter about as well as it can be covered by saying that this is a detrimental approach toward small business. This amendment will alleviate that detrimental approach.

I have to tell you, OSHA has a good role to play in ensuring workplace safety and health. And, it does play a good role with positive results. It penalizes those who should be penalized. But, now it has the flexibility to tailor those penalties to the circumstances. Workplaces all over America are benefiting from the cooperative spirit OSHA has worked to achieve. Small business people are not oppressed and abused like they were before this type of cooperation started. It is working now, but, the reconciliation package would jeopardize that by mandating unreasonable penalties that are going to be assessed, must be assessed in every case. What I am saying is that the small business person does not have the power, the money, the means or the force to be able to do anything about it.

So it just forces the bureaucracy to once again put us back to the situation 20 years ago, or 10 years ago when everybody, every small business person hated OSHA. The days when OSHA did not work for us, but against us. The days when everybody fought everything, and in the end, what happened was small business was crushed into a noncooperative spirit.

This is what my amendment is trying to prevent. This amendment will help to do that. It is the small business amendment, and I think everybody here ought to stop and consider that.

I hope our colleagues will look at this particular issue and realize it does not deserve to pass. It does not deserve to be in this reconciliation bill. And, frankly, we ought to stop it right now, particularly since we can do so without falling below our reconciliation instructions.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has yielded the remainder of his time to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I understand there are 3 minutes remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes fifty seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. First of all, Mr. President, the chairman of the Budget Committee has made it very clear that the Labor and Human Resources Committee is not in compliance with its budget instructions if we knock out these various floors for OSHA civil penalties.

Second, where did the Human Resources Committee find the savings necessary to comply with its instructions? We had to do it by penalizing every young person in America who is on a student loan program. You cannot have it both ways. If you knock out $300 million in revenues here, it is going to be paid for in another way and it is going to be taken out on the backs of the young men and women of this country, make no mistake about it.

We are talking about minimum civil penalties for those employees who are violating the law—not innocent individuals, but violators of the law. I dispute the statement of the Senator from Utah that the record in this country in terms of workplace health and safety and loss of life has improved in the last 5 years. It has not, and the record shows it.

What we are talking about are minimum penalties for serious violations, willful violations, repeated violations of minimal health and safety standards—violations which can and do cost workers their health and even their lives.

Mr. President, the minimum penalties specified here are only the amounts that must be assessed when OSHA finds a violation. We are not preventing the agency from settling cases for lower amounts. This is the initial assessment. Once a fine is assessed, the agency retains discretion as to how it is going to eventually get a settlement.

The fact is that current OSHA penalties amount to a minor slap on the wrist for those businesses in this country that willfully, seriously, knowingly, repeatedly violate minimum health and safety standards, and as has been pointed out in this debate, in the 20 years since OSHA was enacted, we have not adjusted the penalties prescribed in the act. The issue is, are we serious about protecting American workers or are we not?

Mr. President, those who are prepared to strike these minimum penalties have failed to offer any proposal as to how we can come up with additional revenue or savings to offset the loss of revenue from striking these provisions other than by taking it out of the hides of young people by making even deeper cuts in our student loan program. This is irresponsible. It is simply irresponsible to say "I insist that you cut this $300 million in revenues out of the budget package and I do not have anything to suggest about how to make it up."

Mr. President, I withhold the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have 28 seconds.

It is not irresponsible. The administration agrees and in their statement of the administration policy they say they will veto the bill over something like this. They base this statement on fact; this type of an approach takes away flexibility from an agency that used to be terrible and now is functioning well. Like me, the administration fears OSHA will be made terrible again if this amendment does not pass.

I hope everybody who cares anything about small business will look at the issue of minimum penalties for what they will really do. If they will, I think they will be voting with us and helping us to stop this type of tragedy from occurring.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield back his time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I am prepared to yield it back.

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The Senator from Wisconsin.

CHANGE OF VOTE

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, on the vote on the amendment offered by Senators NUNN and BOREN, I was recorded in the negative. I ask unanimous consent to change my vote and be recorded in the affirmative. It will make no change in terms of the outcome of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The foregoing tally has been corrected to reflect the change.)

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I was obviously troubled by this amendment. I initially voted against it and then asked unanimous consent to change my vote and be recorded in the affirmative. I would like to briefly explain why.

I had previously voted for an increased tax on the most wealthy Americans and for a reduction in the gasoline tax that would hit so many middle-income Americans. So the issue on this vote revolved around capital gains.

I have always favored some form of a capital gains differential. But when I initially cast my vote, I was under the impression that this amendment, like so many capital gains proposals, would gave undue advantages to the richest among us. When I had the opportunity to study the specific language of the amendment, however, it became clear to me that the capital gains break is targeted so that its benefit would go primarily to Americans who were realizing a one-time gain through the sale of a single asset, like a farm or a home or small business, which they had held for several years. This was not, then, an attempt to help out stock speculators or those who simply churn their investments in an effort to gain a quick profit without doing much for the economy as a whole.

Since the benefits of the proposal are narrowly targeted and will serve to primarily help middle-income Americans, I believe this amendment deserves our support.

In closing, I want to indicate that my support for any capital gains provision which may come back from the conference on this bill or come before the Senate at some future date will depend on the degree to which it is carefully targeted and restricted so that its benefits do not flow excessively to the very richest among us.[S18OC0-M3]{S15777}among us.

AMENDMENT NO. 3033

(Purpose: To exclude the Social Security trust funds from the deficit calculation)

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator HEINZ, Senator MOYNIHAN, and myself, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HOLLINGS], for himself, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. GRASSLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 3033.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . SOCIAL SECURITY PRESERVATION ACT.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Social Security Preservation Act".

(b) DEFINITION OF DEFICIT.—(1) The second sentence of paragraph (6) of section 3 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 622(6)) is repealed.

(2) Section 275(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901 note) is amended by striking out "and the second sentence of section 3(6) of such Act (as added by section 201(a)(1) of this joint resolution)".

(c) SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—Subsection (a) of section 710 of the Social Security Act is amended by striking "shall not be included in the totals of the budget" and inserting "shall not be included in the budget deficit or any other totals of the budget".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (b) and (c) shall apply with respect to fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1990.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the Senate at long last gets the opportunity to vote on taking the Social Security trust fund off budget. This is a simple measure with an all-important public purpose: to preserve the integrity of the Social Security trust fund by removing the huge Social Security surpluses from calculations of the budget for purposes of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

This amendment passed by a bipartisan 20 to 1 vote in the Budget Committee 2 months ago. If signed into law, it will move us one giant step closer to exposing the true size and scale of the Federal budget deficit and attaining truth in budgeting. Unmasking the true deficit is, in turn, the essential precondition for rallying public support behind a meaningful effort to reduce the deficit through significant spending cuts and tax increases. And, ultimately, the only way to truly protect and preserve the Social Security trust fund surpluses is to balance the budget and, indeed, begin to run the Government in the black.

The fact is that more than half of the annual Federal budget deficit is now hidden from public attention due to accounting tricks and quirks. To illustrate the problem, I would note that on July 16, Office of Management and Budget Director unveiled a reestimated, midyear fiscal 1991 deficit projection which he claimed to be $168.8 billion, excluding the megabillions to be spent on the S&L bailout. Mr. Darman's $168.9 billion figure depends on two things. First, it depends on counting off budget upward to $100 billion in S&L bailout spending in 1991, which is by no means a foregone conclusion inasmuch as, under current law, all future S&L spending will in fact be counted on budget. Second, it depends on counting on-budget the huge Social Security trust fund surplus. In other words, the game is this: Anything that decreases the deficit is counted on-budget, and anything that increases the deficit is put off. However, if we take the honest approach of putting S&L bailout expenses on-budget while putting the Social Security surpluses off-budget, then we see that the true fiscal year 1991 deficit estimate is closer to $400 billion—more than two times bigger than Mr. Darman's fanciful $168.8 billion.

Mr. President, in all the great jambalaya of frauds surrounding the budget, surely the most reprehensible is the systematic and total ransacking of the Social Security trust fund in order to mask the true size of the deficit. As we all know, the Social Security payroll tax has become a money machine for the U.S. Treasury, generating fantastic revenue surpluses in excess of the costs of the Social Security program. Excess Social Security tax revenues were $65 billion in 1990 alone—boosted by yet another rise in the Social Security tax rate this past January 1. In fiscal year 1991, the surplus will be $73 billion. By 1993, the annual Social Security surplus will soar to $95 billion. The surplus will be $484 billion over the 5 years of this bill.

The public fully supported enactment of hefty new Social Security taxes in 1983 to ensure the retirement program's long-term solvency and credibility. The promise was that today's huge surpluses would be set safely aside in a trust fund to provide for baby-boomer retirees in the next century.

Well, look again. The Treasury is siphoning off every dollar of the Social Security surplus to meet current operating expenses of the Government. By thus reducing the deficit, we mask the true enormity of the Federal budget crisis while creating the illusion that Congress and the administration are actually doing something about deficits.

The hard fact is that, in the next century, the Social Security system will find itself paying out vastly more in benefits than it is taking in through payroll taxes. And the American people will wake up to the reality that those IOUs in the trust fund vault are a 21st century version of Confederate war bonds.

Of course, the Treasury would have the option of raising taxes to repay the astronomical sums we have borrowed from the trust fund. But that would be a brazen rip-off of working Americans, many of whom will be retirees obliged to pay a second time for the benefits they have already earned.

On the other hand, if the Treasury wimps out and chooses not to raise taxes to reimburse the trust fund, then there will be no alternative but to slash Social Security benefits. The most likely scenario is that Social Security payments would be turned into just another means-tested welfare program for the very poor; if you make more than, say, $15,000 per year, then forget about collecting any Social Security benefits.

Any way you slice it, it is lousy public policy to borrow massively from the Social Security trust fund with no credible plan for reimbursement. Of course, the immediate damage from this approach is that it allows us to mask the true scale of the Federal budget deficit, thus making it easier for us politicians to sit on our hands.

Now, Mr. President, objection was heard in the Budget Committee that removing Social Security surpluses from the deficit calculations would make the fiscal year 1991 Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target unreachable. Several Senators issued apocalyptic warnings that my bill would destroy Gramm-Rudman-Hollings because it does not provide for an extension of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-reduction timetable. Yet, as a practical matter, this issue is now moot. The budget summit agreement, and now the House and Senate reconciliation bills, have ended any hope or expectation that we will balance the budget in the foreseeable future. Indeed, we no longer even talk about deficit targets.

Instead, we talk about endlessly fudgeable spending-reduction targets, which means we can reach the spending-reduction target even though the deficit doubles, yet we can still say we have made the hard choices and done our job. I say this is all the more reason to protect Social Security by means of this amendment. With all restraints now gone, we have a special obligation now to safeguard the Social Security trust fund.

Mr. President, in our casual embezzling from the trust fund, we have committed a gross breach of faith with the American people. Social Security is perhaps the most successful social program ever enacted by the Federal Government. Without question, it is the most effective antipoverty program in history. Social Security is not charity or welfare. On the contrary, it is a supplementary retirement fund that workers pay for with their hard-earned money.

However, let's be under no illusions that this bill would put an end to the ransacking of the Social Security trust fund. It does not. Trust fund surpluses, which by law can be invested only in Government securities, will continue to be spent to meet the operating expenses of the Government. The only way to prevent the trust fund moneys from being spent in this manner is to change the law to permit investment of Social Security moneys in nongovernmental equity, a policy change I do not now recommend. However, this bill will indirectly act to safeguard the Social Security trust fund by increasing the pressure to tackle the deficits in a meaningful, dramatic way. After all, there is one sure-fire way to protect the Social Security surpluses: balance the Federal budget.

Mr. President, I say it is time to stop playing games with Social Security and the Government's finances. It is time to use honest budget numbers and to make honest budget choices. By all means, let us begin by putting Social Security truly in trust and totally off budget.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to Senator HEINZ, from Pennsylvania, and then I will yield to the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator COATS and Senator KASTEN be added as cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I have spoken here on the floor about how our addiction to deficit spending has gotten us into the habit of misappropriating the Social Security trust funds, and its annual surpluses to cover up and hide the truth about the real size of the Federal budget deficit. I have shown, as these charts once again illustrate, how much faster our national debt is growing than what we report as our deficits.

In just the last 4 years—our national debt has grown by some $376 billion more than the deficits that we tell people ought to add up to our debt.

Mr. President, the vote we are about to have is more than a vote to stop this annual game of deficit deception. This is a vote to demonstrate once and for all this Chamber's commitment to milions of aged and disabled Americans who depend on Social Security for their retirement.

This is a vote to protect the Social Security trust funds for future generations who are now paying in.

This is a vote to end the diversion of Social Security trust funds to a purpose for which they were never intended.

Finally, this is a vote for making truth in budgeting the standard upon which Republicans and Democrats and the American people may and will rely as we make the decisions we must for them.

SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUND SURPLUSES

Mr. President, later today we will be presented with a leadership amendment. That amendment as contemplated by the budget summit is deeply flawed. It fails to remove the Social Security Trust Funds—the OASDI Program and its finances as a whole, from the budget and the budget process.

The Heinz-Hollings amendment we offer today will demonstrate once and for all this Chamber's commitment to millions of aged and disabled Americans who depend on Social Security benefits in retirement. It is an amendment designed as well to ensure that America regains its fiscal integrity and reenters the world market place as the engine of economic growth and opportunity we want our country to be.

The amendment that Senator HOLLINGS and I are proposing, would separate the Social Security surpluses, cash and interest, from the deficit reduction calculations, would protect the trust fund for future generations, end the practice of using these surpluses to hide annual deficits, and reduce and hopefully eliminate the public debt currently held by corporations, institutions, and most of all and increasingly, foreign investors.

This effort today is part of a larger understanding—a thoroughgoing orchestrated effort—to make truth in budgeting the standard against which Republicans and Democrats alike consider a budget and every budget.

This reconciliation bill came forth with a plan that included taking only a part of Social Security out of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit calculations. It is a plan that only saves half a loaf. The other half—the large and growing interest payments that Social Security earns on its investments—is still missing. Mr. President the purpose of our amendment is to safeguard the whole loaf. We have skirted the challenge of true budget reform for almost a decade now, preferring to nickel and dime away our children's and grandchildren's future in lieu of making some hard political choices on spending and taxes. This occurred despite a recommendation from the Senate Finance Committee to exclude all Social Security funds, both revenues and expenditures, from the calculation of the deficit.

I ask now what should be a purely rhetorical question, that is: Are we going to move ahead with real budget reform, or continue the political coward's charade of blessing the budget with our right hand while we doctor the books with the left? I say it should be rhetorical, but having asked it here and before numerous committees on more occasions than I can—or care to—recount, I remain doubtful. We have yet to move ahead, despite mounting evidence that through our lack of initiative, like the Lilliputians, we immobilize the mighty Gulliver of our economy with ever-lengthened lines of debt.

With each morning headline and each nightly news report, the fiscal quagmire this country is in deepens. Although the final figure has not been released, the Office of Management and Budget's mid-session review predicted that our fiscal year 1990 baseline deficit was $218.5 billion—$118.5 billion more than the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target and $94.7 billion more than the deficit predicted by the President's budget for fiscal year 1991.

We are already bent—and bent totally out of shape by the burden of this debt. Last year's interest payments alone—over $180 billion—will not go to help the poor without health insurance, or to build roads, or to cancer research or national defense or better schools. Those dollars go to investors, bankers, and the wealthy here and abroad. Mr. President, that $180 billion dedicated to interest on the national debt is more than the Federal Government plans to spend for farm aid, housing, education, unemployment compensation, veterans' benefits, the post office and highways—combined. I repeat, combined.

There are times when a nation might spend beyond income. Times when debt is an outcome of necessity. There are times of financial famine, when extraordinary expenditures are required to provide basic services. Or times of foreign conflict, when freedom hangs on the ability to mobilize quickly and effectively. The debt we are amassing today comes from neither; it is driven simply by a political expediency whose guiding principle is not how to help our country but how to get through the next election with the greatest possible personal or partisan success.

Our failure to address the budget deficit has cost us and will continue to cost us real economic growth, the sort of growth we need to guarantee a prosperous future for ourselves and our children. The world economy is a competitive place, and we have not been keeping up with the competition. Since 1970, we have consistently run a trade deficit. In 1988, our trade deficit was $137 billion, money that flows overseas to the benefit of foreign investors. These same investors then turn around and buy Treasury bills—investing in Government debt—and we wind up paying interest on the money we lost overseas becaue of the trade deficit. In 1989, $394 billion of our national debt was held by foreigners, and we paid them $33 billion in interest alone, one-sixth of the total interest paid on the national debt that year. Who's to blame for our failure to manufacture good quality, affordable merchandise in this country? Who has forced our manufacturing industries, once the envy of the world, to either shut down or open up factories overseas? We, the Congress of the United States, have allowed our crucial heavy industries to suffer because we have continued to run tremendous deficits and have allowed an unconscionable Federal debt burden to accumulate.

The reason Japan exports so many cars to the United States is not because Japanese engineers are any smarter than our engineers or that Japanese workers work any harder than our workers. Our workers are the most productive in the world, but our car manufacturers and other heavy industries lack one competitive advantage that Japan has: cheap capital. Capital is the life-blood of any industrialized nation, and Japan has plenty of it. Why? Because the Japanese Government runs a budget surplus and Japanese individuals and businesses save and invest their capital in growth-creating businesses. In the 1980's, Japan and other industrialized nations have reduced their budget deficits and are, in some cases, running budget surpluses. In 1988, the Japanese ran a surplus representing 0.2 percent of Japanese gross domestic product; our budget deficit was 2.1 percent of our gross domestic product. At the same time, these countries have increased net national savings. For example, from 1984 to 1987, the Japanese net national savings rate was 17.4 percent; for the United States, the rate is 3.6 percent, almost five times less.

By running tremendous budget deficits, we force the American Government to borrow heavily in the private capital markets. This makes it more expensive for our growth-producing industries to attract the capital they need to invest in new plants and equipment or research and development. In the 1980's, U.S. short-term and long-term interest rates have consistently been almost twice as high as comparable Japanese rates. Because American industry is saddled with twice the interest costs of Japanese industry, our productivity growth has slowed while Japan's had increased. In 1950, Japan's rate of productivity growth was only 15.2 percent of ours; by 1988, it had increased to 71.5 percent. At this rate, the Japanese economy will soon produce as much work product per worker as the United States economy; when that happens, it will be difficult to catch up without a traumatic restructuring of our economy and trade practices.

But the debt we face today is not a product of necessity, but of egregious fiscal management, of inflated expectations—and yes, of our own inability to make difficult choices. It reflects a laissez faire attitude toward the long-term economic well being and survival of this Nation, when we ought to show a determination to preserve the best of what we have and build for yet a better future. A case in point, Mr. President, is that just 10 years from now, depending on economic assumptions, as much as 40 percent of all non-Social Security revenues will be required to make interest payments on debt alone.

That, Mr. President, is the good news. The truth is that Congress, by counting the old-age, survivors and disability income trust funds as part of general revenues, radically distorts the actual financial health of this Nation by pretending that the money paid in by workers to Social Security will never be paid out. Just in fiscal year 1990 alone, this trick allowed us to pretend that our deficit was $59 billion smaller than it actually was.

It is important to remember that the reserves accumulating in the trust fund are not just protection against a potential rainy day for Social Security. They are the actuarial projections set forth in 1983 program reforms for a flood of retirees with the aging of the baby boom in the next century.

As we know, these surpluses do not exist as real cash. They represent deposits to the U.S. Treasury which are immediately credited to the Social Security trust funds. Since the U.S. Treasury has the use of the cash, they immediately start paying interest on these balances. Similarly, the interest is never transferred to the trust funds as cash, but is, like the original deposits, credited to the Social Security trust fund accounts by the Treasury. And, in turn, since the Treasury again has the use of the cash they would otherwise have paid, interest is earned on the interest credited. While these are the realities of U.S. law, making the U.S. Treasury our Government's single payee and payor and handler of cash, and the requirement the trust funds always be invested, the figures, even if all only on paper, are no less real. After all, the laws we make in this body are only on paper. They are no less real for that, either.

Since 1983, when we may have saved the Social Security goose, we have systematically proceeded to melt down and pawn the golden egg. It doesn't take a financial wizard to tell us that spending these reserves on today's bills does not bode well for tomorrow's retirees.

Congress didn't originally intend to mislead or deceive the American public when it enacted Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, Mr. President, We may plead innocent to malice aforethought, but must stand guilty of conscious deceit in present practice. We have willfully put off tough choices and attempted to make ourselves look good by spending someone else's money—that of the American worker's today and that of our retirees of tomorrow.

We have dealt in half truths for too long. We have dammed up the river of future investment capital in an ocean of debt. We have all but sucked dry the retirement security of generations in our thirst for new spending in an era of drought of new revenues.

It is time for this administration and this Congress to acknowledge the whole truth of our budget crisis and to build a bipartisan solution based on that truth. This means, for starters, that we remove the Social Security Trust Funds from all budget calculations beginning with the fiscal year 1991 budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, earlier this year, the Senator from Pennsylvania described what is being done with the Social Security trust funds as embezzlement. I do not think he can use that word in the future if this amendment does not pass because embezzlement will have become legal. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on consideration of this particular matter earlier this spring, the Budget Committee voted, by a vote of 20 to 1, to favorably report Calendar No. 812, S. 2999 by our distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator SASSER. It has been, as we said earlier, the work of a couple of years. I have additional cosponsors who are coming forward by the moment. I ask unanimous consent that Senator SANFORD, Senator LEVIN, Senator KERRY, Senator JEFFORDS, Senator DECONCINI, Senator SIMON, Senator RIEGLE, Senator BRADLEY, and Senator KASTEN be added as cosponsors of the particular measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for yielding. I simply want to say that I would like to be added as a cosponsor of this amendment, and I congratulate and commend people on all sides of this debate. We are not quite where Senator MOYNIHAN would want us to be, and that is to also reduce the FICA tax. We might be there some day. This is a very important step. In fact, I proposed the first bill that would both reduce the payroll tax—and take Social Security out of the budget. My bill—the Social Security Integrity and Tax Reduction Act—would have reduced the FICA tax over 3 years, and strengthen the trust fund by removing it from the deficit calculation. We are spending far more than we need for Social Security. Instead of using those funds to mask the deficit, we ought to give them back to the small businesses and working families who earned it. I commend all who have been involved.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that he be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, we are willing to yield back the time on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, in March 1988, when I introduced legislation to remove Social Security from the deficit calculations, most people thought this was a radical notion. I am delighted that attitudes about the misusing of Social Security trust funds have changed, and I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this important measure. Senators HOLLINGS', MOYNIHAN's, and HEINZ's able leadership on this issue has helped generate nearly unanimous support for it.

There are excellent reasons for protecting Social Security by removing it from the Gramm-Rudman deficit calculations. This is a giant step forward, but it falls short of getting us to an honest accounting of the Federal budget. The misuse of Social Security reserves, including interest earned by the trust funds, is a significant and rapidly growing part of the coverup.

However, removing Social Security alone will not prevent the White House and Congress from continuing to conceal a significant part of annual debt increase, it simply reduces the amount we can conceal. Another giant step needed to prevent the creative accounting of other Federal retirement programs and interest earned by them.

During the past decade nearly $1 trillion of debt increase has been excluded from our deficit calculations. We have fooled the public into believing that our annual deficits were declining while, all the time, our annual debt increases—our real deficits—have been climbing. This misleading of the public must stop.

A truly honest accounting of the Federal budget requires the use of a deficit figure that fairly reflects annual debt increase. Redefining deficit as such, without the use of any Federal retirement programs, is our next giant step.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I support taking Social Security out of the budget deficit calculation, and I support the Heinz-Hollings-Moynihan amendment. I want to protect the Social Security system, for today's retirees and the retirees of the next century. But I have some concerns with the amendent we adopted today.

INTEREST IS A BOOKKEEPING ENTRY

Interest payments to the Social Security trust funds are paper transactions within the Government. No funds are actually transferred, and there is no direct impact on the amount the Government must borrow from private markets.

A Government surplus or deficit is measured by transactions with the public: The difference between receipts from the public and outlays to the public. Interest payments that are merely bookkeeping entries within the Government do not in any way affect the amount of funds paid to or received from the public. As a result, keeping interest on-budget in no way masks the deficit.

INTEREST OFF-BUDGET MEANS MORE DEFICIT REDUCTION

The issues involved with taking Social Security, including interest, out of the budget deficit are not as simple, or painless, as they seem, or as the sponsors of this measure have suggested.

If we take interest off-budget, then we have to come up with more deficit reduction. And that means only one of two things: More taxes or more spending cuts.

And I note that the amendment adopted today does not in any way acknowledge that we have to get additional deficit reduction: The budget targets are not revised nor is Gramm-Rudman-Hollings extended to ensure a balanced non-Social Security budget. We will face a 1992 sequester cut of about $27 bilion simply because we decided to take interest out of the budget without revising the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets.

We should consider whether or not we want the American people to make additional sacrifices—more spending cuts or more taxes—so that we can claim we have taken these paper transactions out of the deficit.

Given the difficulty we are having with the current budget, I'm not sure we can agree on more deficit reduction at this time. But in any event, excluding the cash Social Security surpluses from the deficit captures two-thirds of the total surpluses going to Social Security over the next 5 years.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. We yield back our time and ask for the call of the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time in opposition?

The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, may I note, not for the first time, no one rises to oppose these measures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, may I ask who is controlling the time in opposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee would control that time, unless he favors the amendment.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I know of no one who wishes to speak.

I see the distinguished ranking member of the Budget Committee is on the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not care to speak. I will put a statement in. Are we out of time?

Mr. SASSER. No, we have time, I say to my friend from New Mexico. We simply had no one who wished to speak, which is a rare occurrence on this floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is rare. I will just put a statement in explaining what I think this does ultimatley in terms of deficits, and the need for additional revenues and/or budget cuts.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, we yield all time in opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced, yeas 98, nays 2, as follows:[S18OC0-M4]{S15781}follows:

So, the amendment (No. 3033) was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If we can have order in the Chamber so Senators can be heard.

The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be listed as an original cosponsor of the amendment just agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Alaska is to be recognized. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, there is a provision in the reconciliation bill that deals with the Tongass National Forest. It is a bill that previously passed the Senate and is in conference with the House. I voted for that bill, and we are working in conference trying to work this out.

I see the distinguished charman of the Energy Committee here now. I think he will verify the fact there are ongoing negotiations on that bill in conference.

There is another section of this bill that does deal with revenues, and it repeals a direct appropriation of $40 million. It is properly in this bill. The Tongass National Forest provision in my judgment is not properly in the bill. It is a matter that is in conference represented by bills that have passed each House that are not totally in agreement. But the provisions of this bill that do not relate to revenues should not be in this bill. I do not want to take a great deal of time of the Senate in discussing the matter. I am hopeful that the Senate will agree with the point of order I am going to raise under the Byrd rule.

The matter is in the House version of the bill. So without regard to what we do here now, the conference on this reconciliation bill will have the subject matter before it, and if we are able to get an agreement on the matter in the other conference, I would have no objection to placing the matter here so it could be readily and quickly approved in this process and obviate the necessity of having another conference report come to the floor.

I think it is unfair to have it resolved under the time restrictions and the constraints that apply to this bill. We do not have time to properly debate such a matter when it comes back from conference under this bill. I again call attention to the Senate the fact this matter is in conference on this reconciliation bill because the House operates under different rules, and it is in the House bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, pursuant to section 20,001 of the consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act, I raise a point of order that section 4003 through section 4016 appearing on pages 107 through 124 of this bill pending before the Senate now is an extraneous provision. This provision violates subparagraph D(1)(a) of that statute that I quoted because it does not produce a change in outlays or revenues and is subject to a point of order under the Byrd rule.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. If this same matter is in the House bill, then is it not the right of the conferees on this bill to bring back this precise bill in a conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). It would be within the authority of the conferees to include this material in the conference report submitted to the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, if I may be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I urge Senators not to bring the matter to a vote. The Parliamentarian, as I understand it, will rule with the distinguished Senator from Alaska. The distinguished Senators from Alaska, Senators STEVENS and MURKOWSKI, are working with us on a conference committee. They have been working in good faith on the other conference committee on the Tongass bill, and I am very hopeful—in fact, I am absolutely insistent—that we get a bill this year. I believe that both Senators from Alaska will help us do that. But in any event, we are giving up no rights at all, as I appreciate it, by not seeking to overturn this point of order by overruling the ruling of the Chair. So I will not ask for a rollcall on this matter.

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator from Louisiana stated it as I understand it. No one gives up any rights by taking it out of the bill at this time. It is within the province of the conferees to bring the matter back because it is in the House bill. There would also be remedies available to the Senators from Alaska if it does come back, and I think everyone realizes it. There is just no reason to debate it twice and to face the question of controversy over the points of order.

I appreciate what my friend from Louisiana said. I do hope the Chair will rule in favor of the point of order.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, very briefly, I wanted to associate myself with both the question and the remarks made by the distinguished chairman of the Energy Committee and the senior Senator from Alaska. I should point out for the record and for our colleagues we are very close to reaching agreement in the conference just related to the Tongass. We have been working on this for a long time. The hope is that we will have that resolved and do it through that regular process.

The distinguished chairman of the Energy Committee has pointed out, however, if something comes afoul, we still have available the reconciliation vehicle for finally solving the Tongass situation. I do not believe we are going to have to do that. Everybody is working in concert on this. We are very close to reaching agreement on the Tongass, and I think everybody will be happy when that happens; we will not have to have Tongass again and again and again debated on the floor.

I thank the Chair. I thank the distinguished senior Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is correct. We do hope that we can through our mutual efforts resolve this issue. I remind the Senate that except in one instance the Senate has never voted to approve a wilderness designation in any State of the Union where both Senators opposed that designation. This issue may come up when the bill comes back. It is not here now. But we reserve our rights to attack that should it happen. I hope it does not happen, Mr. President. We want this issue settled. It is jeopardizing one of the major industries of our State and a second new and brilliant industry which is the tourist industry that we fully well appreciate. We believe that we can resolve it if all Members of Congress wish to do so.

Does my colleague wish to comment?

Mr. MURKOWSKI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI] is recognized.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I want to tell my colleagues that I too feel very optimistic about the likelihood of achieving a compromise on the Tongass. We have had many hearings before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. We have had field hearings in Alaska. We have had deliberations with the Southeast Conference, Southeast Conference 1 and 2. We have had the input from the State of Alaska, the Governor of the State of Alaska.

I remind my colleagues that this bill passed the Senate unanimously, or virtually unanimously, by a vote of 99 to zero. That was the Senate bill. So clearly Senators have had a chance to express their position on the Senate bill which passed out of the Energy Committee. We are working in good faith because the senior Senator and I feel it is time to bring to an end the question on the Tongass. We have had certainly the support of the chairman, the senior Senator from Louisiana, and we feel in good faith we can achieve a workable compromise that will maintain the viability of the industry and still address the concerns of many of the local communities in Alaska.

I thank the Chair and I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The provision cited by the senior Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] contains no budgetary effect and therefore violates subsection D(1)(a) of the Byrd rule. The point of order is sustained. The cited provisions are stricken from the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. STEVENS. Is it necessary to reconsider such an action?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not subject to a motion to reconsider.

AMENDMENT NO. 3034

(Purpose: To reduce the proposed increase in the statutory limit on the public debt by $1,579,000,000)

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES], for himself, Mr. CONRAD, and Mr. COATS, proposes an amendment numbered 3034.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Page 488, line 15, is amended by striking "1,900,000,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$321,000,000,000".

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendments be considered under the following time limitations; that they be considered in the following order, and that, if the time that is allocated to these amendments exceeds the time remaining, the time be expanded to include all amendments. The amendments are as follows:

An amendment by Senator NICKLES which will consume 5 minutes;

An amendment by Senator HARKIN which will consume 11 minutes;

An amendment by Senator GRASSLEY which will consume 5 minutes;

An amendment by Senator D'AMATO which will consume 5 minutes;

An Inouye-Kasten amendment that will consume 10 minutes;

A Lieberman-Glenn amendment that will consume 5 minutes;

A Durenberger amendment consuming 2 minutes;

A Symms amendment consuming 4 minutes;

A Stevens amendment consuming 2 minutes; and

A Metzenbaum amendment consuming 4 minutes;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Tennessee would include an amendment and give me 5 minutes. I have reserved at the desk. I do not know if I will offer the amendment, but I do want to protect my options.

Mr. SASSER. If I might inquire, is this the Senator's amendment relative to——

Mr. SHELBY. The one I talked to the manager about, and I know negotiations have been going on to work that out.

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator settle for 2 minutes? We do not have any time.

Mr. SHELBY. I will do that.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent further that the time be expanded an additional 2 minutes to consider a possible amendment by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY].

Mr. FORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I ask the distinguished floor manager, will all of these amendments be subject to a vote?

Mr. SASSER. All of these amendments are, and I intend to add to this unanimous-consent request a request that the votes be stacked. I amend the unanimous-consent request, Mr. President, to request that the first six amendments, the Nickles, Harkin, Grassley, D'Amato, Inouye-Kasten, and Lieberman-Glenn amendments be stacked, that the original vote on the Nickles amendment consume 15 minutes, and thereafter the rollcalls be limited to 10 minutes on the remaining amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FORD. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. President, this would mean that approximately 30 minutes from now they will go to the six stacked votes?

Mr. SASSER. Let me count it up. In approximately 30 minutes we would have six stacked votes.

Mr. FORD. I am trying to figure out the time.

Mr. SASSER. The original vote would consume 15 minutes and thereafter the remaining votes would consume 10 minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask the leaders who have presented the list of pending amendments if I could be included on this list under a 5-minute time agreement.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator settle for 2 minutes?

Mr. CONRAD. That is fine.

Mr. SASSER. I ask unanimous consent to modify the previous unanimous-consent request to include a Conrad amendment which would consume 2 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I inquire of the distinguished chairman. When he stated the times, is it fair to assume that means equally divided?

Mr. SASSER. Time would be equally divided. I am also advised that there is a request to amend the unanimous-consent request to add a Levin amendment that would consume 3 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am familiar with most of the amendments. But I am not familiar with what the so-called Metzenbaum amendment is or the Levin amendment. I wonder if somebody might tell me what they are.

Mr. SASSER. Senator Metzenbaum is on the floor. Perhaps he could give us a quick 10-second overview.

Mr. METZENBAUM. The Metzenbaum amendment is to take the cap off HI.

Mr. McCLURE. Reserving the right to object; parliamentary inquiry. Is the proposed unanimous-consent request that the vote on each be up or down on the amendment?

Mr. SASSER. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has not been included in the request by the floor manager.

Mr. McCLURE. I request to know what the understanding is then. Are we going to have it? Because the request, as stated, would say it is up or down. I respectfully say to the Chair I believe that is the form of the request. If it is to be otherwise, I think it has to be specifically stated.

If it is indeed the purpose of the managers to have a vote either on a motion to table or on a point of order or otherwise, I think it would have to be stated in the unanimous-consent request. Until it is, I might be constrained to object. But I assume the managers are willing to tell us what it is they intend to do with respect to these amendments.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, quite frankly, we cannot advise the Senator from Idaho with any degree of precision as to what will occur on each and every one of these amendments. Some of these amendments will be open to objection for point of order, raising a point of order, or a motion to strike.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if the chairman might modify his request and state that these may be subject to points of order or may be tabled.

Mr. SASSER. I so modify the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object, these amendments are subject to amendment?

Mr. SASSER. These amendments would not be subject to amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Is the leadership amendment subject to amendment?

Mr. SASSER. The leadership amendment is not included in this group of amendments that we seek to offer.

Mr. STEVENS. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The floor manager, the Senator from Tennessee, proposed a unanimous-consent request. Hearing no objection, the request is agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senator CONRAD, Senator COATS, I have an amendment which would greatly reduce the increase in the debt limit extension that is now provided in the bill.

If my colleagues would look on page 488 of the bill, line 15, there is a provision that bothered this Senator. I expect it would bother many Senators, and it certainly would bother a lot of taxpayers. It is an extension or an increase in the Federal debt limit of $1.9 trillion—not billion, not million—trillion. A trillion has 12 zeroes in it. This bill would increase the Federal debt limit from a little over $3 trillion to over $5 trillion.

My guess is—and I am not sure where they came up with the $1.9 trillion figure—my guess is that it must have been what some experts were estimating as the increase necessary for increased debt limit for the next 5 years.

I think that would be a serious mistake, a serious procedural mistake. In many cases we have used the debt limit as a vehicle for making changes, budgetary changes. As a matter of fact, Gramm-Rudman was originally passed, if I remember, on a debt limit increase.

Mr. President, my amendment would do this: it would reduce the debt limit increase from $1.9 trillion to $321 billion, the same as the House passed on July 31, 1990.

That is what is anticipated would be necessary to get us through the remainder of this fiscal year. That is an increase from the temporary debt limit of $249 billion; and an increase from the permanent debt ceiling of $321 billion.

I might show my colleagues as well, in past legislative action, the present debt limit: in 1981 we reached $1 trillion; by 1986, we crossed $2 trillion; and by 1989, we crossed $3 trillion. Under the reconciliation package, if we do not change it, we will cross $5 trillion by passage of this bill.

I might also show my colleagues that for past increases in the statutory debt limit, most of them have been less than $100 billion, on occasion, $200 or $300 billion. This increase as I proposed would be a 1-year increase. If we do not pass this legislation, we will have an increase of $1.9 trillion, the largest increase in the debt limit in our Nation's history by a factor of about 6.

So I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

Also, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD tables which include historical budget data dealing with outlays, the percentage growth of outlays and revenues, and increases in Federal debt.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL DEBT-LIMIT INCREASES IN THE 1980's

Reconciliation (increase from 3,122.7)	5,022.7	1,900	61

On July 31, 1990, the House of Representatives passed H.R. 5355, a bill which would raise the statutory limit on the debt to $3.444 trillion.

Worsening economic and technical conditions will ultimately cause this limit to fall short of its goal of providing borrowing authority through the end of fiscal year 1991.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, the reconciliation bill increases the limit on the amount of public debt by $1.9 trillion. This outrageous amount, which is either the biggest, or one of the biggest debt increases in America's history, is expected to make it unnecessary for the Congress to raise the debt limit for a number of years. The amendment we have introduced to this bill would increase the public debt limit. That is, we lower the amount by which the debt limit could increase.

We introduce this amendment for two reasons. First, because we feel it is important that all Members of Congress face the effects of our deficits on the national debt on a reasonably frequent and tangible basis.

Our second reason for proposing this amendment relates to the great freedoms we enjoy in the Senate. As we all know, the periodic increase in the debt limit offers Senators an attempt to alter the Nation's tax code. And as we have seen, despite assurances that are given along the way, Senators have precious little opportunity to obtain a fair and reasonable vote on the Senate floor on tax matters during the reconciliation process.

The bill as written would foreclose for some years this most rare and important opportunity for Senators on both sides of the aisle to achieve their tax policy objectives. Our amendment would reestablish a more normal schedule for increasing the debt limit and would, therefore, preserve Senators' ability to legislate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Oklahoma the time allocated to him has expired.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the provision which the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma opposes would be a provision which will allow a 5-year debt limit ceiling. And what this would mean in essence is that the Senate would not have to vote every year on extending the debt limit ceiling.

We all know what happens over here. The debt limit bill comes up; the leadership puts it off until the last minute, for good reason. There are hundreds of amendments that are held out to tack onto this must legislation. The result is that the Senate, on many occasions, works all night long for hours and passes all kinds of legislation, I submit, Mr. President, without the careful analysis that this legislation would ordinarily receive.

Raising that debt limit has become, unhappily, over the past half century or longer, more or less a mechanical routine, something that occurs every year that the Federal Government is in operation. So we are simply unduly complicating things if we go back to the Senator's proposal that we do it for 1 year. We want a 5-year debt limit ceiling because we are passing a 5-year reconciliation bill that will save $500 billion over 5 years. Then at the end of 5 years, when the 5-year provision is expired, then we can look at the debt and make provisions at that particular time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SASSER. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me just say this is really a matter for the Senators to decide. The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma makes a point that he would prefer that we vote on the debt limit every year, so he has come up with the best estimate of the public debt increase over the next year.

Those who worked on this package thought that we ought to make an estimate of both the new debt over the next 5 years and the amount of public debt that results by investing trust accounts. And we estimated it.

And we said rather than meet each year and do it, use a 5-year estimate, $500 billion of which is new debt for the unified budget, for the public activities that we budget for. The rest is because we are investing trust fund accounts, and that causes public debt to increase. As you invest them, the debt goes up because you owe them.

If the Senate wants to do it every year, they ought to vote for the Senator from Oklahoma. If they want to say let us not do this every year, let us take a longer look, a longer period of time, then they ought not vote for him.[S18OC0-M5]{S15785}for him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 3035

(Purpose: To reinstate the $75 Medicare part B deductible and to impose a surtax on income over $1,000,000)

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], for himself, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. SIMON, Mr. BRYAN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. ADAMS, proposes an amendment numbered 3035.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike section 6162 and insert the following new section:

SEC. 6162. SURTAX ON INDIVIDUALS WITH INCOMES OVER $1,000,000.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to determination of tax liability) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART VIII—SURTAX ON INDIVIDUALS WITH INCOMES OVER $1,000,000

"Sec. 59B. Surtax on section 1 tax.
"Sec. 59C. Surtax on minimum tax.
"Sec. 59D. Special rules.

"SEC. 59B. SURTAX ON SECTION 1 TAX.

"In the case of an individual who has taxable income for the taxable year in excess of $1,000,000, the amount of the tax imposed under section 1 for such taxable year shall be increased by 18 percent of the amount which bears the same ratio to the tax imposed under section 1 (determined without regard to this section) as—

"(1) the amount by which the taxable income of such individual for such taxable year exceeds $1,000,000, bears to

"(2) the total amount of such individual's taxable income for such taxable year.

"SEC. 59C. SURTAX ON MINIMUM TAX.

"In case of an individual who has alternative minimum taxable income for the taxable year in excess of $1,000,000, the amount of the tentative minimum tax determined under section 55 for such taxable year shall be increased by 18 percent of the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of such tentative minimum tax (determined without regard to this section) as—

"(1) the amount by which the alternative minimum taxable income of such taxpayer for the taxable year exceeds $1,000,000, bears to

"(2) the total amount of such taxpayer's alternative minimum taxable income for such taxable year.

"SEC. 59D. SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) SURTAX TO APPLY TO ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—For purposes of this part, the term 'individual' includes any estate or trust taxable under section 1.

"(b) TREATMENT OF MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING SEPARATE RETURNS.—In the case of a married individual (within the meaning of section 7703) filing a separate return for the taxable year, sections 59B and 59C shall be applied by substituting '$500,000' for '$1,000,000'.

"(c) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—The provisions of this part—

"(1) shall be applied after the application of section 1(j), but

"(2) before the application of any other provision of this title which refers to the amount of tax imposed by section 1 or 55, as the case may be."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of parts for subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"Part VIII. Surtax on individuals with incomes over $1,000,000.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is entitled to 5½ minutes under the previous order.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if the distinguished Senator will permit me to make a request so that somebody will manage the bill in my stead.

Mr. HARKIN. Not on my time. I don't have much.

Mr. DOMENICI. Not the Senator's time. I designate Senator DANFORTH of Missouri to manage the time and the subject matter on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] may proceed for 5½ minutes under the previous order.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment on behalf of myself and Senator RIEGLE as well as Senators SIMON, ADAMS, BRYAN, MIKULSKI, KENNEDY, AKAKA, HATFIELD, DECONCINI, and GRAHAM.

Mr. President, our amendment is very simple and straightforward. It would ease the burden in this package on the elderly sick and ask the richest of the rich to pay a fairer share. Specifically, it would eliminate the doubling of the Medicare part B deductible from $75 to $150 called for in the bill and replace those revenues with that derived from imposing a surcharge of 18 percent on the income tax paid on taxable income over $1 million a year. This would mean a tax rate of 33 percent on taxable income over $1 million a year.

The basic elements of our amendment were adopted by the House. So what we are proposing is nothing new. In fact, our amendment results in an effective tax rate of 2.6 percent less on this income than the bill passed by the House.

Our amendment is supported by most of the major groups representing older Americans and American workers including: Families USA, the National Council of Senior Citizens, the AFL-CIO, the United Autoworkers, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, National Council on the Aging, and the Older Women's League.

Mr. President, our amendment is about fairness. Older Americans are already overburdened with high health care costs. As this chart clearly shows, over the past decade, the elderly have been forced to pay more and more out of their own pockets for the health care they need. Their out-of-pocket costs have more than tripled since 1977, leaping from $712 to $2,394 in 1988. Because increases in the cost of medical care have outpaced increases in Social Security benefits, seniors are now forced to spend a larger percentage of their incomes on needed health care than they did before Medicare was established. As this chart indicates, while seniors spent about 15 percent of their budget on medical care in 1965, the year Medicare was enacted, they are spending over 18 percent of their incomes today. Our senior citizens are being saddled with an ever-increasing burden of health care costs; most are already paying more than they can afford. Let's take a look at a typical older American—an elderly widow living alone. She's 75, just lost her husband of 50 years and is just starting to have some increased medical needs. In Iowa, the average widow receives $526 a month in Social Security benefits and has little other source of support besides this. She stretches every dollar to make ends meet, carefully planning out a budget for food, utilities, medical care and other necessities down to the dollar. Yet, because of rising heating costs and several trips to the doctor, she is having to cut back on other necessities even further. To this elderly widow, the $75 increase in the deductible before Medicare starts to help pay her doctor bills, would mean the choice between going to the doctor when she's sick or buying the food she needs. For her, $75 is more than 2 weeks worth of groceries or a month's worth of needed medications. For her, and literally millions of older Americans like her, our cold budget numbers can mean the difference between making it and not.

The woman I described is fairly typical. The average older Iowan living alone has an income of $9,000 a year or $750 a month. For about two-thirds of older Iowans, their monthly Social Security check—which average $560—is their main source of income. The increased Medicare payments called for in the reconciliation bill would effectively cut the average older American's Social Security cost of living adjustment by more than half. And the deductible increase in particular hits the sickest and poorest senior citizens the hardest. Those most unable to pay are asked to pay more.

Mr. President, on the other end of the spectrum, there is group of Americans which has gotten off over the past decade with not paying its fair share. We raise the funds to reduce the burden on the elderly sick by providing a surcharge on the super rich—on the taxes they pay on their income over a million dollars a year. This small group of millionaires, decamillionaires and billionaires has benefited the most from the tax policy of the past decade. As this chart clearly shows, over the past decade, the richest of the rich have gotten richer and at the same time have paid dramatically less in taxes. The top 1 percent of American earners have nearly doubled their real income since 1977, rising some 96.2 percent—96.2 percent. Over the same period, their tax rate has decreased 23.2 percent.

This other chart dramatically shows the unfair drop in the richest of the rich's share of the tax burden. While middle income Americans will pay $8.4 billion more in total taxes this year than if the effective tax rate was what it was in 1977, the richest 1 percent of Americans will pay $39 billion less.

Mr. President, our amendment is not even talking about all of those in the top 1 percent. The average person in the top 1 percent of income doesn't make half of what he or she would need to make to be touched by this amendment. Although the average person in the top 1 percent of income in our country makes $549,000 per year, after tax breaks allowed under the Tax Code, such a person has a taxable income of a mere $400,000, less than half the income level required to be touched by our amendment. We are talking about the superrich—those who earn, after all of their deductions, exclusions, and other benefits and loopholes that their accountant can find, more than $1 million in a single year. And we are talking about increasing their effective tax rate on income over a million from 28 percent to about 33 percent. Let's take a look at some of the people our amendment would affect and how it will affect them.

Who are we talking about taxing? One group is top executives of major companies.

Some make more than $10 million per year. Their families live on at least $200,000 per week.

And they include:

The head of Reebok International, who had a total salary and compensation from the company of $14,606,000 in 1989. Now, we are not talking about any additional income on his outside investments, just salary and compensation and stock from that company. That is $280,000 per week;

The head of BHC Industries, with salary and compensation of $13,687,000;

The head of Freeport-McMoran, with $13,517,000 in salary and compensation; and

The head of Coca-Cola, with $10,814,000 in salary and compensation.

Will this tax mean that they don't buy a spare $10,000 watch? Perhaps. But, I think that is better than some elderly citizens cutting back on heat in the winter and a good breakfast in the morning. We have a chance to choose and I believe that the very rich, making a million dollars a year should pay more and the elderly sick should have a smaller portion of the burden.

The wealthiest Americans are those billionaires in our country, people whose assets are in excess of $1 billion, not million, billion.

These are people whose incomes are usually in excess of $100 million per year.

I believe these individuals can be asked to contribute a little more in order to hold down costs for the elderly. Instead of having elderly people making $11,000 per year pay more for Medicare.

These billionaires, on average, are making $11,000 per hour. Can they afford to pay an extra 5 percent? I think that they can.

I don't think this is going to pinch their lifestyles unduly.

So Mr. President, this amendment just asks for a little more fairness. Plain and simple. It says that those who have benefited the most over the past decade should be asked to pay a little bit more so that the elderly sick can get a little relief.

Now some may argue, Well, older people need to pay their fair share. They should pay something toward deficit reduction. First, the elderly are not exempted from all of the increases called for in this bill. There's no age 65 cutoff on the gas tax. They pay just like everyone else. Second, the fact is that even without the higher deductible on Part B, seniors would still be paying about $10 billion more in Medicare costs over the next 5 years than they would under current law. They will see their premiums and copayments rise. The elderly are already paying more than their fair share. Let's not add to their burdens.

Mr. President. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 42 seconds remaining.

Mr. HARKIN. Senator HATFIELD wished to speak on this. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] is recognized with 5½ minutes under his control.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, charts have blossomed on the floor of the Senate. A chart is your passport to get on the floor these days, and I am not going to be outdone by anybody. I have 5½ minutes to talk about four charts. But I think that the four charts are very, very illuminating and, as a matter of fact, I am very proud of my four charts. They go to the question of the cost of health care, which is the basic problem that is before us, and it is going to be before us for a long time to come.

Mr. President, the first chart shows the average annual growth of Federal outlays in various components of the various budgets by the decade beginning in the 1970's. As you can see, Mr. President, the orange bar, which is health care, grew in the 1970's 15.9 percent, compared to a total growth of Federal spending of 11.7 percent. In the 1980's, health care grew at 10.5 percent, exceeded only by interest on the national debt, 10.5, compared to a total growth in Federal spending annually of 7.7.

Projected by the Congressional Budget Office for the first 5 years of the 1990's, health care, which is the orange bar here, 10.9 percent; second is Social Security, 6.3 percent; total increase, 4.7 percent. This is the problem of the Federal budget in general.

Now, Mr. President, a very interesting chart indicating that by the year 2007, Medicare will become the largest single item in the Federal budget, passing Social Security in the year 2007, passing national defense a few years before that.

The third chart. The question is, how fast are deductibles rising? The first deductible in 1965, when we first had Medicare, was $50. the present deductible is $75. The Finance Committee's bill would increase it to $150. If we had indexed for inflation, the Consumer Price Index, the original $50 deductible in 1965 would increase not to $150 under this bill, but to $225. If we indexed if for the medical consumer price index, the deductible would not be $150 under this bill but $275. The deductible increase has far from kept up with inflation much less medical inflation.

The final chart. Over the next 5 years, which is the period that we are talking about in this budget, the entire pie here is the total increase projected cost of Medicare. Under what we are talking about in this legislation, a total of $20.9 billion will be paid for by the elderly. Part of that is the deductible in part A, part of it is the deductible and the coinsurance and the premiums in part B. The total increase in the health care costs to the beneficiaries over this 5-year period of time is $20.9 billion, but the total cost to everybody else, that is, the people on the work force who are paying the payroll tax and the Treasury, under part B is $73.5 billion.

Now, the point that is made by the advocates of this amendment is that this green slice of the total pie is too large. They want to reduce, maybe cut in half, this green slice of the pie. I think that this is a pretty fair deal for the beneficiaries under Medicare, and I think the real problem we have to deal with is the cost of Medicare.

How much time do I have remaining Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 54 seconds remaining.

Mr. DANFORTH. I yield that to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to speak to another controversial and frequently misunderstood area, the Medicare Program. You have all probably heard budget-related concerns expressed by your aged constituents over alleged cuts in the Medicare Program. Unfortunately, the term "cuts" as the average person understands it and as budgeteers use it are two different things. When we talk inside the Beltway about cuts in Medicare we mean reductions in increases in areas such as provider payments, not reductions in benefits or services. This is poorly understood outside of Washington and has raised false alarms among our older citizens who fear wrongly that we are retrenching on our commitment to the Medicare Program. The fact is we are taking important steps to sustain the future viability of the program. The truly unfortunate aspect of this is that these needed policy changes have to be done on the annual budget bill, which causes them to get caught up in deficit reduction rhetoric, rather than being evaluated on their own merits.

For instance, the Finance Committee package takes serious steps to constrain aggregate spending increases for hospital and physician services, while improving reimbursement and access to primary care, community health centers and the services of health professionals practicing in rural areas. We also took initiatives to correct inequities in how certain classes of providers are treated under the program and to give beneficiaries greater protection with respect to how certain benefits are administered. These include phasing out unsupportable differentials in prospective payments to rural and urban hospitals; eliminating the arbitrary 210-day limit on hospice benefits for the terminally ill; authorizing assitance in the home for certain end-stage renal disease beneficiaries on home dialysis. The list of improvements is extensive.

Further, a number of us collaborated on the first major reform in a decade of standards regulating the sale to beneficiaries of private insurance benefits that are supplementary to Medicare. These are widely known as Medigap policies. Our proposals will help make sure that beneficiaries receive better value when they purchase wrap-around policies, and be better able to make valid price and benefit comparisons. We also worked to address problems plaguing the prepaid health care contracting program in order to improve the availability of managed care options for Medicare beneficiaries.

Unfortunately, these substantial successes have been virtually obliterated by debate over budget summit proposals that would impose higher cost-sharing on beneficiaries. Turning to the major issue of beneficiary contributions to the program, I have thought long and hard about what I think is appropriate and equitable in the areas of premiums, deductibles and copayments. But first, a little history is in order. Since its inception in 1966, the Medicare Program has been divided into two parts—one mandatory and one voluntary. The mandatory part is part A or the hospital insurance benefit. This is financed through payroll taxes on current workers. In 1989, 136 million workers contributed $68.4 billion in payroll taxes to the HI trust fund. This financed $60.8 billion in hospital services for 33 million eligible beneficiaries. It is important to understand that no significant changes to part A were proposed as part of the budget summit agreement, nor in the Senate package.

However, changes were proposed to part B or the supplementary medical insurance portion of the Medicare Program. This is the part that protects against the cost of doctors and other types of medical bills. Enrollment in part B is voluntary and purchase of the coverage is analogous to purchase of yearly, renewable term insurance. It is a popular program—in 1989, 32 million beneficiaries were enrolled or over 98 percent of the eligible population.

Part B is financed from premiums paid by the aged, disabled and chronic renal disease enrollees and from the general revenues. The hybrid financing makes it an odd specimen, part social insurance and part private insurance. But make no mistake, it is just as subject to the pressures of health care inflation as any private insurance package. The premium rate is derived annually based upon projected part B costs for the coming year. Originally, the premium was set to cover one-half of the costs of the program for the aged. Subsequent law changes linked increases in the premium to the percentage by which cash benefits were increased under the COLA provisions of the Social Security Program. As a result of this formula, premium income, which originally financed half of the costs of part B has seriously declined to less than 25 percent of total program income. The current premium is $28.60 a month or $343.20 a year.

In addition, beneficiaries have to meet a deductible of $75.00. This deductible has changed only once (from $50 to $75) in 25 years! How many private insurance packages can make the same claim? I would bet none, in this era of rising health care costs and increased cost-sharing by insureds. In fact, according to the U.S. Department of Labor, over 30 percent of employees covered under employer-based health benefit plans had deductibles greater than $150.

But let us return to the Medicare Program and look more closely at what has happened. Since 1965, part B spending per enrollee has increased a whopping 1,370 percent. The premium increases have lagged behind considerably in real terms, growing only 850 percent. The deductible has grown only 50 percent. Let me highlight what this really means. If the deductible had kept pace in value with that of the benefit, it would now be nearly nine times higher than it is, or $736, not $75. If the premium had kept pace, it would be over $700 a year, not $343.

If we acted now in accordance with what the founders of the Medicare Program thought was fair and reasonable, these are the kinds of numbers we would be talking about. But, we are not. Instead, we are proposing truly modest increases by setting the premium contribution at 25 percent and by raising the deductible to $150. In my mind, these are not deficit reduction changes, but legitimate changes that are entirely consistent with the original intent and structure of the Medicare Program.

It is also important to keep in mind that as a group, the elderly have experienced the greatest gains in real income—about a 14-percent rise—over the last decade. Despite this, there are many aged people who live on very low incomes. Therefore, we have improved protection for beneficiaries at or below the poverty line for whom even these modest increases are difficult. Over the past few years, we have used the Medicaid Program as a vehicle for protecting what are known as qualified Medicare beneficiaries through the concept of the Medicare buy-in. Under this program, the Federal Government and the States share in the costs of relieving low-income beneficiaries of their Medicare cost-sharing liabilities.

Mr. President, I congratulate my colleague, Senator DANFORTH, not for his colorful presentation, but for his sense of realism. We are not doing a deductible on medicare here to cut the deficit. We are doing a deductible on Medicare because it is the only time we can do Medicare. This is the only time we can improve the Medicare Program for the 33 million elderly in America.

The reality of those charts show us that, while the percentage of the $75 deductible has remained the same for 14 years for 33 million elderly, it has gone up by almost 1000 percent, on the average, for all working Americans. We are just trying to make this an insurance program which it is supposed to reflect some of the realities and to protect the elderly of America from the usual deductibles that you see in all other health insurance plans.

So I urge opposition to this amendment. I am in favor of tabling it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Missouri that the time allocated to him has expired.

The Senator from Iowa has 2 seconds remaining under this control.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged against the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] is recognized for 42 seconds.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators are urged to carry on their conversations in the cloakroom or off the floor so the Senator may be heard.

Mr. HARKIN. Let me state for the record, the last thing I want to do is cause anyone any discomfort here on the floor or put anyone in any bad position or situation. But I must say I feel very strongly about this. I feel this is an amendment that really speaks for itself and one which, I believe, can give direction or guidance to the conferees and one which I believe has the support of the largest crosssection of the American populous. If I did not believe so, I would not have offered the amendment in good faith.

But I do believe this is something that this body ought to speak on very loudly. I hope Senators can support it because it does speak about basic fairness and equality in our society.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I am very concerned about the impact of Medicare cuts on senior citizens and disabled persons. The total Medicare cuts are $51 billion over 5 years. The Senate Finance Committee package has $34 billion in cuts to providers. In addition, this package takes $17 billion directly out of the pocket's of beneficiaries by raising the part B deductible for doctor bills to $150 per year, an increase of $75; maintaining the part B premium at 25 percent of program costs; and imposing a 20-percent coinsurance for labs fees.

One of the most problematic Medicare cuts is the increase in the part B deductible. Medicare beneficiaries would have to pay $150 out of their own pockets before Medicare would pay for their doctor bills. This is twice the current level of $75 a year.

Increasing the part B deductible hurts only those Medicare beneficiaries who are sick and require health care. Seventy-five percent of seniors are expected to pay the full deductible every year because of their immediate health care needs. It takes needed out-of-pocket income away from our Nation's sick seniors and disabled people in the same way as a cut in the Social Security COLA.

Our proposal would eliminate the increase in the part B deductible. This would be offset by imposing a small surtax on taxable income over $1 million a year, making this amendment budget neutral. The amendment would reduce the Medicare cuts by $6.2 billion over 5 years.

The Medicare Program has been cut more than any single domestic program in recent years. Changes to Medicare enacted over the past 6 years are projected to be almost $12 billion. Additional excessive cuts in Medicare will undermine the system, reducing quality of care and potentially limiting the availability of health care to people.

A $75 per year increase in the part B deductible will adversely affect seniors, and particularly low-income persons. The projected average yearly Social Security COLA increase is about $325. The part B deductible increase translates to an over 20 percent COLA cut for a person paying the full deductible. Congress would not be able to get enacted a COLA cut of that degree. As I stated earlier, 75 percent of seniors are expected to pay the full deductible of $150 per year.

The cost to the average senior citizen under the Medicare part B program has been growing over the last 20 years. Seniors already lose part of their Social Security benefit to high Medicare costs. The current total out-of-pocket costs for seniors—$803 a year—is greater than an average monthly Social Security check of $600. This reduces the average total Social Security benefit by 11 percent a year. Social Security is the major source of income for the majority of seniors in this country. Social Security provides over one-half of total income for 61 percent of beneficiaries and contributes almost all of the income, 90 percent or more, for one-fourth of Medicare beneficiaries.

Low-income people will be more adversely affected by these cuts. They are more likely to rely on Social Security. In the finance bill, we accelerate Medicaid coverage for those below poverty by 1 year and give States the option to cover seniors with incomes up to 125 percent of the poverty line. This option is not enough. Only 210,000 near poor seniors are anticipated to receive benefits. There are, however, 2.3 million near poor seniors with incomes above poverty but less than 125 percent of the poverty level. The House requires Medicaid coverage, with full Federal financing, for low-income seniors with incomes up to 125 percent of the poverty level. I fully expect us in the Senate-House conference to come out with greater protections for this especially vulnerable group.

Mr. President, these increased Medicare costs will also lead to increased Medigap premiums for the majority of seniors who purchase Medigap insurances to supplement their Medicare benefit. If these provisions are enacted, it will be even more critical that we enact Medigap consumer protection provisions that the Finance Committee has been developing.

The Finance package includes provisions to prevent fraud and abuse in the Medigap supplemental health insurance market. It prohibits the sale of policies that duplicate benefits and provides stronger enforcement mechanisms than currently exist. A provision I authored to simplify the Medigap insurance market is also included. Simplification would result in standard alternatives across States so seniors can compare policies and get the most value for their money. Currently, there are hundreds of competing, nonidentical policies which consumers cannot evaluate. My provision simplifies a confusing and complicated system.

Mr. President, we are substituting for these cuts a surcharge that would raise the bracket for taxpayers with taxable incomes above $1 million. It would create a new marginal tax rate for these individuals of only 33 percent. As you can see, the tax rate on those earning more than $1 million is still 3 percent below the 36.3 percent amount in the House bill as a result of their imposition of a surcharge.

This proposal is more like bursting the bubble, but at $1 million. The wording in this amendment with respect to whom the surcharge would apply is the same as that contained in the House reconciliation bill. Individuals, estates, and those subject to the alternative minimum tax [AMT] would be treated as in the House bill.

In the name of fairness and equity, this amendment should be passed. Some say that this amendment sticks it to the rich. This represents a slight and modest tax increase on the wealthiest people in our society and reduces the burden placed on many in our society who can least afford cuts in Medicare.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I feel compelled to rise and detail my opposition to this proposal—even though I know that it is undoubtedly one big political winner, because I want it known exactly what we're talking about here. On the surface, what could make more sense than something like this: "Tax the rich. They've got the money, those rotten bums. They can bail us out of our predicament. Why should any of the rest of us suffer?"

There is a very inescapable reason why the rest of us are going to have to suffer, and it is called the national debt. Has anyone missed that point? Remember that it is 3½ trillion bucks that we have to repay; $196 billion in interest is what we expect to pay in this coming fiscal year alone.

Does anyone here actually believe that the Nation's problem is solely one of insufficient taxation of the rich? I have been down here before with all of the facts and figures showing that total confiscation of all of the wealth of all of the people earning more than $100,000 would run the country for about 4½ months. Let's here make a more relevant comparison, directly pertaining to the proposal presented by the Senator from Iowa. That proposal is to apply a 10 percent surtax on taxable income over $1 million. Why stop there? Why not just take it all if that is the problem?

Let's take a look at that: Let's take all of the money of those evil millionaires, and multiply our surcharge intake tenfold; instead of $7.6 billion, we'll take all of that money in excess of an income of $1 million and bring in $76 billion and that assumes, of course, that nothing changes that even though we're going to take all of that money past $1 million, all of those people will continue to work and earn just as they are expected to now—hardly realistic. What a joke.

So how far have we then come? Have we paid off our debt? Not exactly. We would have enough revenue to run the Government for 21 days—3 weeks. So hear that? That is not going to help us avoid having to make those tough choices in other parts of the budget.

If we really intend to get the deficit under control, we are going to have to face facts about where our money is going—48 percent of our spending is now going into some form of entitlements—and that share is rising rapidly.

I want that so clearly understood that is where the money is. And—and this is crucial—that spending all has increases built right into the law. Prior to the budget summit, the Federal Government planned to increase its spending on Medicare at a rate of 11.6 percent per year. The summit agreement would have trimmed that to 10 percent.

Only in Washington is a 10-percent increase in annual spending called a cut. But we do call it a cut and so the media has a field day, blasting our victimization of the elderly and demanding that the rich pay their fair share so that that does not have to happen. But something does have to happen—there are rich elderly, too—and they now can have 75 percent of their Medicare payments subsidized by Joe—and Josie—Six Pack. Forget taxing the rich—some of that money is paying the rich. You cannot balance a budget by refusing to touch spending which is going up at twice the rate of inflation. No amount of taxation can keep up with that. You can't stay even, much less achieve deficit reduction.

Given that situation it is absolutely amazing that entitlements were sheltered to the degree that they were in the budget summit, they accounted for only 23.8 percent of the deficit reduction, despite being 48 percent of our current spending—and that, I remind my colleagues, would have only been a $119 billion savings from planned increases—not a cut in any honest sense.

This is what we have before us on Medicare—$49 billion in savings over 5 years—and $32 billion of that is completely in the area of reductions to health-care providers—not to recipients. Cuts pertaining to beneficiaries make up only $17 billion of that amount—slightly more than one-third. How would beneficiaries actually be affected? Part B premiums now stand to go up by an amount of—zero in 1991, zero in 1992, $3.20 in 1993, and a total of $9.80 by 1995. Nine dollars and eighty cents over 5 years. Just for comparison, assume you get $5,000 a year annually from Social Security. If you received only a 3-percent cost-of-living adjustment every year for 5 years, your annual income would have increased by nearly $800 by 1995. Your Medicare premiums, part B, voluntary Medicare premiums, would have gone up by only $9.80.

In addition, Medicare part B deductibles would be increased from $75, where it has been since 1982, to $150. That is what is being proposed. Compare that to what our grandchildren will face if we do not cut into entitlements. We in Congress have taken away $757 billion in annual spending under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law and we say, you can't touch this, even in the event of a sequester. Well, just what are we going to touch? This amendment would remove a cut and add a tax—a tax on the rich.

Mr. President, I recall that, in December 1987, we faced a vote on whether agricultural corporations with gross receipts over $50 million should be required to switch to the accrual method of accounting, that is, whether they should stop being treated as family farms and thereby stop receiving millions of dollars in tax benefits. The Joint Tax Committee estimated that tabling that amendment cost $300 million in revenue over 3 years—revenue that we are now having to make up for in part with cuts in agriculture. The Senator from Iowa, now indignant and passionate over insufficient taxation of the rich, voted to table that measure and to give these huge agribusinesses a huge tax break at the eventual expense of the little guy family farmers.

So sometimes we forget about when and how we're defending the rich. I want to ask my colleagues who they think the rich are. We're down here speaking about how Donald Trump and Leona Helmsley need to pay their fair share, unless, presumably, they use Medicare. At least those rich are not paid their salaries from the vaults of the Federal Treasury. On February 1 of this year the Senate passed a salary increase that raised our annual pay to $98,400. That was up from $89,500 where we had raised it in March 1987. Prior to that, Senate salaries were $77,400 a year, and given the pressures on the Federal budget I think that is quite a plenty. And I proved that by returning my pay increases every year to the U.S. Treasury, over $20,000 in this year alone. I write that check personally and it goes right back into the Treasury of the U.S. Government.

The people right here on this floor of the Senate complaining about the rich are being paid $98,400 every year by—yes—none other than Joe and Josie Six Pack. How many of those people out there in the real world do you think are earning $98,400 a year? Only about 2 percent of all of the individuals in the United States have incomes as high as $75,000, and that includes salary, Government benefits, or any other income, only 2 percent. That sounds like a pretty good definition of the rich to me, the top 2 percent of America's salary earners, we are earning what that group was earning before our salary hikes. But we passed those through and I accept responsibility for my part in that process, but I didn't take the bucks. Now that is in the pot of expenditures that we can't touch. That big money machine which is the U.S. Government is taxing Joe Six Pack and paying out that money to someone else, without regard for any demonstrated need. And all of those expenses are untouchable.

It is time that they ceased to be untouchable. We made some very slight progress with this budget package in slowing the snowballing of entitlements expenses. This is not the time to now undo even that small progress. It is time, however, to stop kidding the American people, to stop pretending that our debt can be paid without reforming the entitlements system in some way, means-testing on COLA's or however else. I want to ask my colleagues one question: What do they think is going to happen if we have increases in Medicare expenses of 11.6 percent a year forever? And similar increases in Social Security and other entitlements programs? Does anyone here on this floor really believe that we can just let that juggernaut keep rolling along forever? What is their answer to that terrible problem? Tax the rich? If we can't even effect a modest deceleration of entitlements spending, I can tell you with absolute certainty that we will not—no never—solve our deficit problem—whether we raise taxes or not. What are we doing to ourselves and more importantly to the people who sent us here? That is the real and only question. I strongly oppose this amendment and I respectfully ask my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as this amendment demonstrates, the budget reconciliation package raises numerous concerns about how the Nation will be able to meet the basic challenges that face us. Health care for the elderly is one of the most important of these challenges, but there are many others in areas such as education, housing and the homeless, and crime and drug abuse.

In my view, the reconciliation package places needless restrictions on our ability to meet these challenges. For the next 3 years, it puts separate caps on the amount of funds that can be allocated for each of the three broad categories of discretionary spending—defense, foreign aid, and domestic programs. If we want to fund a major new initiative, we must reduce some other program within the same category.

One obvious result of the separate caps is to prevent reductions in defense from being used to pay for initiatives in other areas such as education.

We have a drug problem that is ravaging our communities and threatening every American family; 37 million Americans have no health insurance coverage. The AIDS crisis has infected one and a half million Americans and threatens to bankrupt health institutions in major cities and rural areas across the country.

We have schools where half of the children never graduate. Early childhood education is an important tool—yet only a quarter of eligible children are served by Head Start—one of the most successful programs.

Millions of children suffer because decent child care is beyond the reach of most working families. Middle-income families are being priced out of higher education.

Yet the wealthiest Americans have seen their taxes decline, and we spend billions of dollars on cold war weapons that demonstrates our mislead priorities. It is essential, as we move ahead to implement whatever budget aggreement is enacted, that we avoid unreasonable restrictions on our ability to allocate our limited resources to the areas where the challenges are greatest.

The Medicare portion of the budget summit agreement was an unfair attempt, one again, to make every elderly American the scapegoat for the enormous budget deficits we face. The Finance Committee package, while making some improvements over the summit agreement, would still place too heavy a burden on Medicare beneficiaries.

Under the summit agreement, Medicare would have been cut by $60 billion over the next 5 years. Nearly half of these cuts—$28 billion would come from beneficiaries by increasing the part B deductible, linking the part B premium to 30 percent of program costs, and requiring a copayment for laboratory costs. The Finance Committee package reduces that burden somewhat by approximately a third, raising $17.6 billion from beneficiaries, but it is still grossly unfair to millions of senior citizens.

The Medicare part B deductible is the amount that elderly and disabled beneficiaries pay out of their own pocket for physician services. Under current law, this deductible is $75 a year. The budget summit agreement would double this level to $150, and the Senate Finance Committee proposal adopts the same increase. That increase leaves the elderly with a difficult choice. They will have to ask themselves in the future whether they are "$150 sick" before they decide to see a doctor. As a result, many will delay seeking health care they need.

The elderly currently spend 19 percent of their income on health care, compared to less than 6 percent for the average American. Moreover, the elderly have moderate incomes that are, on average, lower than the general population.

Another factor we must consider is the increasing cost of private Medigap coverage. Last year, many plans imposed increases of up to 40 percent on elderly policy holders. It adds insult to injury for Congress to increase the Medicare deductible. Eighty percent of the elderly have secondary coverage with either Medicaid or Medigap, but 20 percent of the elderly rely solely on Medicare for their health care protection.

For a decade, one of the highest priorities of Reagan and Bush administrations has been to increase the share of the part B premium. When the Medicare Program started, the premium was set at 50 percent of program costs. In 1976, because health care inflation had outpaced general inflation, Congress passed legislation capping the premium increase at the percentage increase in the Social Security COLA.

As a result of this cap, the share of part B program costs paid by beneficiaries declined to 25 percent by 1982. The Reagan administration made numerous attempts to restore the tie between the premium and program costs, and to raise the share of the program covered by the premium. Congress never adopted the full increases that President Reagan requested—which went as high as raising the premium to 35 percent of program costs. Beginning with the budget reconciliation bill in 1982, however, Congress and the administration did adopt a series of temporary measures keeping the premium from falling below 25 percent of program costs.

The budget summit agreement proposed to raise the linkage to 30 percent. The current proposals by the House and Senate continue the temporary 25-percent rule. I disagree with this policy. I urge the Senate to let this rule expire, and return the part B premium to its linkage with the Social Security COLA.

The House package is preferable. It includes only $10 billion in beneficiary savings. It increases the deductible to $100, and the part B premium is held to 25 percent of program costs.

All three of the budget packages include an increase in the taxable limit for the Medicare payroll tax, the so-called HI tax. Under the summit agreement, the cap would be increased to $73,000 and raising $12.8 billion over the next 5 years. Under the Senate plan, the cap would be raised to $89,000, raising $19 billion. The House Democratic package would increase the cap to $100,000, raising $22 billion.

The HI tax is clearly regressive. There is no justification for any cap at all. Raising the cap even further would be good tax policy, and using these revenues to offset Medicare beneficiary cuts would represent good health policy as well.

I join with Senator HARKIN in the amendment that he is offering to the Senate package. I would prefer to go even further, by providing full protection at least for low-income elderly citizens against additional Medicare cost-sharing, and delinking part B premiums and program costs. But this amendment is an important step in easing the burden placed on the elderly by any increase in the part B deductible, and it will keep the deductible at its level under current law, $75. These reductions in the burden on the elderly will be offset by applying a surtax on the wealthiest Americans. This amendment means greater fairness for our senior citizens, and I urge the Senate to approve it.

I ask unanimous consent that a table indicating the revenue raised by increasing the cap on the HI tax to various levels may be printed in the RECORD.

I hope the Senate-House conferees will consider the alternative of raising the HI cap as a means of easing the burden on Medicare beneficiaries.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, during the past several months, I have been unable to support the budget agreements we have considered because a disproportionate share of the budget-cutting burden has been placed on the elderly. I cannot—and I will not—stand by and watch this Congress balance the budget on the backs of one of the most vulnerable segments of our population.

In my mind, Medicare and Social Security are nonnegotiable items. Period. End of statement. The integrity of these programs must be guaranteed. This amendment to eliminate the $75 per year increase in the Medicare part B deductible contained in this budget package is the bottom line for me.

Put simply, this amendment is absolutely essential to the health and well-being of our Nation, and I am pleased to add my support and cosponsorship to it.

Under this omnibus budget reconciliation bill, Medicare beneficiaries would have to pay $150 out of their own pockets before Medicare would pay their doctor bills. This means an increase of $75 per year for our senior citizens—an increase of 100 percent. This increase will have a disastrous effect on our elderly—particularly the hundreds of thousands of whom live at or below the poverty line.

To them, Mr. President, this deductible increase has the effect of a Social Security COLA cut in excess of 20 percent, for a person paying the full deductible.

Why Mr. President? Why should this burden fall unequally on our elderly? Many of my constituents ask me why Medicare seems to be easy prey for cuts every budget cycle. The reason, of course, is that the sheer size of the program makes it an attractive target. We all know that entitlement programs are growing by leaps and bounds, seemingly out of control. But instead of attacking the easy target for cuts, we must responsibly address the question of cost-containment. That's not what this package does.

I know, Mr. President, that the future growth predictions for Medicare are disturbing. If current growth trends continue, by the year 2004 the Medicare budget will equal the size of the defense budget of $300 billion; by the year 2012, medicare spending will exceed the combined budgets of the Social Security Administration and the Department of Defense; and by the year 2040, our entire GNP will go to Medicare.

As these alarming figures show, the issue of cost-containment cannot go unaddressed any longer. Instead of sacrificing our elderly, we must responsibly take action to reduce costs by strengthening our knowledge and our approaches to human needs.

I stand before my colleagues today as an advocate for the cost control which comes through medical research. Only through our investment in medical research can we find preventative treatments and cures which will reduce the future costs of health care. I have consistently fought for increased medical research funding and have been successful in obtaining increases for research on Alzheimer's disease and other aging-related ailments.

This year has been one of tremendous progress on these fronts. The Comprehensive Alzheimers Assistance, Research and Education Act [CARE], which I introduced with Senators METZENBAUM, GRASSLEY, and HARKIN, has been unanimously reported by the Senate Labor Committee and is awaiting floor action. This bill calls for a significant increase in funding for both research and support for caregivers. While this is pending, however, the Senate Appropriations Committee has moved forward in its commitment to addressing this devastating illness. This year alone, the Senate has provided $377 million for research at the National Institute on Aging—an increase of $138 million over last year.

In addition, Senator HARKIN and I introduced the "Independence for Older Americans Act" calling for a $1 billion increase in the federal research investment for all diseases and injuries which affect the elderly. I am pleased that a scaled down version of this legislation has also been reported from the Senate Labor Committee and will soon be considered on the floor.

In addition to key support for these efforts, the Senate Appropriations Committee has provided increased support for the timely processing of Medicare claims. Funding has increased by $475 million since 1986 to ensure that the needs of the elderly are met in the most effective and efficient manner possible.

This year alone, the Senate provided $15 million above the President's request—and $144 million over the 1990 funding level—to ensure that Medicare claims receive prompt and adequate attention.

Mr. President, I have laid out all these programs and initiatives to make a point: We have been moving forward. We've made tremendous progress this year—we've made a real commitment to the health and security of this Nation's older citizens. But this omnibus reconciliation bill is about to take us backward.

More to the point, it moves our senior citizens backward. Back into poverty—and back into the fear of not knowing how to make ends meet from 1 week to the next. That is clearly the wrong direction to take and the adoption of this amendment will correct it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator his time has expired.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished majority leader be recognized and the time not be charged against the amendments to follow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this will be the third time in less than 24 hours in which we voted on substantially the same issue. How many times is the Senate going to be asked to vote on the same issue? How many more Senators are going to craft amendments which are very attractive and which will require the Senate to go back over the same issue over and over and over again?

The Conrad amendment and the Gore amendment raised substantially the same issue that is raised here today. We are trying to get through this bill and get to the conference and complete action by the deadline of midnight tomorrow.

This is an attractive amendment. Who would not be attracted to the notion of imposing higher tax on those above a certain level and using the funds to reduce the cost of medicare to the beneficiaries? But we have to get a bill passed. We have to get this job done. I hope and pray that this is the last time we are going to vote on this issue, because it is the third time we are voting on this issue. And we have already disposed of it.

The Senate has spoken. I have made my views very clear. I say to the Senator from Iowa and other Senators, I agree with the thrust of these amendments. Once again, we face the same question we face so often in this body: Do we want to make a statement or do we want to make a law? I choose to make a law. For that, I am prepared to oppose amendments which I believe have merit because I know that the effect of their approval will be the opposite of that which is intended.

So I ask all Senators to join me in making clear for the third and last time that we want to finish action on this bill, we want to complete action on this bill, and we are going to refuse to waive the Budget Act for this purpose.

I understand the deeply held conviction of the Senator from Iowa. He is my friend and I have the greatest respect for him, but we have already decided this issue twice before. I do not see any reason why we have to keep on deciding the same issue in a slightly different form over and over again.

So with the greatest of respect and with the greatest of reluctance because I like the idea presented, I have been the principal advocate and the most outspoken Member of the Senate expressing the view that those whose incomes are the highest in our society should pay a high rate of taxation. That is not going to be the case.

So I urge my colleagues to join in refusing to waive this budget point of order and let us get on with the business before us and let us complete action on this bill tonight so that we can get to conference, get a conference report and complete action on that by tomorrow midnight. I thank my colleagues.

POINT OF ORDER: CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Pursuant to 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act, I raise a point of order that the pending amendment by the Senator from Iowa is not germane and I ask for the yeas and nays. I vitiate the request for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is so noted. The point of order is raised.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] is recognized.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I move to waive the point of order and ask for the yeas and nays.[S18OC0-B676]{S15792}and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will suspend, the vote will occur under the previous order in sequence as originally requested pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] is recognized for a period of 2½ minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3036

(Purpose: To impose a limitation on the implementation and collection of certain user fees)

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] proposes an amendment numbered 3036.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 58, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

(c) CARGO PREFERENCE USER FEES.—(1) No user fee shall be collected pursuant to subsection (a) unless the Secretary has first established and implemented a system for the collection, for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1995, plus an amount sufficient to compensate for inflation for that period, of user fees on United States-flag commercial vessels which win cargo preference shipment contracts pursuant to section 901(b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U.S.C. 1241(b)), section 901b of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U.S.C. 1241f), the Joint Resolution entitled "Joint Resolution requiring agricultural or other products to be shipped in vessels of the United States where the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other instrumentality of the Government finances the exporting of such products", approved March 26, 1934 (46 U.S.C. 1241-1), or section 2631 of title 10, United States Code.

(2) Each such user fee established pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be an amount equal to 25 percent of the difference between the lowest foreign bid offered and the bid accepted by the shipping agency. Amounts received by the United States Government under this subsection shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts as follows: 20 percent as offsetting receipts of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating and ascribed to Coast Guard activities, and 80 percent as offsetting receipts of the original shipping Federal agency and ascribed to such agency's activities.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in no case shall a cargo preference bid be accepted and contracted for pursuant to any law or provision thereof referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection at over 200 percent the lowest foreign-flag bid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2½ minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, my amendment limits section 301 which deals with Coast Guard user fees. It directs the Secretary, as he establishes and implements a system for collection of user fees applied to vessels enjoying the benefits of the Coast Guard, to establish a system that assures U.S.-flag ships that carry what is called cargo preference first actually is forced to pay a user fee that cannot simply be passed back to the U.S. taxpayer through increased rates charged to Government agencies and, two, requires a user fee of 25 percent of the Government subsidy called cargo preference to parallel the 25-percent cut that this budget package is forcing upon the American farmer.

Of these revenues that we are going to collect, 20 percent will be directed to offset the receipts of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating. The remaining 80 percent of these particular user fees will be directed to the Federal agency responsible for shipping the cargo. So in the case of Public Law 480, farm and food shipments, user fees collected would go back to the U.S. Department of Agriculture at a rate of 80 percent.

This will offset the deficit reductions required of our farm programs. This will require a fair share from shipowners and seafarers, many of whom make $142,000 in working a mere 6 months. In the case of the cargo sent by the Military Sealift Command, 80 percent of the user fee revenues would be directed back to the Military Sealift Command for revenues for sealift needs, like additional Government vessels, upkeep, or whatever.

Finally, my amendment assures that real deficit reduction is achieved through my amendment as well as through the underlying bill's provisions by plugging a gaping loophole that presently, without my amendment, allows U.S.-flag vessels to pass on to the Government the Government's own user fee.

That is ridiculous under this law the way it is before us. As it stands now, there is no teeth in any law that purports to require user fees from U.S.-flag vessels. That is why the DOD is forced to pay $70,000 to ship what could have been shipped at $6,000. That is why a company called IMCO was able to charge during the entire year of 1989, $289 per ton for what could have been shipped for $40 a ton.

Mr. President, I want to echo comments made yesterday by my colleague from North Dakota, Senator CONRAD.

Our farmers are taking an unfair hit by this budget package—four times as great as any other cut made in any other program.

The commonly held view is that agriculture is bring cut by 25 percent, but, in fact, because the differing nature of the budget baseline for agriculture, the real budget cut for agriculture is not 25 percent, it is 40 percent.

And, indeed, as Senator CONRAD stated, farm cuts at this level could very well mean the devastation of tens of thousands of family farms, particulary if CBO's predictions are accurate that real net farm income could drop by 21 percent regardless of any farm support cuts.

Senator CONRAD noted specifically farm cuts are four times the cuts imposed on defense.

But I can cite one program—a purely special interest subsidy—that has contributed not one dime to budget reduction.

This is a backdoor, hidden subsidy which serves one class of citizens—seafarers and shipowners.

I am submitting for the RECORD data I received from the Maritime Administration. You will see that captains of U.S.-flag vessels make $142,000 for working a mere 6 months. That is an annual rate of over $280,000. That puts them among the wealthiest Americans in the Nation. It puts them in the top 1 percent of the salary earners.

And it's all because of the American taxpayer and a budgetary atrocity called cargo preference.

I warned farmers would be asked to take deep cuts in their subsidies when we debated the farm bill. I offered an amendment that would have provided real savings to the Government by limiting how much U.S.-flag companies can charge for carrying cargo for the Government. My amendment would have saved at least $500 million over 5 years—that's a half a billion dollars that would have been used to buffer the blow to our farmers.

But my amendment was sabotaged with another that did nothing to reduce the deficit, it merely shifted the costs to taxpayers to a different program. In fact, the amendment would actually increase the cost of the cargo preference by adding the cost of interest from Treasury borrowing necessary to pay for this scheme.

Mr. President, U.S. shipowners and U.S. seafarers should not be treated as a privileged class. Their subsidies should be subject to the budget cuts, just like those affecting farmers.

Mr. President, my amendment is to section 301—Coast Guard user fees.

For anyone who understands cargo preference, it is plain to see that this section which calls for the Secretary to establish and implement a system of user fees for vessels benefiting from Coast Guard activities, this section is a sham and will unlikely produce any net revenues for the Coast Guard.

Why? Because whatever we charge U.S.-flag vessels in user fees, will simply be passed on to U.S. taxpayers by increasing what U.S.-flag vessels charge to carry our Government impelled cargoes.

Subsection 3 of my amendment plugs that loophole.

Subsections 1 and 2 addresses the question of equity—equity of requiring seafarers and shipowners to sacrifice just like farmers are sacrificing.

And although Senator CONRAD has pointed out farmers are being cut 40 percent, I am giving seafarers a break—they'll only have to pitch in at 25 percent—the farm cut estimate more widely accepted.

Mr. President, I have cleared this with the Parliamentarian, and my amendment was found to be germane.

It is not only germane, it is a necessity if the Coast Guard is ever expected to raise that $200 million in revenues in a way that will provide a net deficit reduction, instead of letting the revenues slip out the other door back into seafarers and shipowners pockets through increased cargo preference charges to the Government.

Mr. President, based upon CBO cost estimates and Maritime Administration statistics, we will be subsidizing seafaring jobs supported by cargo preference to a tune of $2 million per job during the next 5 years.

This is outrageous.

On September 10, U.S. News reported that U.S.-flag vessels were exploiting our Persian Gulf sitution by gouging the Government $70,000 to ship cargoes that could have been shipped for $6,000. That's immoral! That makes the oil company gouging look like petty theft.

It is going to come to a stop. And my amendment is a good first step.

Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues the item I mentioned found in the September 10, 1990, publication of U.S. News & World Report.

Entitled "Unpatriotic Profits", U.S. News reported that, and I quote,

> The Pentagon is miffed at what it feels is profiteering by operations of two U.S. cargo ships. Because the Navy is required to use American bottoms before contracting with foreign-owned ships, it paid two U.S. carriers $70,000 to send war materials to the Gulf. The comparable foreign bid: $6,000.

Unquote.

What this article was exposing is the wastefulness, taxpayer rip-off called cargo preference. Cargo preference assures a monopoly for U.S.-flag vessels over Government impelled cargoes.

Cargo preference is a subsidy which allows U.S.-flag merchant marine to enjoy Uncle Sam's open checkbook over which no one has any control.

So in the case mentioned earlier, if a U.S.-flag company wants to charge $70,000 to ship what otherwise could be shipped for $6,000, that's OK with Congress. If they want to charge American taxpayers even more, that's OK, too.

Now isn't it ironic that a Congress made up of Senators and Congressmen who have built their political careers on bashing Defense waste—what they call the gold-plated weapons, the $1,800 toilet seats, the $400 hammers, and so on, these same people get so uncomfortable and defensive when you suggest it's time to reform cargo preference?

What was exposed by U.S. News is unfortunately commonplace. It is unfortunately completely unrelated to the possible increased demand for cargo shipments because of our Desert Shield operations in the Persian Gulf.

These unpatriotic profits and profiteering are just as shameful as that related to oil company gouging.

And this gouging occurs year in and year out.

For example, let me share with my colleagues a typical case of price gouging during fiscal year 1989. There is a U.S.-flag company called IMCO. The Military Sealift Command, at my request, provided me with the data on how much IMCO has charged the U.S. taxpayer for its shipping services.

IMCO charged Military Sealift Command an average of $267 per measurement ton during fiscal year 1989.

The cost of similar service by foreign flag ships was $40 per measurement ton.

Now, why is it OK to let taxpayers be gouged with "gold plated cargo service" but not for "gold plated weapons"? Both, after all, are items purchased in the name of national defense?

Mr. President, I am submitting for the RECORD a copy of a recent Congressional Budget Office cost estimate of cargo preference. It reveals that during the years from fiscal year 1991 through fiscal year 1995, taxpayers will be gouged to the tune of $4.185 billion.

In view of the fact that according to Maritime Administration data, cargo preference supports a mere 2,024 seafaring jobs, that mean that taxpayers are going to pay $2 million per seafaring job, or billet as they are called.

For those wondering, the remaining 8,000 seafaring jobs are supported by the Jones Act which draws a hidden subsidy directly from the private sector through its monopoly, and the rest are supported by what is called "operating differential subsidies" which cost taxpayers around $200 million per year.

Because of the outrageous, hidden subsidy called cargo preference, U.S.-flag seafarers enjoy some of the highest wages and benefits in the world. I am submitting for the RECORD a copy of the wage and benefits for two typical classes of maritime vessels.

As you will note, a captain can earn over $142,000 for a mere 6 months of work. That amounts to over $284,000 per year per job or billet.

But like those $1,800 toilet seats, they are worth every penny, right?

Not hardly.

Mr. President, in 1982, the Office of Management and Budget produced a staff review entitled "U.S. Maritime Programs and Policy." Among other things, OMB concluded that, and I quote:

National security arguments provide little justification for provision of public assistance to the merchant marine industries.

HIGH PRICE LABOR

Mr. President, numerous reports over the years have underscored the high cost of U.S.-flag seafarers. Vice Adm. Kent Carroll in the early 1980's testified that one of the major reasons for the decline of our U.S.-flag merchant marine is the unreasonably high cost of union seafarers. He testified that it costs over $300,000 per year to cover the salary and benefits of a master of a U.S.-flag vessel, while a Navy captain in charge of an aircraft carrier was only getting $70,000 in salary and benefits.

Are union seafarers still paid enormous amounts? The answer is absolutely!

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert for the RECORD a copy of a table including the crew wages and fringe benefit costs for seafarers. I received this list from MARAD's Administrator, Warren Leback. I would just like to point out to my colleagues the costs associated with a master of a class A-3 vessel. The total per month cost of a master for an employer is $26,030. That comes out to $312,360 per year. Now this is not the highest paid job or billet, the master of an A-4 vessel, the largest, most powerful vessel class, costs even more.

But what does a master make per month? This chart reveals that the "W-2 wage" of a master equals $11,914 per month. Now, some of my colleagues will argue that the master billet is shared by two seafarers, that a single seafaring master does not actually work the whole year—instead, he usually works only 6 months.

This is suppose to lead us to believe that the master's W-2 wage is only $71,484 per year.

That is still pretty good money considering you only have to work 6 months out of the year, and then vacation for 6 months or get another job for 6 months to earn a little more income.

But Mr. President, you will note from the chart that U.S.-flag operators also have to cover the costs of a fringe benefit plan which is even more costly per month than the monthly W-2 wage.

MARAD officials explain that within this fringe benefit package are vacation benefits. These so-called vacation benefits provide a typical master the same per day salary for 28 days of vacation for every 30 days of work.

Amazing! $140,000 for 6 months work!

How in the world can our U.S.-flag operators afford to pay for this?

The fact is they can't, so Uncle Sam pays for it through hidden subsidies like cargo preference and subsidies such as the ODS's.

I ask unanimous consent that additional materials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Maritime officials produced the following chart. As you can see, the "A-3" Master makes $11,914 per month in wages. He will typically work 6 months out of the year, and collect the same amount of money on a per diem basis as "vacation benefits." The Master typically earns 29 days of vacation for every 30 days of work, so the "A-3" Master listed below would earn over $142,000 in wages alone for a mere 6 months of work.

NOTES:

1. The cost to the taxpayer of all wages and fringe benefits for the selected representative vessel types on a monthly basis ranges between $218,000 and $172,000.
2. Measured as a daily average cost per job, and ignoring the variation between high paid and low paid job categories, the range for the selected types is $346 to $229.
3. While vessel types "A3" and "B" are representative of a broad cross-section of the privately-owned U.S.-flag merchant fleet, there are both larger and smaller vessels in the fleet. No allowance has been made for either employer payroll taxes or employee income taxes. Take-home pay is substantially less than the "W-2 Wages" (gross pay).
4. The amounts shown in the last column, "Total Cost to Employer," are reduced, on average, by the amount of operating-differential subsidy shown in the response to question five ($8,800).

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 24, 1990.

Hon. CHARLES E. GRASSLEY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR: As you requested, the Congressional Budget Office has prepared an estimate of potential savings that might be realized from the termination of certain maritime programs and policies. They include (1) direct operating differential subsidy [ODS] payments and (2) cargo preference requirements imposed on most federal agencies.

As shown in the table below, the government spends about $1 billion annually to carry out these programs. Saving this amount, however, would be difficult in the short term. Operating differential subsidies, which cost around $200 million a year, are long-term contractual commitments of the government, and their elimination undoubtedly would result in litigation against the government. Furthermore, elimination of the subsidies or preference requirements probably would undermine the financial viability of a number of shippers who have received loans guaranteed by the federal government. Defaults on such loans could offset much of the savings that would otherwise result.

OPERATING DIFFERENTIAL SUBSIDIES

These are paid by the Maritime Administration (MarAd), under long-term contracts with U.S.-flag operators, to compensate for the lower operating costs of foreign-flag competitors. The CBO baseline includes no new contracts over the next five years, and spending under existing ODS contracts is projected to decline gradually as contracts expire. Baseline outlays average about $200 million a year over the 1991-1995 period and total spending could be as much as $2 billion over the remaining life of the program.

CARGO PREFERENCE

Under law, a large percentage of government-financed cargoes must be shipped on U.S.-flag vessels, often resulting in increased federal costs to the extent that the rates charged by U.S.-flag carriers exceed those of foreign competitors. The vast majority of costs associated with this requirement are borne by the Department of Defense [DOD], the Department of Agriculture [USDA], and MarAd.

ESTIMATED COST OF OPERATING DIFFERENTIAL SUBSIDIES AND CARGO PREFERENCE REQUIREMENTS

[By fiscal year, in millions of dollars]

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995	1991-1995
Operating differential subsidies	225	205	195	175	180	980
Cargo Preference:
Defense Cargoes	650	650	650	650	650	3,250
Agricultural Shipments [1]	135	150	150	150	150	735
Other major Federal shippers	40	40	40	40	40	200
Subtotal, cargo preference	835	840	840	840	840	4,185
Total	1,050	1,045	1,035	1,015	1,020	5,165

[1] Includes cargo preference and ocean freight differential costs incurred by USDA. About $50 million a year of these costs are reimbursed by MarAd through its ocean freight differential account.

Current law requires DoD to ship virtually 100 percent of its freight on U.S.-flag vessels. The costs of complying with this requirement appear to have dropped over the last 10 years, but still amount to between $600 million and $700 million a year, accounting for most cargo preference costs. If the agency were required instead to choose the lowest-cost carrier, much of this cost could be eliminated.

At least 75 percent of all agricultural shipments must be rserved for U.S.-flag carriers, adding $135 million to $150 million a year to the costs of the foreign assistance programs carried out under Public Law 480 and Section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949. USDA covers two-thirds of all resulting cost increases, including direct compensation for any ocean freight differential on concessional exports (Title I of Public Law 480). MarAd is required to reimburse USDA for the final one-third of cargo preference costs through its ocean freight differential (OFD) account. For this purpose, the agency borrows $45 million to $50 million a year from the U.S. Treasury.

Repealing cargo preference and requiring the use of the lowest-cost shipper would reduce the cost of shipping agricultural commodities by $135 million to $150 million a year. Savings would be about $90 million a year on Title I exports and $45 million to $60 million a year on donated shipments.

Most other nondefense agencies are subject to varying cargo preference requirements. Of these, only foreign assistance programs carried out by the Agency for International Development (AID) and oil shipments for the Department of Energy's strategic petroleum reserve incur any substantial costs on ocean freight. The elimination of cargo preference requirements for these agencies would result in savings of about $40 million a year. Other federal agencies incur higher costs to ship supplies, household goods and other government-owned cargoes, but the amount of such costs is relatively small and impossible to identify with available accounting data.

The costs shown in the table represent potential gross savings in each directly affected program or account. The government would realize such savings only if all agencies were to accept the lowest bid for ocean transportation, whether a U.S. or foreign carrier, and if appropriations were reduced correspondingly. Most of the potential savings are in appropriated programs.

In order to determine the net budget impact of eliminating these programs, effects on related federal spending would have to be considered. For example, CBO expects that terminating ODS contracts and/or cargo preference requirements would result in additional defaults on outstanding loans guaranteed by MarAd's federal ship financing fund. (Operators receiving ODS payments have $412 million in outstanding guaranteed loans; we don't know how much is owed by other cargo preference beneficiaries.) Similarly, Congressional action on cargo preference but not ODS contracts could result in the transfer of some subsidy costs to the remaining program. CBO is not able to estimate such effects at this time, but they are likely to be considerable.

BASIS OF ESTIMATES

For purposes of this analysis, CBO has assumed that no major programmatic changes are initiated by MarAd or other affected federal agencies over the five-year period. Major changes in defense policy could, for example, affect cargo preference costs. It is further assumed that average freight differentials on all cargoes remain at current levels.

Cargo preference costs are extremely difficult to identify or predict. Ocean freight costs vary significantly by the type of goods transported as well as the size and destination of each shipment. Even on similar shipments, rates fluctuate widely over short time periods. Further complicating the analysis is the fact that cargo preference costs incurred by most federal agencies are buried within general operating accounts and are rarely broken out precisely on a timely basis. CBO has based its analysis of cargo preference costs on the most recent data it would obtain for most major federal shippers.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CB staff contact is Deborah Reis, who can be reached at 226-2860

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

SCUTTLE CARGO PREFERENCE

Once again America's maritime industry is eating into food aid intended for the world's hungry. Earlier, U.S. merchant ships made fat profits from donated food being sent to starving Ethiopla. Now, they're taking a cut out of emergency food relief for Poland.

A large chunk of the $108 million in emergency food relief that the United States is sending to Poland will be devoured by the cargo preference—a law that requires most U.S. food aid to be shipped on American merchant vessels, which charge more than foreign ships.

The first shipment of U.S. sorghum to Poland, for instance, is costing about $85 a ton for shipping, compared to the estimated world rate of about $25 a ton. Every extra dollar spent on shipping eats into the amount that can be spent for food, and industry analysts estimate that one-third to one-half of the food aid for Poland will go for shipping. Those estimates may be high, but there's no doubt that the cargo preference will reduce the amount of food getting to Poland's bare cupboards.

The cargo preference amounts to a subsidy for the dwindling and non-competitive U.S. merchant fleet. Its alleged purpose is to keep a U.S. merchant marine intact in case of war, but the subsidy has more to do with the political power and PAC donations of the ship owners and maritime unions than any real military need.

The law requires that cargo being shipped from one U.S. harbor to another be carried in American ships with American crews. In addition, it requires that 75 percent of U.S. food aid shipped abroad be carried on American ships.

With a captive market, the American ships virtually can name their own price, and they can afford to pay their crews well. The average U.S. merchant seaman is reported to be paid $325 a day in salary and fringe benefits, about four times what foreign crew members are paid.

The biggest critics of the cargo preference are farmers, whose exports are reduced by the shipping subsidies. Backers of the shipping subsidy note the irony of criticism coming from farmers, whose subsidies cost taxpayers many times more than the cargo preference.

But the question isn't the size of subsidies, it's whether they're justified. Maritime subsidies are looking more and more dubious, if the merchant marine is going to be needed in wartime, the nation might be better served by an efficient competitive, modern fleet than by an obsolete one that has grown lazy behind subsidies.

Moreover, the cargo preference looks bad. It has the appearance of reducing the amount of food being sent to hungry people and of subsidizing one industry (shipping) at the expense of another (agriculture). If Congress insists on propping up the merchant marine, it should be done with direct subsidies, rather than by a cargo preference that slices into food relief.

Yet the movement in Congress is not to reform the cargo preference, but to expand it. A provision of this year's foreign aid bill would require countries receiving U.S. cash assistance to spend it on U.S. goods and to ship half of them on U.S. ships. The cargo preference now applies only to U.S. commodity assistance, not cash aid.

At the least, the expansion of the preference should be stricken from the foreign-aid bill. Sneaking through a fattening of an already questionable cargo preference is inexcusable.

U.S. MARITIME PROGRAMS AND POLICY: AN OMB STAFF REVIEW

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The purpose of this paper is to review current direct and indirect assistance to the maritime industry and the basic economic and national security rationales traditionally used to justify such assistance.

Since 1936, the Federal Government has spent over $9 billion in direct subsidies for U.S.-flag ship operations and ship construction in U.S. yards to help these industries compete with their foreign counterparts. Fifty-seven percent ($5.2 billion) was spent during the 1970–1980 period under the policies established within the Merchant Marine Act of 1970. In addition, the Federal Government has provided indirect assistance to the maritime industry in the forms of loan guarantees, tax deferments and preference for carrying government impelled cargo at a total cost of approximately $400-500 million a year.

Such assistance is provided to fulfill a number of public policy objectives established in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended in 1970. This study examines whether or not the public policy objectives set out in the 1970 Act are being met. Further, since many of the public policy objectives are premised on the notion that a U.S.-flag merchant marine industry is required to enhance the national economy and to provide sealift for national security purposes, an in-depth review of the economic and national security rationales traditionally used to justify Federal assistance to the merchant marine industry is also included. The major conclusions are presented below:

MAJOR CONCLUSIONS

The objectives established in the Merchant Marine Act of 1970 of maintaining or increasing the market share for U.S.-flag liner, non-liner and tanker operations have not been achieved. The U.S.-flag share of the non-liner vessel markets continued to decrease through the 1970's. While the U.S. share of liner shipping as a percentage of total liner tons increased over the 70's, the U.S. share of the total value of liner cargo decreased from 28 to 27 percent. Also, during this period the U.S. share of the world liner container fleet tonnage dropped from 45 to 20 percent.

The objective of stimulating efficiency in the U.S. merchant marine industries has not been achieved. U.S. crew sizes aboard subsidized vessels continue to exceed the crews used by major foreign maritime industries on comparable vessels.

In addition, even after establishing a wage index system in the 1970 Act to bring down crew costs relative to other U.S. workers, U.S. crew wage costs continue to be the highest in the world, often twice as high as the foreign competition. U.S. shipbuilding costs continue to be among the highest in the world, with a cost differential between U.S. and foreign costs exceeding 50 percent for many commercial vessels.

Economic justifications for Federal assistance to the merchant marine industries are weak. Balance of payments, employment and public revenue benefits derived from the subsidy programs are all negligible when viewed in the context of the national economy and contributions to the national economy of non-subsidized industries. While the industry and MARAD have attempted to quantify economic benefits, fundamental flaws of past analyses have not been addressed. Recent analyses fail to distinguish the proportion of the direct and indirect economic benefits that are attributable to the subsidies. In additon, they do not take into account the opportunity costs or potential benefits foregone as a result of resources being utilized in the shipping and shipbuilding industries. When all factors are considered, little evidence is available on economic grounds which would justify the provision of public support to the shipping and shipbuilding industries.

National security arguments provide little justification for provision of public assistance to the merchant marine industries. Navy ship construction, private ship overhaul and repair work are sufficient to maintain the shipbuilding and repair mobilization base determined to be required in case of a national emergency. For the U.S. shipping industry it is somewhat more difficult to translate the National Security findings of this report into specific recommendations regarding public assistance. Most of the major arguments advanced in support of assisting the U.S. merchant marine for national security reasons are seriously flawed. In a short term war, (less than 30 days) the U.S.-flag merchant marine fleet as currently configured is not likely to have an impact on the outcome because vessels do not have the speed nor are they the type of vessels likely to be required. In a longer term conflict, the presence of a U.S.-flag fleet does provide a margin of safety not exactly duplicated in non-U.S. sources of sealift. However, there is no basis for believing that non-U.S. flag sealift resources would not be available for U.S. use in times of war or peace. Much of the world's free world tonnage is controlled by U.S. allies. The seriousness of the risks the merchant marine may assist the nation to avoid are impossible to measure with accuracy. While there is little evidence that these risks are very great, ultimately, a willingness to assume any national security risk is a question of political judgment.

There is a need for change in the current structure of Federal assistance to the U.S. maritime industry. It is the recommendation of this study that the Department of Transportation review and redefine national goals and objectives for the U.S. maritime industry. If a direct subsidy program is advisable, approaches to improve the efficacy of the current program must be exmained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. May I inquire how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2½ minutes under his control.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield 1 minute? Might I ask the distinguished Senator from Iowa a question? I read the amendment. Perhaps it was not the right amendment in that the Senator said some of this money was earmarked.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. The amendment I was looking at did not have any earmarking. Does he raise user fees and then dedicate them to something in some part of Government?

Mr. GRASSLEY. We direct that 20 percent of it goes to the agency, the Coast Guard, and 80 percent goes to the agency that shapes, like in the case of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, shipping Public Law 480. Eighty percent of that money that comes in through the 25 percent fee would go back to the U.S. Department of Agriculture to offset the cost to the Government.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am not sure whether the amendment is germane or if it is in order. I did not understand it.

Mr. GRASSLEY. It follows the same language in the Senator's bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. We will review it. What I read, I did not find that language in it.

I yield the remainder of the time to the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield all time back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee having yielded back the time under his control, under the previous order, the Senator from New York, Mr. D'AMATO, is recognized for a period of 2½ minutes.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time be expanded to 5 minutes because this is a regional matter and I have the Senators from New Jersey, plus Senator MOYNIHAN. I understood that I was going to get 5 minutes. I did not realize it would be divided by 2½ minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator's request?

Mr. SASSER. I did not hear the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has requested his time be expanded from 2½ minutes to 5 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I object.

Mr. D'AMATO. If I might renew that request and say to the managers of the bill, it was pointed out when I made an inquiry as to an opportunity to raise the point of order pursuant to the appropriate section, I was to get 5 minutes. I have Senators from New Jersey, as well as the Senator from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, who would like to speak to this. I tried to be accommodating and went along with the unanimous-consent request when people asked for 20 minutes, 40 minutes, an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from New York, to control the time allotted to him he must send the amendment to the desk for consideration.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest to my friend from New York, I would like very much to accommodate him, but we have before us 10 more amendments. We have worked out this time agreement, and if we give additional time to the Senator from New York, why should we not give additional time to all the other Senators and their 10 amendments? At some point, we have to lay this reconciliation bill to rest.

We have a leadership amendment coming up tonight that is going to consume at least 2 hours. At some point, we have to go to conference on this bill tonight. The tax writing committees are going to conference on it tonight. As much as I would like to accommodate my very good friend from New York, I simply cannot at the present time.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am sorry that the manager of the bill feels that way. Of course, I intend then to raise objections when unanimous-consent requests come along for any extension of time, if that is the way we are going to play this game.

Mr. FOWLER. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. President, pursuant to section 2——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from New York that the document that has been sent to the desk is not in the form of an amendment.

Mr. D'AMATO. That is correct. It is a point of order, Mr. President.

POINT OF ORDER: THE BYRD RULE

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, pursuant to section 2001 of the consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act, I raise a point of order that subtitle B of chapter 3, page 64, line 11 through page 105, line 16, violates subparagraph D(1)(a) of the statute because it does not produce a change in either outlays or revenues. That is known as the Byrd rule point of order. I raise that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires, is there objection to the Senator proceeding under a point of order as opposed to an amendment?

Mr. FORD. Reserving the right to object, is this the part that the Senator announced a few moments ago in the aviation portion that the Senator was going to make a point of order on?

Mr. D'AMATO. Yes.

Mr. FORD. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is noted.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is authorized to offer an amendment.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, that is a mistake, and we have to fix it. Everybody knew he was going to make a point of order. When we listed them, we had points of order, and we had motions and amendments, and everyone knew he was going to make a point of order. I think it is unfair to deny him the right to make a point of order. We have a very minimal amount of time. We ought to give him that right.

For those who are so certain they are going to win this matter, let me suggest I will make the point of order when the bill is finished. There is nothing to preclude me from doing that. I think he ought to be able to. He has an interest. He has a right to make a point of order. Everybody knows what it is. He is right. Those who want to defeat it can make a motion, but it is subject to a point of order and everybody knows that.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I do not know what the procedure is, but I was under the impression that the distinguished Senator from New York was going to have an amendment and that was the unanimous consent. He and I have been talking about the problem he has with the bill. He announced he was going to make a point of order but he gets unanimous consent for an amendment, and I was surprised.

I had nothing else I could do because I have a substitute I would like to put in, so then the Senator can make a point of order against the substitute, because I have worked with half a dozen Senators or more to try to correct their problems. So I was caught as a matter of surprise and my objection was only because of the ruling of the Chair.

Now, if the Senator will allow me, the Senator can make a point of order now. Anyone can make a point of order at end of bill.

I apologize if I created any problems, but I was here expecting an amendment and I get a point of order. That was the unanimous-consent agreement, Mr. President. I think the Chair is absolutely correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. D'AMATO. Certainly.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to take full responsibility for that error. We were working with a lot of Senators about complicated issues. We were standing up here marking them. I knew he wanted to make a point of order. In the unanimous consent, we stated his request in error. I believe he ought to be permitted to make his point of order. That does not take away anyone's rights. All we have to do is move that we waive the Budget Act. We have been doing that all along.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New York be granted the time he had in the unanimous consent to make the point of order that he just made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FORD. Reserving the right to object, I have a parliamentary inquiry. And I ask the distinguished Senator from New Mexico if he would listen to me for just a moment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure. Of course.

Mr. FORD. I would like to have the objection laid against the substitute, or the modification, rather than what is in the bill. I have given the distinguished Senator from New York a copy of my modification, and I have not tried to be cute or funny in any way as it relates to this. So rather than doing that, I would like to have the opportunity to lay my modification down and then let him make the point of order against that and I will move to waive the Budget Act. Then we can have an up-and-down vote. I thought that was the procedure unless the Senator as he read the language would have agreed to the modification.

So if we could move that some way around, I say to my good friend from New Mexico, so I could have my way, I expect that is a way to untangle us here if he would use his prerogative.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this is an issue that obviously pertains to the big cities of America and big airports. It does not pertain to New Mexico. I have no way of knowing whether this is a fair proposal to the Senator from New York.

Let me suggest again there is nothing in that unanimous-consent agreement which precludes the Senator from New York from making a point of order. He may not make it now because the Chair may rule he cannot. But he can make it sometime before this bill is finished.

I submit to you, either let him do it now in some orderly, understandable, fair manner or it will be made sometime before this bill is finished, and I submit to my good friend from Kentucky he will not have any time to submit his substitute. He will send it to the desk and it will be voted on, unless he gets time, and I submit this

Senator will object to giving him time unless we decide we are going to give the Senator from New York time. We can do it either way.

Let us move on to the next amendment and maybe we can talk about it.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, when I raised the point of order I did not realize No. 1, that I needed unanimous consent for that. I think if one checks the record you will find I do not need unanimous consent for that. And even if, indeed, it was put down on the list in error that I was going to have an amendment, the fact is I raised a point of order.

I would like to inquire of the Chair, is my raising a point of order at that time appropriate or not? I do not believe there is anything that precludes me from raising a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator from New York that the ruling of the Chair as previously given is affirmed based upon the construct of the unanimous-consent request which was specifically cast in the format of an amendment.

Mr. D'AMATO. Let me raise this point. I do not believe there is anything in that consent agreement that precludes a point of order from being raised, is there? If there is not, when I am recognized I can raise a point of order. There is nothing in that agreement to preclude me from raising a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator, as the Chair interprets the unanimous-consent request that the Chair has before it, it spoke specifically and exclusively to the following amendments. So based upon the request——

Mr. D'AMATO. Correct. But does that preclude a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I would like to suggest we return to the regular order, but before doing so perhaps we could set aside the question that has been raised by the Senator from New York and in the interim this whole thing could be refashioned in such a way that it would treat all parties fairly, including the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York and others.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I do not agree with the ruling of the Chair, but the Chair has ruled. I do not desire to appeal at this point. Somebody might; if they would like to, they could. But I want to repeat, this Senator deserves the right to make his point of order in the sequence and with some debate. If we wait until the end of the bill, he is not going to have time.

I want to remind everyone there is going to be a lot of unanimous-consent requests made between now and 9:30 tonight, a lot of them. Just remember, fairness is fairness. What is good for the goose is good for the gander.

You may proceed.

Mr. SASSER. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senators from Hawaii and Wisconsin, Senators INOUYE and KASTEN, are recognized for purposes of offering an amendment.

Mr. KASTEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin, pursuant to the previous order, is recognized for a period of 5 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3037

(Purpose: To exclude charitable contributions from the overall limitation on itemized deductions)

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I call up the amendment which is at the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], for himself, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. METZENBAUM and D'AMATO, proposes an amendment numbered 3037.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1, line 25 of part VII of subtitle D of title VII of the bill, strike "and" and all that follows through page 2, line 2 and insert:

"(3) the deduction under section 170 (relating to charitable, etc. contributions and gifts), and

"(4) the deduction under section 165(a) for losses described in section 165(c)(3).

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I ask that Mr. METZENBAUM and Mr. D'AMATO be included as original cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, the Finance Committee portion of the reconciliation bill imposes a limitation on itemized deduction. Specifically, it disallows the amount of the deductions equal to 5 percent of adjusted gross income in excess of $100,000 for single and head of household returns.

So in effect it would raise the tax bill for upper income taxpayers. But this is the key of the amendment: in an effort to increase taxes, this provision imposes a tax on charitable contributions. Let me repeat: This provision imposes a new tax on charitable contributions.

The amendment that I have sent to the desk, along with Senator INOUYE and others, would remove the charitable tax deduction from the across-the-board 5-percent floor on itemized deductions.

When a taxpayer's tax bill goes up, as it will under the floor on itemized deductions, the taxpayer will lessen the out of pocket impact of the tax bill by reducing his or her charitable contributions.

Taxpayers have relatively no control over a number of itemized deductions. For example, the mortgage deduction or State and local tax deductions would not be necessarily in the greatest control of the taxpayer. But the tax on charitable contributions, the amount of charitable contributions, is something that they have particular control on.

This provision would greatly lessen the impact of their increased taxes. This is a tax on a broad array of charitable causes including the protection of the environment, health research, food programs for the homeless, schools, colleges, housing for senior citizens, and a myriad of other activities that enrich our society.

I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues a letter from a group called Independent Sector, which is a group of charitable organizations to encourage giving, volunteering. This amendment is supported by the American Cancer Society, United Way, Council on Education, Heart Association, Girl Scouts, Red Cross, et cetera.

I ask unanimous consent that the complete letter be made a part of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. KASTEN. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, let me tell you what the problem is. This one costs $2.5 billion. We are on the razor's edge right now with the $500 billion limit. This throws the bill totally out of compliance. If there ever was a killer amendment, this one is it. I urge you strongly to defeat this amendment.

Mr. KASTEN. How much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes.

Mr. KASTEN. I thank the Chair.

I do not want the Senator to yield. I simply want to point out that we are in a very difficult position here to determine what the effect on charitable contributions is going to be if they are in fact taxed. Someone makes an assumption that the charitable contributions of a group of people will be the same whether they are taxed or not taxed. I think they are going to go down, not up.

I do not think there is any way that we can determine whether this is going to cost $30 million a year, which is what the independent group says it is, or whether it is going to cost $50 million a year, which is what one of the estimates from joint tax is, because joint tax assumes that notwithstanding the fact there is going to be a tax on charitable contributions people are going to contribute exactly the same amount.

I believe the people are going to contribute less. We can make up this revenue. This is a very, very weak revenue estimate. Charitable deductions are different from any other deduction. They result in no personal gain for the taxpayer. It simply makes no sense to tax money that is given away to serve public purposes.

We really cannot determine the effect of the revenue estimate because I believe the people will reduce their charitable contributions if we impose this unfair tax.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

Mr. SASSER. I yield the time as the majority leader may consume up to the time on this amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, we have heard a lot of talk these past 2 days about the need to have a fair contribution by the very wealthy. This amendment would give to those making more than $100,000 a year $2.5 billion off the amount in the bill. It would result in the middle class paying more than those at the top of the income scale.

This amendment, if it is passed, means that those making $20,000 to $30,000, $30,000 to $40,000, $40,000 to $50,000 all would be asked to pay more than those making over $100,000 a year.

No one who has expressed a concern in this Senate over the past 2 days, either in words or in a vote, for the amount to be contributed by those at the top can possibly vote for this amendment.

If you feel that the bill's major deficiency is that it does not assess those at the top enough, this amendment subtracts from their contribution by $2.5 billion. And it renders the bill out of compliance, offers no offset. It is a direct gift of $2.5 billion to those at the very top of the income scale.

Once again, we have before us the proposition that the only way to advance a desirable social goal in our society is to cut taxes for those at the very top of the income scale. That is the effect here. Nobody make any mistake about it. The amount to be taken, the amount of contribution from those at the top is greater than those in the middle, under this bill, as it stands.

If you adopt this amendment, this again becomes a "soak the middle class" bill because what it says is we cannot even ask those above $100,000 or $200,000 or $1 million a year to make a contribution even equal to the middle class.

The bill asks for more from those at the top, not more enough to satisfy many Senators.

This amendment, if adopted, would say once again the American middle class is a group that is going to be asked to pay the most because we want to take it easy on those at the top. It is a desirable objective, certainly. We are all for the Girl Scouts. But the effect of it will be that we reduce the burden on those at the top by $2.5 billion.

If a Senator here feels that the wealthy in this country are paying too much under this bill, that we are asking too great a sacrifice of those who make more than $100,000 a year, then you ought to vote for this amendment. By definition, this amendment only applies to taxpayers over $100,000 a year; no one else benefits, no other taxpayer benefits from this amendment because the deduction limitation begins at $100,000 a year and up.

So that is the issue. If you think this bill poses too big a burden, asks too much of those making more than $100,000 a year, then you should support this amendment because this reduces the burden on those making more than $100,000 a year by $2.5 billion.

It throws the bill out of compliance, we do not meet the deficit reduction targets, and no alternative is sought. Let me tell you, when an alternative does come now or in future, it will be on the middle class. And once again we will ask the middle class of America, those making $30,000, $40,000, $50,000 a year to make up for the tax breaks that we have given to those making more than $100,000 a year.

I do not think we should start down that road now. I urge the defeat of this amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, will the distinguished leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. BUMPERS. Does the Senate bill provide for limitation of deductions on people who make over $100,000; is that the adjusted gross income?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, it is.

Mr. BUMPERS. Normally, someone who would reach $100,000——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair interrupts. The time in the control of those who oppose this amendment has expired.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BUMPERS. So your normally adjusted gross income of $100,000 means you have to make close to $150,000; is that not correct?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct.

Mr. BUMPERS. Second question: what is the limitation on deductions in the Senate bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. For a person whose adjusted gross income is $150,000, that means an income in gross of about $200,000 a year. The effect on that person's tax liability is $1,400.

We are to believe that persons making $200,000 a year, if you affect his or her tax liability by $1,400, they are going to start changing charitable contributions?

I submit that is an insult to those Americans at that level of income who will, should, and ought to continue making contributions to the Girl Scouts and the other charities.

Mr. BUMPERS. That was my point. I cannot imagine people who are charitable givers refusing to contribute for such a minor disallowance of a contribution. But collectively, of course, it adds up to $2½ billion.

The majority leader's point is well taken. I will not belabor it further, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a minute and a half.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, let me first of all say there are no wealthy taxpayers coming to us asking us to change the law to help them. The people who are behind the Kasten-Inouye amendment are the American Cancer Society, United Way, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. I ask each of you, which of these groups—Boys' Clubs of America, Family Services, National Association of Evangelicals—who are these people? Are these people the very rich?

No. These people are delivering their services. It is not the very wealthy saying, "We do not want to be taxed." Since 1917, when we first started itemizing deductions—1917—we have never, never in the United States of America taxed the contribution. This is the first time. We are plowing new ground.

If we can say 5 percent is good, maybe 10 percent is better, maybe 20 percent is better. Let us really tax them. It is not the wealthy who came and are behind this amendment. What we are saying is a large number of groups—I have a list of 700 different private organizations, voluntary organizations. They go from organizations that we all know very well to ones we have not heard of.

President Bush has referred to the efforts of charitable causes as a thousand points of light. In efforts to tax the rich, we should not dim the efforts of those who give. We are, for the first time since 1917, taxing charitable contributions, changing that threshold back and forth, changing the amount.

We are making the wrong decision by introducing the taxation of charitable contributions.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a factsheet on charitable contributions deduction be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the factsheet was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRO AND CON ARGUMENTS RELATED TO DROPPING CHARITABLE DEDUCTIONS FROM THE ACROSS-THE-BOARD-PROPOSAL TO LIMIT ITEMIZED DEDUCTIONS

OPPOSITION ARGUMENTS

Charitable giving has continued to increase after the 1986 Tax Reform Act, showing that charities' prediction of doom was wrong.

The 1986 Tax Reform Act had a negative impact on charitable giving. The Tax Reform Act ended the charitable deduction for nonitemizers and included gifts of appreciated property in the Alternative Minimum Tax. Information from the American Association of Fund-raising Counsel, on per capita giving, showed that individual giving increased by only 1.4 percent in 1987 and 3.2 percent in 1988. By contrast, it increased 11.2 percent in 1986 and 8.7 percent in 1985—the two years leading up to tax reform.

Total charitable giving by individuals also provides something of a barometer to judge the impact of the 1986 Tax Reform Act on giving. It is less precise because it doesn't provide direct information regarding behavior of individuals. However, total charitable giving by individuals also suggests that the Tax Reform Act of 1986 slowed charitable giving. Total contributions by individuals increased by only $1.7 billion (2.5 percent) in 1987, and $2.9 billion (4.2 percent in 1988). By comparison, in the two years leading up to the Tax Reform Act of 1986, total giving by individuals increased by $5.4 billion (9.9 percent) in 1985, and $7.2 billion (12.1 percent) in 1986.

The average increase in total charitable contributions was $2.3 billion a year in 1987 and 1988. By contrast, the average total increase was $6.3 billion a year in 1985 and 1986. This $4 billion reduction in 1986 and 1987 represents a very significant amount of charitable giving.

The increases in giving that we have seen since tax reform in 1986 obviously would have been much higher had Congress not ended, in 1986, the charitable deduction for nonitemizers and had Congress not included gifts of appreciated property in the alternative minimum tax.

The proposed floor on itemized deductions affects those with incomes of $100,000 or more. Upper-income individuals are particularly sensitive to changes in tax policy when they make their decision regarding the amount they will give to charity. In 1985 and 1986, prior to the 1986 Tax Reform Act, those with incomes of $1 million or more showed a surge in giving per average return of 43 percent. After the 1986 Tax Act there was a decline in contributions of 53 percent from tax years 1986 to 1987.

If we drop "charitable" out of the across-the-board package, state and local taxes and mortgage interest will expect and deserve the same treatment.

The charitable deduction is different from any other tax deduction. The taxpayer who gives money to charity for a public interest activity no longer has it for his own use.

The charitable deduction is thus a kind of voluntary tax. The taxpayer, rather than the government, decides on the amount of the tax and to what public purposes it will be devoted. It makes no sense to tax money that is given away to serve public purposes. Such action simply defeats the purpose of encouraging people to support those causes and services that they think are important.

Charitable deduction is a uniquely efficient way for government to encourage voluntary contributions for public purposes. It permits the exercise of a full range of individual choices by the taxpayer about what public purposes to support. It does so, instead of absorbing the same amount into the public treasury and distributing it, only for those purposes and proportions that government chooses.

It is very clear that charitable deductions are different from other deductions. They result in no personal gain for the taxpayer. And for that they reason deserve to be dropped from the across-the-board proposal to tax itemized deductions.

How will we make up the revenue that will be lost by dropping charitable out of the package?

The Joint Committee on Taxation has not provided revenue estimates regarding how the $29 billion to be gained from the across-the-board limitation on itemized deductions will be distributed among the deductions for state and local taxes, mortgage interest and charitable contributions. However, information from the Office of Policy Development suggests that the revenue loss from dropping charitable contributions from the proposal will be exceedingly small. Under a three percent floor, their estimate is that one-tenth of 1 percent of all charitable giving would be affected. That amounts to $96 million. Assuming a marginal tax rate of 28 percent, the loss to Treasury would be, at the most, about $26 million annually. It seems to me that is a very modest amount for the federal government to give up in order to keep the charitable deduction safe.

If charitable deductions would be affected only modestly, why should anyone be concerned?

There is reason to be concerned that when a taxpayer's tax bill goes up, as it will under the floor on itemized deductions, the taxpayer will lessen the out-of-pocket impact of the tax bill by reducing somewhat his or her charitable contributions.

ARGUMENTS TO BE MADE IN SUPPORT OF NO FLOOR ON CHARITABLE DEDUCTIONS

Who benefits from giving to charitable causes?

A broad array of services benefit from the increased giving for charitable causes, including protection for the environment, health research, food programs for the homeless, schools and colleges, refugee crises counseling, youth services, civil rights, hospitals, community and international development, the arts, housing for senior citizens and the myriad of activities in the public interest that enrich our society and protect its people.

A floor sets a very bad precedent.

A month ago, when Congress and the Administration proposed a three percent cap on all itemized deductions, including charitable, we opposed the idea in principle because it would tax money freely given to serve public purposes. We also opposed it because of our concern that a three percent floor would soon become five percent, then 10 percent, and ultimately the charitable deduction would go the same route as the medical deduction, eroding away to nothing. It is clear that our fears were justified. The ink was barely dry on the three percent floor under discussion in the House, when the Senate Finance Committee supported a five percent floor.

Gains from charitable giving compared to revenue lost to Treasury.

In 1989, individuals contributed $96 billion to a wide variety of services and causes that serve public purposes. The "cost" to Treasury was $13 billion—for the tax deductions individuals claimed for those $96 billion in contributions. Obviously that represents a great bargain for the nation and one that should be carefully protected from inroads such as the proposed floor on charitable tax deductions.

Cuts in federal spending for human services.

Government relies heavily on nonprofit organizations to deliver publicly-financed services. However, for the period 1982-90, nonprofit organizations lost $33 billion in federal support that they would have had available had FY 1980 spending levels been maintained. That amount is exclusive of Medicare and Medicaid. From 1982 to 1990, the inflation adjusted value of federal spending in the six budget functions of greatest concern to nonprofit organizations, exclusive of Medicare and Medicaid, declined a cumulative total of $120 billion compared to what would have been spent had 1980 spending levels been maintained.

Economic pressures on nonprofit service.

A key indicator of the economic pressure on nonprofit services is the extent to which these organizations have dipped into reserves to keep programs going. In 1977, nonprofits, in the aggregate, maintained an average reserve of about 25 percent of annual expenditures—a three-month reserve. By 1987, that reserve had dropped down to one percent of annual expenditures or about three and one half days of operative funds. If the pressure on contributors continues, it seems likely that a number of nonprofits could sharply curtail activities or fold—thereby increasing social costs.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today Senator KASTEN and I offer an amendment to the omnibus budget reconciliation bill which would exempt charitable contributions from the new limits on itemized deductions. We wish to remove charitable contributions from the 5-percent reduction on allowable tax deductions for certain taxpayers because of the negative impact it would have on those who give voluntarily to charity for a public interest activity.

The charitable deduction is perhaps the most unique and beneficial incentive in the Tax Code, and has been national policy since 1917.

The charitable deduction is different from any other tax deduction. The taxpayer who gives money to charity for a public interest activity no longer has it for his or her own use. The charitable deduction, therefore, is a kind of a voluntary tax. The taxpayer, rather than the Government, decides the amount of the tax and to what public purposes it will be devoted. It makes no sense to tax money that is given away to serve public purposes.

One of the consequences of increased taxes is that the taxpayer will lessen the out-of-pocket impact of the increase by reducing his or her charitable contribution. Our amendment would concede to the taxpayer that yes, we will have to raise your taxes, but, if you contribute to a charitable cause the increase on your taxes will not be levied on the charitable contributions. This is a small concession to increased taxes that would show support for charitable giving. The 5-percent disallowance would apply to all other itemized deductions, but would not apply to any charitable contribution.

It is very clear that the charitable deduction is different from other deductions. The charitable deduction in no way results in personal gain for the taxpayer. For that reason, the charitable deduction should be dropped from the across-the-board proposal to tax itemized deductions.

The revenue loss from dropping charitable contributions from the proposal would be exceedingly small. It is estimated that under a 5-percent floor, little more than one-tenth of 1 percent of all charitable giving would be affected. The loss to the Treasury would be slightly more than $27 million annually. While we are aware of the need for new taxes in this time of extreme budget austerity, we believe that this is a very modest amount for the Federal Government to give up in order to nurture charitable contributions.

In 1986 Congress ended the deduction for 72 million Americans who do not itemize their taxes. Senator KASTEN and I have introduced a bill to restore the deduction to nonitemizers. Congress may make another mistake by making an inroad on charitable deductions for itemizers with this 5 percent floor proposal.

Federal support to private, nonprofit organizations was reduced by $26.7 billion dollars from fiscal year 1982 to 1988. I feel that it is important to support charitable and nonprofit organizations at a time when Federal support is diminishing. President Bush speaked highly of our Nation's charitable organizations, referring to them as a Thousand Points of Light. Let us, at least, support charitable organizations by not hindering their efforts to raise funds privately. Without such support, these Thousand Points of Light will go out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired on this amendment.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

POINT OF ORDER: CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield before proceeding to the Senator from Connecticut, I raise a point of order under the Budget Act, section 310(D), against the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I move to waive the relevant parts of the Budget Act, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote on the motion to waive the Budget Act will occur in the sequence of the order.

The Senator from Connecticut may now proceed.

AMENDMENT NO. 3038

(Purpose: To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to extend to 10 years the period of limitation of collection after assessment)

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN], for himself, Mr. GLENN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. KOHL, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. DODD, and Mr. CONRAD, proposes an amendment numbered 3038.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. . 10-YEAR PERIOD OF LIMITATION ON COLLECTION AFTER ASSESSMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 6502 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to collection after assessment) is amended—

(1) by striking "6 years" in paragraph (1) and inserting "10 years", and

(2) by striking "6-year period" in paragraph (2) and inserting "10-year period".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to levels made, proceedings begun, or agreements made after the date of the enactment of this Act, with respect to assessments made after such date or assessments pending on such date (determined without regard to the amendments made by this section).

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, may I suggest with some modesty that I believe this amendment, proposed by Senator GLENN and me, ought to be supported by everyone, and it is unique among the amendments that have been introduced today. This amendment can raise as much as $600 million in the next 5 years, and it asks nothing more of law-abiding, taxpaying citizens of America. Further, it does not change at all the underyling tax structure in the reconciliation bill.

This amendment would raise substantial revenues over the 5-year period addressed in this reconciliation bill, and it would raise those revenues from businesses and individuals who have received tax assessments and notices—people who know they owe taxes, but have not paid them. To be fair to all of the honest, taxpaying citizens in this country, we must not let our rights to collect these overdue taxes slip through our fingers.

The events of the last few weeks have demonstrated the importance of this change in the law. This reconciliation bill confronts us with the awful reality of having to raise taxes in order to deal with the budget crisis. In these circumstances, few things could be more important than our ability to collect taxes that are admittedly owed to the Federal Government but are not being paid.

In August, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, under Senator GLENN's chairmanship, examined the growing backlog of IRS "accounts receivable", that is the backlog of uncollected taxes. These accounts receivable have grown from $26 billion in fiscal year 1983 to over $60 billion in fiscal year 1989. I realize that some accounts are mistakenly included in this figure, but it is clear that we are simply not collecting tens of billions of dollars in taxes that are indisputably owed to the Government, and the amount is growing. When accrued interest and penalties are included, current IRS accounts receivable are over $95 billion and are expected to be over $100 billion by the end of 1991.

One of the most disturbing consequences of this growth in accounts receivable is that more and more delinquent taxes become uncollectable each year, as the applicable statute of limitations expires. Under current law, once an assessment of taxes is made, the Government has 6 years to initiate collection proceedings, or it can lose its right to collect. In 1989, $2.1 billion in accounts receivable became uncollectible because the statute of limitations expired. According to GAO, when interest and penalties are included, the amount of money owed to the Government that simply went out of our reach in 1989 was actually $5.6 billion.

How can we ask honest, hard-working, taxpaying Americans to pay more taxes, when every year the Government is losing its right to collect billions of dollars owed by people who have not paid their taxes? We must take steps to correct this problem.

This amendment would extend the statute of limitations for collection of assessed taxes from 6 years to 10 years. This would help the IRS to stem the hemorrhaging of expiring accounts under the statute of limitations. The bill would cost nothing, and would leave the IRS free to structure its enforcement efforts as it sees fit. But it would give the agency more time to go after tax cheats whose debts to the Government would otherwise become uncollectible.

The IRS has unofficially estimated that extending the statute of limitations to 10 years would enable collection of well over $500 million in additional revenue in fiscal years 1991-95. The General Accounting Office believes that these figures underestimate the amount of additional revenue that could be collected, because the IRS calculations assume a continued 5 percent growth in expiring accounts receivable, when in fact, expiring accounts have grown by approximately 20 percent in recent years. Assuming growth of 20 percent, GAO estimates that over $600 million in additional revenues could be collected by fiscal year 1995. Recently, the Joint Committee on Taxation offered a preliminary estimate that the extension of the statute of limitations would raise revenues of up to $250 million over this 5-year period. Mr. President, there may be disagreement as to how much revenue this amendment would raise, but all concerned agree that it will raise revenue.

Mr. President, this amendment is fair. The extended statute of limitations would apply to those amendments as to which the current limitations period is running, but it would not apply to those assessments as to which the current statute of limitations has already expired. More importantly, the bill offers some measure of fairness to the people in this country who do pay their taxes, people who are not in a position to get a tremendous windfall merely because an overburdened IRS cannot go after them quickly enough.

I hope my colleagues will support this amendment. It could enable the Government to collect hundreds of millions of dollars over the next 5 years, money which could contribute to reducing the deficit or reducing the need for more taxes.

I yield to the Senator from Ohio for further comment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I support this amendment by Senator LIEBERMAN very strongly. It gains revenue. At the same time, it gets the tax deadbeats, scofflaws, and chiselers who already owe taxes and do not pay them. In 1983, we lost $26 billion; in 1989, we lost $60 billion to delinquent taxes in that year.

If you add currently not collectibles to that, it comes up to a total of $96 billion, when you add in the unpaid tax interests and penalties. But the statute of of limitations runs out, and we cannot go after these people. Because we have no longer authority to do it, it is no longer available for collection because of this 6-year limit.

In 1983, we lost $600 million; in 1989, we lost $21 billion because of the statute of limitations

We tried to get more IRS agents a couple weeks ago here on the Treasury-postal appropriations, and we failed because of procedural matters here.

But, Mr. President, this, I submit to my colleagues, is a revenue generator. As Senator LIEBERMAN has said, the IRS has said $500 million over the next 5 years; GAO says $600 million. The Joint Committee on Taxation says $250 million.

Mr. President, we do this by getting the cheapskates and truants, and I ask everybody to join this posse. Go get them, and get some money at the same time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President I am in a position where, frankly, I am not on the committee of jurisdiction, and I have no idea whether we ought to accept this or not. It sounds good. I am not going to oppose it.

It seems to me, however, that the administration has some objections. I have not been privileged to speak with them about it, having not had time, nor have they sought me out. Not that I should. Frankly, I am going to leave this up to the Senate.

This extends the statute of limitations for certain businesses and individuals who have received assessment notices, and the statute goes from 6 years to 10.

This must be a little bit more onerous than it appears on the surface, but I am not going to resist it to any degree. Well, I am not going to resist it very hard here, anyway. We will let the Senate decide.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, for the record, I would like to make it clear that I am opposed to the amendment passed tonight that extends the statute of limitations on the collection of income taxes from 6 to 10 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A minute and 15 seconds remains to the Senator from New Mexico if he wishes to use it.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, we proceed, then——

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, before proceeding to a rollcall vote on the Nickles amendment, all time has been yielded back on the Grassley amendment, and I would ask the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, is he agreeable—if I could have his attention—is the distinguished Senator from New Mexico agreeable to a voice vote on the Grassley amendment, as well as the Lieberman amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. Nobody has asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SASSER. As well as the Lieberman-Glenn amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection to voice voting Senator GRASSLEY's amendment or the Lieberman-Glenn amendment.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to table the Nickles amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I request the yeas and nays on the Nickles amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There now is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, point of clarification. I intended to make a motion to table the Nickles amendment. Is that the matter that is pending at the present time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending question.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand debate is not in order, but I ask unanimous consent to inquire for 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Before we start voting on the tabling motion, could we not voice vote the two amendments that we have heretofore agreed would not require votes?

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend from New Mexico, that is what I set out to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the Senate's pleasure?

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that the pending tabling motion be set aside and that we proceed to voice vote the Grassley amendment and the amendment of the distinguished Senators LIEBERMAN and GLENN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3036

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the Grassley amendment.

The amendment (No. 3036) was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3038

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the Lieberman-Glenn amendment.

The amendment (No. 3038) was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3034

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion to table the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to inquire for 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. What is the sequence of votes that we now have? Could either the Chair or the chairman state that?

Mr. SASSER. As I understand it, Mr. President, we will have a——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will suspend. The Chair requests order in the Senate. There is a lot going on in the Senate. There needs to be order so that the Chair and the Parliamentarian and all Senators may follow closely.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I defer to the Parliamentarian to indicate the sequence of votes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first vote will be on the motion to table the Nickles amendment. Should the motion carry, then the following order will be the motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to the Harkin amendment. Once the Harkin amendment is disposed of, the question will be on the motion to waive the point of order of the Budget Act on the Kasten amendment.

That being perfectly clear, the question is on agreeing to the motion to table the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES].

The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced, yeas 0, nays 100, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 49, the nays are 51; three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

The motion to waive having failed, the Chair is prepared to rule the amendment of the Senator from Iowa proposes a surtax on individuals with taxable incomes in excess of $1 million. Since there is nothing in the bill on the tax rate for individuals, the amendment is not germane and falls under section 305(B)(2) of the Budget Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

AMENDMENT NO. 3037 MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT

Mr. KASTEN. Parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the pending business is the motion by the Senator from Wisconsin to waive section 310(d)(2) of the Budget Act.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, what is the 5-year deficit effect of the Kasten-Inouye amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator that he will attempt to obtain the information from the Budget Committee.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Wisconsin that to exclude charitable contributions from the overall limitations on deductions that may be taken from those whose incomes exceed $100,000 would result in an estimated revenue loss of $2.5 billion.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I have a further inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. President, out of 5-year savings in S. 3209 is the reconciliation bill below or above the instructions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not in a position to respond to the Senator's inquiry. Under the previous order——

Mr. KASTEN. Parliamentary inquiry. What is the situation? Are the 5-year savings in the reconciliation bill before us above or below the instructions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that under the previous action the Finance Committee would fail to meet its instructions.

Several Senators called for regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive section 310(d)(2) of the Budget Act, proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chair reminds Senators that a 10-minute vote has been previously agreed to.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 39, nays 61, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 39, the nays are 61. Three-fifths of Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin would result in a loss of revenues over 5 years of $2.5 billion. This would result in having insufficient savings attributed to the Finance Committee. Therefore, the amendment is out of order under section 310(d)(2) of the Budget Act.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, could we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the votes on any remaining amendments that were offered under the previous order be stacked to occur after time has expired on all of the stacked amendments. I further ask unanimous consent that the rollcall vote on the first amendment have a 15-minute duration and thereafter the remaining rollcall votes have a 10-minute duration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. D'AMATO. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SASSER. May I inquire of the Senator?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I was merely trying to get an explanation of exactly what he was saying. I wanted to be clear.

Mr. SASSER. Let me make myself clear. What I am requesting is that the votes on the remaining amendments be stacked, just as the votes on the preceding amendments that we voted on were stacked, rather than having an amendment go to 2 mintues and then a rollcall and an amendment for 2 minutes and a rollcall, et cetera.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I have no objection.

Does the Senator intend to stack those amendments that will be offered after the time has run out? Is that his plan, as well?

Mr. SASSER. There are amendments to be offered after time has run out on which there will be not debate. There is an amendment, as I understand it, by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], an amendment by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], and perhaps an amendment by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, under the previous order, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] will be recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the amendment by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] will not be offered. He has chosen to withdraw that. So the next amendment to be considered is the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have time agreements on these amendments, but we do not have them stacked, is that correct? They will just be sequential?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. There are time agreements but there is no order to stack.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder, to convenience the Senators and try to get this where we could block the votes, if we could not try to accommodate the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. D'AMATO. If I might address an inquiry to the managers and then have an opportunity, depending on whether the managers agree, to confer, and I have conferred with two of my colleagues. I believe that the Senator from Kentucky, Senator FORD, would offer a modification to section 305; that is, that section which deals entirely with the language as it affects airports. The Senator from New York would then be recognized to raise a point of order, and we would have 10 minutes to be equally divided. I already have 5 minutes, supposedly, on an amendment which I withdrew. I think, in the interest of time, it would eliminate two points of order, because I will at some point in time raise a point of order to that section 305, which is in the bill at this point in time. The Senator will undoubtedly submit a modification or an amendment if my point of order is sustained. We will have another point of order raised to his amendment, which will necessitate another vote.

So I suggest to the managers, if they can accommodate us in that way, we would save time. We would have one vote on the point of order as it relates to section 305, as modified by my distinguished colleague, section 301, that dealing with airports.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I previously stated to the Senator from New York that we would work to accommodate him in any way that we could within the framework of also accommodating the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD]. Now, we have a whole bunch of amendments here and many Senators have agreed to 2 minutes, 4 minutes, et cetera. In an effort to accommodate the Senator from New York, I ask if he could not agree to 5 minutes on a side, and we would have to get unanimous consent also to extend the time.

Mr. D'AMATO. That is fine. So we understand the title we are talking about is title III, subtitle B, airport capacity, an entire subtitle, chapters 1 through 7. The point of order will lie to the modification submitted to this subtitle when Senator FORD submits his amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest to my friend from New York, maybe we could just proceed with the first amendment. How much time do we have on that?

Mr. SASSER. Four minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Why do we not try to go with that and then why do we not try to work out a proposed unanimous consent with Senators FORD and D'AMATO.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I renew my previous unanimous-consent request with regards to stacking the votes.

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] is recognized to propound a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I simply renew my previous unanimous-consent request that all amendments be stacked and voted on after the time is expired on the last amendment with the first amendment consuming 15 minutes of rollcall vote and the amendments thereafter consuming 10 minutes per rollcall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object. How much time remains on the reconciliation process?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time under the reconciliation act has expired. Unanimous consent agreements exist on a number of individual amendments.

Mr. STEVENS. Is there a unanimous-consent request on the leadership amendment yet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not at this time.

Mr. STEVENS. And the existing agreements for the time limits on these amendments——

How much time is that,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The total is about 19 minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, the unanimous-consent request by the Senator from Tennessee is agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3039

(Purpose: To deposit all increased motor fuel taxes (other than taxes on railroads) into the Highway Trust Fund)

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I call up an amendment at the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], for himself, Mr. BURDICK, and Mr. BURNS, proposes an amendment numbered 3039.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 30 of subpart B of part I of subtitle D of title VII of the bill, between lines 20 and 21 insert the following:

(1) EFFECTIVE RATES OF TAX.—Notwithstanding the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) of this section, for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986—

(1) the Highway Trust Fund financing rate is—

(A) 13 cents per gallon for periods beginning after November 30, 1990, and ending before July 1, 1991,

(B) 18 cents per gallon for periods beginning after June 30, 1991, and ending before January 1, 1992, and

(C) 18.5 cents per gallon for periods beginning after December 31, 1991,

(2) the deficit reduction financing rate is 0 cents per gallon for periods beginning after November 30, 1990, and

(3) paragraph (8) of subsection (k) of this section (relating to floor stocks) shall not apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. The Senate is not in order. The Senator from Idaho has the floor and deserves to be heard.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, the discussion on the gas tax was thoroughly aired yesterday. I have had many people from this town today tell me they had vote counts; we had over 50 votes prepared to strike the gas tax. We did not get to that vote. I thank all Senators who were helpful in our efforts yesterday.

But as a fallback position, this amendment will put all motor fuel taxes that are in this bill—4.75 cents per gallon to be assessed—in the trust fund. The 4.75 cents per gallon to be assessed against the railroads will continue to go into the general fund.

This Senator made it clear I do not think we should be raising fuel taxes, but if we are going to, we should put it in the Federal highway trust fund.

The Finance Committee proposal to put half the motor fuels in the trust fund, if adopted, will be the first violation of the user-fee principle which has been the backbone of our highway program since 1956.

Mr. President, I want to make this point very clear and then I will close and yield to some of my colleagues: If the motor fuel taxes are to be raised for deficit reduction, they score for deficit reduction the highway trust fund, just as they would if they put them in the general fund. There is no deficit reduction logic that requires putting any of these user fees in the general fund. I know the opponents will say there will be pressure later on to spend this money. I only say that may well be that there will be pressure, but it would only be honest pressure from the public.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter from ATAC, American Transportation Advisory Council and the some 36 organizations that support my amendment, that I am sure my colleagues have all been contacted about, be printed in the RECORD at this point; and the position of the American Road & Transportation Builders Association be printed in RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN TRANSPORTATION ADVISORY COUNCIL,
October 15, 1990.

Hon. Steven D. Symms,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SYMMS: The American Transportation Advisory Council (ATAC) consists of over seventy organizations and associations actively engaged in the transportation construction industry. All of us are vitally concerned with the approach currently being taken to solve the budget deficit crisis. Of particular note is the proposal to raise the federal gasoline and diesel fuel taxes for deficit purposes.

For more than 34 years, motor fuel taxes paid by highway users have financed the nation's highway improvement programs and in recent years, urban mass transit grants. The success of the Federal-aid Highway Program is due, in large measure, to the user financing mechanism of the Highway Trust Fund. The public supports road programs because they can see the benefits gained from the payment of the federal and state motor fuel taxes. With surface transportation needs growing at an alarming rate, sufficient investment must be made if our transportation system is to provide the level of service which Americans demand and on which the national economy depends.

A motor fuels tax increase for deficit reduction would destroy the most equitable and dependable source of transportation development funding. It would remove the link between the user-pay concept and transportation improvement work seen by business and the motoring pubic.

The American Transportation Advisory Council urges you to at least keep the faith with the motoring pubic by placing all of the revenue from the 9.5 cents-per-gallon increase in the federal motor fuels tax proposed by the Finance Committee in the Highway Trust Fund. Revenue accruing to this trust fund will be scored for deficit reduction if allowed to accumulate in the Highway Trust Fund based on federal accounting principles. If there must be a motor fuels increase for deficit reduction, the integrity of the Highway Trust Fund must be maintained so as to meet this nation's future highway needs.

Please support efforts on the Senate floor during debate on the tax portion of the reconciliation bill which would provide for all highway related motor fuels revenue going into the Highway Trust Fund.

Respectfully submitted,

American Road and Transportation Builders Association, Associated General Contractors of America, Construction Industry Manufacturers Association, National Asphalt Pavement Association, Associated Builders and Contractors, Salt Institute, Virginia Road and Transportation Builders Association, Wilbur Smith Associates, American Concrete Pipe Association, American Society of Civil Engineers, United Bus Owners of America, National Moving and Storage Association, International Bridge Tunnel and Turnpike Association, The Road Information Program, National Waterways Conference, Better Roads and Transportation Council, American Consulting Engineers Council, National Society of Professional Engineers, National Utility Contractors Association, Washington Representative, Florida Department of Transportation, American Trucking Associations, National Redi Mixed Concrete Association, National Stone Association, Highway Users Federation, Associated Equipment Distributors, Portland Cement Association, International Road Federation, Contech Construction Products, American Bus Association, National Coal Association, Parsons Brinckerhoff, Asphalt Institute, American Public Works Association, National Association of Counties, Art Cameron Associates, American Public Transit Association, Donohue Associates, U.S. Chamber of Commerce, National Aggregates Association.

POSITION OF THE AMERICAN ROAD AND TRANSPORTATION BUILDERS ASSOCIATION ON THE TREATMENT OF THE MOTOR FUEL EXCISES DURING SENATE CONSIDERATION OF THE BUDGET DEFICIT LEGISLATION

(1) ARTBA categorically opposes the diversion and use of federal highway user fees for any non-transportation purpose—including deficit reduction.

(2) If, however, there is absolutely no alternative to including the motor fuel excises in a deficit reduction plan, we believe that any new revenue derived from federal highway user fees and excises should be placed in the Highway Trust Fund for the express purpose of financing needed transportation capital improvements.

In this regard, ARTBA urges support of a floor amendment to the budget legislation that will be offered by Sen. Symms. The Symms Amendment would assure that all new revenue generated by the federal motor fuel excises is credited to the Highway Trust Fund.

In the least, recognizing the enormous unmet capital needs on the Federal-aid Highway System, the budget legislation should contain a provision guaranteeing that any portion of the motor fuels excise increase not now credited to the Highway Trust Fund is automatically credited to the trust fund no later than October 1, 1995.

(3) A freeze on Federal Highway Program spending over a two- to five-year period is unacceptable, given the nation's serious and growing transportation capital needs. The Congress must recognize these needs and provide assurance in the deficit reduction legislation that increased highway spending will be achieved during the period 1991-1995.

RATIONALE FOR SENATE SUPPORT OF THE ARTBA POSITION

According to the U.S. Department of Transportation's 1989 report to Congress, more than 40 percent of the mileage and almost a third of the bridges on the Federal Highway System are in imminent need of repair or replacement. DOT says a sustained 20-year, $40 billion per year investment is necessary to meet identified capital needs on the Federal Highway System alone. FY 1990 federal highway spending totalled just over $14 billion.

Diverting highway user fee revenue from the trust fund would deny the nation the economic benefits that can be derived from increased capital expenditures on transportation infrastructure improvements: creation of millions of American jobs and improved productivity, long-term corporate profits and increased private investment through greater efficiencies in transportation for the business sector.

According to the White House Office of Management & Budget, in terms of deficit reduction scoring, budget goals could be met—in an accounting sense—by putting all new federal highway user fee revenue in the trust fund account.

Congress and the Administration would still retain control over trust fund outlays.

The 1995 end-of-year cash balance in the Highway Trust Fund could be viewed as an investment in future program expansion to meet transportation infrastructure needs once the economy and deficit situation has stabilized.

This "investment in the future" would be consistent with the President's comments in releasing the Administration's National Transportation Policy Statement in March and comments in his September 11 address to Congress that all new taxes that are part of a deficit reduction package should "not threaten economic growth."

In terms of equity, the proposal under consideration in the Senate asks American motorists, truckers and the Federal Highway Program to shoulder a disproportionate share of the deficit reduction revenue burden:

The proposed 9.5 cents-per-gallon increase in federal motor fuel excises represents 30% of the total proposed new revenue—by far, the single, largest source of new revenue.

On September 28, the U.S. House of Representatives passed H. Con. Res. 362 by voice vote, which explicitly recognizes the nation's transportation infrastructure capital needs. The resolution states "Highway and aviation user fees should continue to be dedicated to these [Highway and Airport/Airways] Trust Funds and should not be used for deficit reduction purposes."

Two-hundred-fifty-one members of the House are co-signers of H. Res. 41, which also denounces use of the federal motor fuel excises for deficit reduction purposes.

According to numerous opinion surveys taken in recent months—most recently a survey commissioned by ARTBA September 19-20—three out of four Americans oppose the use of the federal gasoline tax for deficit reduction purposes. In fact, 55% of respondents to the ARTBA-commissioned survey said they would be "less likely" to reelect a member of Congress who voted to increase the federal gas tax for deficit reduction.

On October 9, the Small Business Legislative Council, a permanent Washington coalition of 105 associations representing 4.5 million small businesses across the nation, adopted a policy position urging Congress to direct all funds raised through any increase in the federal motor fuel taxes to transportation improvements.

On October 15, over three dozen members of the American Transportation Advisory Council—including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce—signed a letter to Congress urging that all funds raised through any increase in the federal motor fuel excises be placed in the Highway Trust Fund.

OCTOBER 16, 1990.

Mr. SYMMS. I yield 1 minute to my colleague from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator my remaining time.

Mr. SYMMS. I yield my remaining time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is 53 seconds.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I want to speak strongly in favor of this amendment. First I think it is imperative we do not allow these funds to go out of the trust fund. Lord knows what the tax will be if we allow it to go into the general fund as time progresses.

Second, we have incredible infrastructure needs in this Nation. The rules do not allow us to amend the trust fund here but we can easily broaden the purposes of the trust fund if excess funds are there with respect to highway purposes to take care of such things as water systems and sewage systems or the ports or whatever else it is we need in this fashion. We can hold it in the trust fund so we do not violate any of the budget requirements here, so we do have the funds there to use for those incredible infrastructure needs which are fast approaching us.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I want to rise to express my strong support for this amendment offered by my good friend Senator SYMMS of which I am a cosponsor. This amendment will ensure that all new revenues raised by the 9½-cent increase in the motor fuels tax will go to the highway trust fund to be spent on our unmet highway needs.

In my State of Montana, we rely on our highways and secondary roads heavily. There are few forms of alternative transportation in Montana. I have heard some say that an increase in the motor fuels tax is good energy policy because it discourages people from driving. Well, that may be true in Washington, DC, and New York City where people can take the bus and the subway, but in Montana people do not have those options.

People drive in Montana because they have to; it is often the only way to get form point A to point B. Any gas tax hits them particularly hard, especially given the fact that Montana's State gas tax is the second highest in the Nation at 20 cents per gallon.

Montana's 1,200-mile interstate system was completed in 1988. It cost $1.2 billion and took 30 years to complete. Many portions of these roads now need to be repaired and reconstructed. In addition, Montana's 2,300 miles of primary roads need a considerable amount of work. The State started a reconstruction trust fund in 1983 in order to address a shortfall in Federal funds and to reverse the deterioration of Montana's highways.

The needs are clearly there, Mr. President, and the States need help. They can not do it all, and they will have an especially hard time if we raise the Federal motor fuels tax and diminish their ability to raise the State motor fuels tax.

It is for these reasons that I support Senator SYMM'S amendment. Let's maintain the integrity of the highway trust fund.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

I do not support the use of gas tax revenues for deficit reduction. With the caps on domestic discretionary spending that are part of the budget summit agreement, that is what will happen to the gas tax revenues.

But, since efforts to reduce or strike the gas tax increase have not succeeded, the question now becomes where the revenues raised through that increase will go. The least we should do is to score the gas tax revenues to the highways and transit trust funds.

I want to make it clear that I am not opposed to a gas tax increase, in whatever form it may come. As I outlined in my statement on the previous amendment of the Senator from Idaho yesterday, I am opposed to an increase in the gas tax if it is to be used for a purpose other than for what it was intended—improving our crumbling infrastructure.

With this amendment, we would at least be putting this money where we might be able to get at it, someday. This amendment would place all the revenues raised through the gas tax increase into the highway and transit trust funds. There is still no way that we could spend it all given the limits on domestic discretionary spending. But, at least it would be there for the future.

Again, Mr. President, I want to make sure that we all understand this: The increase in the gas tax is going to deficit reduction. The budget agreement counts all of the new revenues coming in as reductions in the deficit, and assumes none of the gas tax revenues will be spent out.

So, everyone should know that this money is not going to be spent, at least not for the next few years. If the Symms amendments succeeds, all of the $43 billion raised by the gas tax will be put in the trust fund. But there is no way, for the duration of the budget agreement, that we will be able to spend $43 billion in new money for the bridges that are falling; or for the transit systems that our urban systems so desperately need; or for the repair of our highways; or for the construction of safety improvements.

But, by adopting this amendment, we recognize that this $43 billion belongs to our Nation's infrastructure. Someday, we will be able to lay claim to it to improve our highways and our transit systems.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Chair recognizes the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. I make the point of order that it is extraneous under the Byrd rule and it has no budgetary effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. the Senator would have to yield back all time in opposition before the point of order would be heard.

Mr. BENTSEN. I will withhold, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Who is controlling the time in opposition to the Senator from Idaho? Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Texas, what time I have remaining.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, we have been through this fight before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please suspend. The Senator from Tennessee did not have his microphone working when he made a remark. The Chair was unclear what his request was.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I requested that all remaining time that I might control be allocated to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the Senator. The Senator from Texas is recognized for up to 1 minute and 20 seconds.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, we had that agreement in the Finance Committee, and I tried very hard to put the amount of money that came off the gasoline tax into the highway trust fund. I felt very strongly about that. The gasoline tax has a very disproportionate effect on the people who drive cars in my State. However, we were not able to convince the majority in that regard, and we lost the point.

So what we are talking about once again is the deal breaker. It is something that is unacceptable. To be refighting this one, at this late hour, really is not at all necessary. Therefore, Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time and make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

POINT OF ORDER: THE BYRD RULE

Mr. BENTSEN. I make the point of order that it is extraneous under the Byrd rule and has no budgetary effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS].

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I move to waive the Budget Act for the purposes of considering this amendment. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate now takes up amendment proposed by the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS].

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER].

Mr. SASSER. Apparently the Senator from Alaska is not in the Chamber at the present time. So I suggest we move on to the next amendment and allow the distinguished Senator from Alaska to reclaim his time, should he reappear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Alaska is temporarily laid aside.

Under the previous order the next amendment in order would be amendment to be offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] with a time limit of 4 minutes, equally divided. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. METZENBAUM].

"(c) EXPENDITURES FROM TRUST FUND.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts in the Motor Fuels Tax Reduction Trust Fund shall be available to offset and reduce the amounts of additional taxes levied pursuant to sections 7405(a) and 7405(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF OFFSET.—On or before January 1, 1991, and on or before the first day of the first and third calendar quarters of each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue projections of the amounts that would be collected pursuant to sections 7405(a) and 7405(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 during the upcoming two calendar quarters. To the extent that funds are available, the Secretary shall then transfer from the Trust Fund such funds as he projects would be collected during the upcoming two calendar quarters pursuant to sections 7405(a) and 7405(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. These transferred funds shall be placed in the general fund and in any applicable trust funds in the same proportion as they would have been collected under operation of sections 7405(a) and (b). The Secretary shall then reduce the taxes that would otherwise be levied pursuant to sections 7405(a) and (b) during the upcoming two calendar quarters by a corresponding amount."

(c) CONFORMING CHANGES.—

(1) For the purposes of 23 U.S.C. 157 amounts transferred from the Motor Fuels Tax Reduction Trust Fund shall not be included.

(2) In Section 9503(b)(1), in subsection (G) strike the period and insert in lieu thereof a comma, and insert the following new subsection:

"(H) section (relating to transfers from the Motor Fuels Tax Reduction Trust Fund)."

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such Subchapter A is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"Sec. . Motor Fuels Tax Reduction Trust Fund."

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, this amendment is sent to the desk on behalf of myself, Senator LIEBERMAN, and Senator COHEN. In substance it is a windfall profit tax, having to do with the top 30 oil companies in the country.

I need not tell my colleagues that preinvasion, the oil prices in this country were $20 a barrel. Yesterday they were $36.72 a barrel. Gasoline prices in my own State and here have gone from about $1, $1.05 to about $1.35 a gallon.

If we look at earnings of the oil companies, I am pretty well convinced they were reaping it in. One oil company's earnings were eight times greater for the third quarter of 1990, eight times greater than they were in 1989. Another one was five times greater than they were in 1989.

Let me explain this particular proposal. It would provide—Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Of this tax, 40 percent would apply only to prices of oil over $25 a barrel.

It would be applicable only to the 30 major oil companies and it would be applicable only to old, that is known oil. It would not be applicable to newly discovered oil. It would produce $7 billion in 1991, and it would be used to reduce gasoline and diesel fuel taxes. The tax would not apply to new oil that was discovered since August 1, 1990, nor to independent drillers, nor to stripper wells, nor the strategic petroleum reserve nor the naval petroleum reserve. Thirty major oil companies in this country produce 80 percent of the U.S. crude oil. The estimated revenues from this windfall profit tax would be $7.5 billion in 1991 and about $37 billion in the 5-year period. That assumes production of about 2.3 billion barrels of oil during that period. It assumes a sale price of $35 a barrel, but the amount of income to go from about $7 billion to $11 billion in 1 year if the price were $40 a barrel or it would go to $55 billion over the 5-year period if the price of oil is $40 per barrel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. How much time do I have, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I might have misheard and misunderstood. I inquired as to what Senator METZENBAUM's amendment was going to be. I wrote down on a list and so did other people, an HI cap. I thought that is what it was, but it is not. That is all right. It is a windfall profit tax. I do not understand it yet. But, frankly, it is obviously not in order. I do not think tonight on this bill is the time to be raising the windfall profit tax that no one understands and no one has seen. I ask a parliamentary inquiry. Has the time of the Senator from Ohio expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the Senator from Texas desire to say anything on this?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I just say to my friend from Ohio, the windfall profit tax did not work before and it will not work in the future. And as a matter of domestic energy security, a windfall profit tax is the wrong step to take at this time. It would discourage domestic energy production and development and contribute to the growth of the Nation's costly reliance on foreign oil imports. According to an analysis prepared by the Congressional Research Service in 1988, the prior law windfall profit tax reduced domestic production by between 780 million and 1.6 billion barrels of oil during the period between 1980 and 1986. The effect of such a reduction in domestic production was to increase the Nation's foreign oil imports. According to the CRS analysis the domestic production lost as a result of the windfall profit tax constituted an average of between 8 and 16 percent of all U.S. oil imports during those years. I would expect that the imposition of a new windfall profit tax would cause repetition of this situation.

Mr. President, I assume also this amendment is subject to a point of order to the extent it is not germane to this piece of legislation. Frankly, it comes to me as quite a surprise. I understood from the Senator that he was going to address the HI cap.

Mr. METZENBAUM. May I respond?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico retains the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. If he responds briefly.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Texas are both correct. Originally, up until 5 minutes ago, it was my intention to offer the HI cap. The majority leader prevailed upon me not to go forward with that. This I intended to offer and made it clear to the manager on this side it would be offered after all the time had expired. I had a right to do so, but instead of offering the HI cap, I offered this. I did not intend to take the Senator by surprise. I apologize if I did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the time has expired. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I accept the explanation but I am not really at all convinced, as I have not been part of these kind of unanimous-consent agreements in the past where this has occurred. It may be appropriate, but I really do not believe it is, although I will say there is probably good faith here.

POINT OF ORDER: THE BUDGET ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, pursuant to 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act, I raise a point of order that the pending amendment is not germane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Point of order is heard.

Mr. LIEBERMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I think it is germane. It raises money. It reduces the deficit even further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senator debate is not in order on a point of order.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Also it would reduce gasoline and diesel fuel taxes.

Mr. LIEBERMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I move to waive the Budget Act to allow consideration of this amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

A request has been made for the yeas and nays. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the vote will occur in order after the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. Under this order, the Chair recognizes the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN].

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I, too, was surprised by the order in taking it up.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, today we are asking the average American to shoulder an enormous burden in order to help reduce the deficit and protect our economy. This burden is necessary in part because of the high oil prices resulting from Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. Yet, we are asking the oil industry that is benefiting from the Persian Gulf crisis to contribute nothing.

The American Automobile Association reported this week that the cash price of regular, self serve, unleaded gasoline at the pump in America is now $1.38 a gallon. That is over 30 cents a gallon higher than the price on August 1, 1990, the day before Iraq invaded Kuwait. Crude oil prices in this same period have virtually doubled.

Are these price increases justified? I say no. I say that because supplies of oil on the world market are at or near record levels. And increased production of oil is coming close to making up the amount of oil lost because of the invasion of Kuwait and the embargo of Iraq. There is no supply and demand reason for these rapid and huge increases in prices. That's not just my conclusion; it is the conclusion of many experts, including members of the administration. And just this week, a representative of the International Energy Agency was quoted as saying this about the price of oil on world markets:

It is a political phenomenon and not a supply-demand fundamental which drives the market. Physical shortages do not explain present price fluctuations.

What these artificially high prices create is an opportunity for outrageous profits. The third quarter earnings reports are beginning to come out. The Oryx Energy Co., an oil producer, announced this week an astonishing increase of more than 700 percent increase in its earnings for the third quarter of this year. Saloman Bros. estimated that third-quarter profits for domestic oil firms at 60 percent higher than last year and 50 percent higher for international firms. Yesterday, Occidental's oil producing division showed a 400-percent increase in its profitability over last year. When prices double, but costs of production stay virtually the same, the result is extraordinary windfall profits. There is nothing wrong with profits—the human desire to make them helps drive our economy. The problem we have here is that the oil profits are not only unfairly exhorbitant, but are inflicting a great wound on our economy.

Look at the news today about the Consumer Price Index. It is up eight-tenths of 1 percent for the second month in a row. If that continues, inflation will approach double-digit levels. The main reason for the big jump in inflation is the increases in the cost of oil. Energy prices rose 5.6 percent in September, which is the highest level ever recorded by the CPI since it began more than 30 years ago. In August and September combined, gasoline prices rose by 17.9 percent, and fuel oil went up an astonishing 33.7 percent.

Oil industry executives proudly say that the high price of oil is simply the free market at work. As the trucker driving an 18 wheeler if the free market is working for him. Ask the airlines that have to raise fares and lose business if the free market is working for them. Ask the factory worker who has to drive back and forth to work every day and fill up his tank a couple times of week if the free market is working for him.

If this is a free market at work, it is certainly not a fair market. Citing the mantra of the "free market" is no excuse for ignoring the toll that the market sometimes exacts. I am as strong a supporter of free markets as anyone in this Chamber, but that does not mean that there is not a role for the government in cleaning up when markets go out of control and make a mess of our economy. If the system of oil pricing can throw our economy into recession, which it is threatening to do, if it has not already, we should not just shrug our shoulders. Something is wrong, and something must be done.

Today, we can begin to do something about the high price of oil. Doubling the Federal tax on gasoline will not help the American people. They are being drowned by high gas prices, and when they look to government for help, all we seem to do is throw them a cement block.

I believe we must do something to make use of the enormous profits of the oil industry. There is a lot of talk about burden sharing in the wake of the Persian Gulf crisis. It is time we had some burden sharing right here at home. That is why I support Senator METZENBAUM's proposal to enact a windfall profit tax to force the oil industry to contribute some of the record profits it is reaping as a result of Iraq's aggression.

The base price for this tax would be set at $25 per barrel, which is approximately the average price of crude oil over the 18 months prior to July 1990. That base price assures that producers will not be subject to the windfall profit tax if the oil markets crash again. Moreover, this base price is indexed to rise with inflation. This will be a 40 percent tax on old oil produced by major oil companies only.

This amendment introduces the concept of fairness to the oil industry. We have a right to demand that oil companies contribute more to the American economy, particularly in this time of economic crisis—a crisis they are making worse. In this reconciliation package alone it is proposed that oil producers be granted additional subsidies of $2.2 billion over the next 5 years. Let us balance those subsidies with something for the average working people of America. Let's balance them with a windfall profit tax.

This amendment also provides that all revenues gained from the windfall profit tax be used to offset the gasoline and diesel taxes in this reconciliation bill. This will help alleviate the burden placed on the working men and women of America, and will make this reconciliation package less regressive. It will help ensure that the American people will not be subjected to both high oil prices and a high gas tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate now turns to the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, according to the list I have, the next amendment was to be an amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has his amendment as the one following. If that is in order, we will take that amendment up at this time.

Mr. SASSER. I apologize to the Chair. The Chair is correct. The distinguished Senator from Alabama has withdrawn his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn from the unanimous-consent request agreement. Under the previous order, the Senate will now take up an amendment to be offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD] with time allocated 2 minutes to be equally divided. The Senator from North Dakota.

AMENDMENT NO. 3041

(Purpose: To provide savings provisions)

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, in the reconciliation package, the committees were asked to produce $246.2 billion in savings as part of the $500 billion package. In fact, the committees produced $252.5 billion of savings or $6.3 billion more than the instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator that he must send an amendment to the desk.

Mr. CONRAD. I apologize. I thought the amendment was at the desk.

I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD] proposes an amendment numbered 3041.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of title I of the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . AGRICULTURAL SUPPORT PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any provision of, or amendment made by, this Act—

(1) the base reduction percentage for the 1991 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice under section 1101(c) of this Act shall be 5 percent; and the base reduction percentage for each of the 1992 through 1995 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice under section 1101(c) of this Act shall be 10 percent

(2) in calculating deficiency payments for each of the 1991 through 1995 crops of wheat, feed grains, and rice under section 1102(a) of this Act, the payment rate for a crop shall be the amount by which the established price for the crop exceeds the higher of—

(A) the national weighted average market price received by producers during the first 5 months of the marketing year for the crop, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture; or

(B) the loan level determined for the crop; and

(3) the amount of the dairy assessment provided for in section 1105(b) of this Act shall be 7 cents per hundredweight during the period beginning January 1, 1991, and ending August 31, 1995.

(b) VETERANS PROGRAM AMENDMENTS.—Sections 11012 and 11032 of this Act, and the amendments made by such sections, shall not take effect.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, of the $6.3 billion over the instructions, two committees, Agriculture and the Veterans Committee, have produced 80 percent of those savings. This amendment simply strikes $5.6 billion of the $6.3 billion of savings over the instructions. We have done that improve the fairness of the package. I emphasize to my colleagues once again, agriculture took a disproportionate hit. Forty percent in real terms is the cut to agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. the Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CONRAD. I ask my colleagues to look favorably on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CONRAD. I ask unanimous consent that an article entitled "N.D. Farmers Could Lose Millions" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Grand Forks (ND) Herald, Oct. 18, 1990]

N.D. FARMERS COULD LOSE MILLIONS

(By Philip Brasher)

WASHINGTON.—The budget-squeezed farm bill could cost North Dakota farmers millions of dollars in income next year, at a time when a bumper crop worldwide has pushed wheat prices to Depression levels.

Cuts in federal price supports will cost North Dakota 25 percent of its government farm subsidies, drive down land prices and push many struggling farmers out of business, said Dwight Aakre, an economist at North Dakota State University.

Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., who made a last-ditch attempt Wednesday on the Senate floor to soften the blow, predicted that North Dakota would lose more than 30 percent of its government farm support.

House and Senate negotiators finished rewriting the 1990 farm bill Tuesday to accomplish $13.6 billion in spending cuts required by a deficit-reduction plan for the next five years.

"The hope is that will be offset by increases in the marketplace, but at this point I don't see that as likely to happen," Aakre said Wednesday.

North Dakota got $470 million in government farm payments in 1989, mostly in crop subsidies. That represented about 17 percent of its total agricultural income of $2.8 billion that year, and that is a small share, Aakre said.

Normally, federal payments account for about a quarter of farm earnings, Aakre said. Direct farm income, in turn, accounts for about 10 percent of the gross state product.

The compromise farm bill is designed to save money and drive U.S. agriculture toward a more free-market policy—by reducing the acres eligible for subsidies and giving farmers flexibility to rotate crops in response to market demands.

However, experts say the new freedom will be of less use to Great Plains wheat farmers because of the limited number of crops they can plant.

A farmer in North Dakota who normally plants 1,000 acres to wheat would lose $5,200 because of a 15 percent reduction in subsidized acres required by the farm bill.

On top of that, the legislation requires wheat farmers to idle another 15 percent of their land in 1991 because of overproduction this year that has driven wheat prices down to near $2 a bushel.

"It is sad to see the president and bipartisan leaders (of Congress) willing to abandon this country's commitment to our family farmers," said Rep. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D.

"This farm bill is guaranteed to drive farm income down and restrict farmers' access to affordable credit," said Randolph Nodland, a Dunn Center, N.D., grain farmer who is president of the National Family Farm Coalition.

The bill could unintentionally handicap some of its stiffened environmental measures by encouraging producers to drop out of the farm program, Nodland said.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I respond to the distinguished Senator simply by saying that if the Senate chooses to adopt the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, we will simply be reducing the deficit reduction in this overall package by $6 billion. I do not believe the Senate wants to do that. We have rejected time after time, today and yesterday, motions to strike specific provisions that simply took money out of the deficit reduction package and did not replace it with anything else.

So, Mr. President, I urge the Senate to stand by its previous judgments on these matters and vote to defeat the amendment offered by my friend from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the chairman yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senator from North Dakota that the time has expired.

Mr. CONRAD. I ask unanimous consent to ask one question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Tennessee have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of both Senators has expired. Is there a request for a recorded vote?

Mr. CONRAD. I request the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The Chair again asks is there a sufficient second on the request for the yeas and nays?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be taken in accordance with the previous unanimous-consent order. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. If the Conrad amendment is subject to a point of order, may the point of order be raised prior to the rollcall vote, for which the yeas and nays have been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the Senator's request for information on the point of order, the response would be in the affirmative.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

Mr. CONRAD. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONRAD. I am told that the reconciliation—in fact I have it here—shows that we are $6.3 billion over the instructions. I have been told that there has been no ruling by the Parliamentarian previously on whether in fact a point of order would lie. Is it the understanding of this Senator that the Parliamentarian has now ruled that in fact a point of order would lie?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator that to this date there has been no such ruling.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Michigan is recognized next to offer an amendment. At this time the Chair recognizes the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] to offer an amendment with 3 minutes to be equally divided.

AMENDMENT NO. 3042

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate in favor of fairness and deficit reduction)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, there is an amendment at the desk. I now ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] proposes an amendment numbered 3042:

At the appropriate place in the bill add the following new section:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE WITH RESPECT TO FAIRNESS AND DEFICIT REDUCTION.

(a) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate conferees should work towards a final budget package that establishes a 35-percent income tax rate for taxpayers making in excess of $200,000 and does not delay indexing of the Internal Revenue Code and does not increase the income tax rates for any other taxpayers and uses the revenue raised ($60.4 billion) to:

(1) eliminate any increase in the gasoline tax ($42.6 billion), and

(2) eliminate any changes in current law with respect to Medicare premium payments or Medicare deductibles ($14.1 billion).

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this sense-of-the-Senate resolution, unlike any prior amendment or sense-of-the-Senate resolution, urges our conferees to totally eliminate the gas tax, No. 1, and to pay for it and also to pay for another important feature by increasing the rate, the income tax rate, for people over $200,000 to a 35-percent rate.

The second thing this amendment does is that it puts the Senate on record against the delay of indexing, and third and most significant, this same amount of revenue that can be achieved by raising the top income tax rate to 35 percent for family incomes of more than $200,000. I ask unanimous consent that I have 15 additional seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. This additional amount of revenue which would be achieved by having a 35-percent bracket would eliminate any changes in the current law with respect to Medicare premium payments or Medicare deductible. So we can get rid of the cuts in Medicare. We can totally get rid of the gas tax with a 35-percent bracket.

Mr. President, the reconciliation bill before us asks too little of the wealthiest members of our society, who benefited the most during the decade of the 1980's, and too much from middle-income Americans, who struggled to barely keep even or fell behind. At a time when middle-income taxpayers saw their effective tax rates increase, the wealthiest 1 percent of the taxpayers saw their effective tax rates decline by almost 15 percent.

The reconciliation bill before us does not reverse that trend. Its increase in the gasoline tax is the wrong tax at the wrong time. It asks middle- and low-income taxpayers to carry a disproportionate share of the deficit reduction burden. In addition, the bill's substantial cutbacks in Medicare seek substantial deficit reduction from among those who are the least able to afford it.

The amendment that I am offering could help make this bill a more progressive deficit reduction bill and could help make the Tax Code a more progressive Tax Code. It expresses the sense of the Senate that the Senate conferees should work to totally eliminate the gasoline tax increase from the bill as well as to eliminate the higher Medicare premiums and deductibles contained in the bill. It would make up the revenue by increasing the income tax rate to 35 percent on taxpayers making over $200,000. It would make clear that the conferees should work against any increase in income tax rates on any other taxpayers and work against the delay in indexing of the Tax Code.

Mr. President, this amendment represents fairness and responsible deficit reduction. I urge its support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time in opposition?

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER].

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I see no one wishing to speak in opposition, so I would yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be voted in accordance with the previous unanimous-consent order.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Alaska has his time reserved to take up his amendment. His amendment would be in order at this time.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I have conferred with the managers of the bill. I want to state regretfully that this Senator has tried now for 2 years to get the Finance Committee to consider the question of the Student Loan Program of the State of Alaska and an IRS ruling that affects that.

It is not possible to get that bill out of committee. It is not possible to raise the bill at this time because, I am informed, it does under Joint Tax Committee scoring cause a loss of some $6 to $15 million over 5 years. It is, I think, an unfortunate situation.

I hope the Senate is listening because it is this Senator's hope to return after this election for another 6 years, and I do not intend to witness another reconciliation bill handled in this fashion again. And as long as I am here, there will be no more unanimous-consent requests dealing with a procedure such as we are going through now.

Some 7,000 students in my State will now have to pay retroactive taxes plus interest on a program that was designed to give them a student loan based upon a forgiveness concept if they came back to my State for employment after they graduated. They would not have to pay the State back 50 percent of the money they borrowed if they returned to Alaska and remained in the State for several years beyond graduation. That was our form of a scholarship program.

IRS has now said that the forgiveness benefits are taxable because Alaska's program does not technically fall within the current student loan forgiveness exemption. That is a strained interpretation. I had hoped to be able to get to that now. I am informed, as I indicated, that it would be subject to a point of order. I certainly can read the handwriting on the wall and I shall not offer the amendment now.

But I am even reserving my right to object for the balance of the evening to unanimous-consent requests. I want the Senate to understand that. I think this is a very strained procedure. This is the first tax bill this year. This subject has not been before the Finance Committee for a year, and these students now will pay taxes they should not have to pay because the Senate and the Congress of the United States are acting in October on a bill that should have been considered before the summer recess. I do not offer the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I say to the Senator from Alaska, I have also tried my best today to help the Senator with this problem. I think he knows that. We cannot do anything about it. It requires action on the part of the Finance Committee. I want to tell the Senator that I cannot do anything about that either, but I do think he has a very meritorious case, and I wish there was some way we could solve it even now.

I think perhaps the Senator ought to suggest to some of those going to conference it is a very small item and very bad policy, unfair. Maybe it can be resolved some way before we return here, if we do, with a conference report.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if I have any time left, I thank the Senator from New Mexico. I have just read the Senate leadership package that will be offered. I call it to the attention of the Senate in terms of the power of that provision that will bar future Senators from trying similarly to seek justice for citizens under this procedure. It is very unfair, extremely unfair. I for one do not like to see it at all, particularly coming from a small State.

In the House some States have as many as 40 Members. We have one. We represent the largest State in the Union with some of the most difficult problems of the Federal Government and we are forced it try to deal with them under 2 minutes restriction and points of order based upon rulings of the JCT which, in my opinion, are nonsense.

I commend to you the leadership package in terms of the future power of the CBO and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. We will address that later tonight.

AMENDMENT NO 3039 MOTION TO WAIVE THE BYRD RULE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no other Senators wishing to vote, on this question, there are 48 yeas and 52 nays. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion fails.

The Chair rules that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho will have no budgetary effect and, therefore, is extraneous of section 31(a) of the Byrd rule.

The point of order is well taken and the amendment falls.

AMENDMENT NO. 3040

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question now occurs on the Lieberman motion to waive section 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act on the Metzenbaum amendment.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 33, nays 67, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no other Senator wishes to vote, on this question, the yeas are 33, the nays are 67. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

The Chair rules the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is not germane, the point is well taken, and the amendment falls.

Mr. SYMMS. May we have order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Chair recognizes the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is the Conrad amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the question will next occur on the Conrad amendment. The Senator is correct.

POINT OF ORDER: THE BUDGET ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Pursuant to section 310(d)2 of the Budget Act I raise the point or order. The amendment would reduce outlay savings for the Agriculture Committee below the level provided in the instructions and the amendment would not make compensating outlay reductions or revenue increases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of order has been raised. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD].

Mr. CONRAD. Might we have order in this Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Senate will come to order. Will the Senators please clear the aisles.

Mr. CONRAD. I make parliamentary inquiry if a point of order does lie?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would be prepared to rule that a point of order would be well taken.

Mr. CONRAD. In that case, Mr. President, I would move to vitiate the yeas and nays. I do so with regret because, I say to my colleagues again, that I think agriculture——

Mr. DOMENICI. May we have order, Mr. President?

Mr. CONRAD. Has taken a disproportionate hit and I urge the conferees to do what they can in the conference. With that I would vitiate the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, the Chair rules, will reduce savings achieved by the Committee on Agriculture below the level instructed in the budget resolution without making offsetting savings in other provisions or raising revenues. The point of order is, therefore, well taken and the amendment falls.

AMENDMENT NO. 3042

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from the State of Michigan, amendment No. 3042. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

So the amendment (No. 3042) was rejected.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MODIFICATIONS TO TITLE III, SUBTITLE A

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], now be recognized to offer an amendment to title III, subtitle A, chapters 1 through 7 of the bill, and that there be 10 minutes equally divided between the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Ford], and the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], and that immediately after all time on the amendment of Senator FORD has expired, Senator D'AMATO will be recognized to make a point of order against the subtitle in the amendment.

Mr. FORD. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. And I will not object. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I am changing certain sections, changing the language and basically a modification. Does this have to be recognized as an amendment or can it be a modification of that section of the legislation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is informed it would take unanimous consent to modify the underlying language.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent then, further unanimous consent that I be allowed to modify that section rather than amend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. D'AMATO. Reserving the right to object, and I do not object, I want to ascertain that as the unanimous consent has been submitted, under the point of order that I will raise, if that point of order is sustained, is it my understanding that the entire section as modified would fall?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. D'AMATO. I have no objection.

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not understand then what the unanimous consent—wherever we have amendment, we are not going to have an amendment?

Mr. FORD. It would be a modification then. That was drafted by the Senator's people. It changes from amendment to modification.

Mr. DOMENICI. One further point of inquiry. The unanimous consent clearly intended that the point of order lie against the subtitle and the modification. Is that correct, I ask the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. I would have to defer to the Senator from Kentucky because the unanimous-consent request was drafted in consultation with the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York.

Mr. FORD. Yes. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think it was stated——

Mr. FORD. One point of order will be sufficient.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection. I want to thank everyone for working it out between the Senator from New York and the other Senators who have an interest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection then, the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky is agreed to.

Is there any objection to the unanimous consent of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I send a modification to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language will be so modified.

The modification is as follows:

In section 322(2), strike "have impeded" and all that follows and insert in lieu thereof "could impede the national air transportation system;".

Amend section 331 to read as follows:

SEC. 331. NATIONAL AVIATION NOISE POLICY.

(a) The Secretary of Transportation shall, by regulation, not later than October 1, 1991, develop and articulate a National Aviation Noise Policy which takes into account the Findings and Determinations and provisions of this chapter.

(b) The National Aviation Noise Policy shall include the establishment of a date or dates for the phasing out of Stage 2 technology aircraft as part of a comprehensive national noise management scheme. The national noise management scheme must include a detailed economic analysis of the impact of any phaseout date on competition in the airline industry, and may provide, by regulation, for the allocation and distribution of Stage 2 operating rights during the phaseout period in a manner determined by the Secretary to be economically efficient.

Amend section 332 to read as follows:

SEC. 332. NOISE AND ACCESS RESTRICTION REVIEWS.

(a) The National Aviation Noise Policy shall require the establishment of a program for adequate public notice and comment opportunities on local airport noise or access restrictions that first became effective after October 1, 1990, that were negotiated or executed agreements as of October 1, 1990, or where the FAA has already found a working group to examine the noise impact of air traffic control procedure changes.

(b) No airport noise or access restriction on the operation of a Stage 3 certificated aircraft, or on a Stage 2 certificated aircraft weighing less than 75,000 pounds, including but not limited to—

(1) any restriction as to noise levels generated on either a single event or cumulative basis;

(2) any limit, direct or indirect, on the total number of State 3 aircraft operations;

(3) any noise budget or noise allocation program which would include Stage 3 aircraft;

(4) any restriction imposing limits on hours of operations; and

(5) any other limit on Stage 3 aircraft, shall be effective unless it has been agreed to by the airport proprietor and all aircraft operators, or until it has been submitted to the Federal Aviation Administration pursuant to an airport operator's request for approval and approved in accordance with the program.

(c) No airport noise or access restriction proposed after October 1, 1990, could include a restriction on operations with other than Stage 3 aircraft, unless the airport operator publishes the proposed noise or access restriction at least 180 days prior to the effective date of the restriction and prepares—

(1) an analysis of the anticipated or actual costs and benefits of the existing or proposed noise regulation;

(2) a description of alternative regulations;

(3) a description of the alternative measures considered not involving aircraft restrictions, and a comparison of the costs and benefits of such alternative measures to the costs and benefits of the proposed noise or access regulation.

(d) The Administrator shall not approve a noise or access restriction applying to Stage 3 aircraft operations unless the Administrator finds the following conditions to be supported by substantial evidence;

(1) the proposed restriction is reasonable, nonarbitrary, and nondiscriminatory;

(2) the proposed restriction is reasonable, nonarbitrary, and nondiscriminatory;

(3) the proposed restriction is not inconsistent with maintaining the safe and efficient utilization of the navigable airspace;

(4) the proposed restriction does not conflict with any existing Federal statute or regulation;

(5) there has been an adequate opportunity for public comment with respect to the regulation;

(6) consideration of alternative means of minimizing or otherwise managing noise was reasonable; and

(7) such other factors as the Administrator deems appropriate to the national air transportation system, as determined by rulemaking.

(e) Sponsors of facilities operating under noise or access restrictions on Stage 3 operations that first became effective after October 1, 1990, shall not be eligible for grants authorized by section 505 of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 U.S.C. App. 2204) 90 days after the date on which the Secretary promulgates the final rule called for under section 331 of this Act, unless the restrictions have been agreed to by the airport proprietor and airport operators or the Administrator has approved the restriction under this title, or the restriction has been rescinded.

(f) The Administrator may reevaluate any noise restrictions previously approved under subsection (d) upon the request of any aircraft operator able to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Administrator that there has been a change in the noise environment of the affected airport pursuant to the criteria established under subsection (d) and that a review and reevaluation of the benefits and costs of the previously approved noise regulation is therefore justified.

(g) The Administrator shall establish by regulation procedures under which the evaluation provided in subsection (f) shall be accomplished. Such evaluation shall not occur less than two years after a determination under subsection (d)(2) has been made.

(h) Except to the extent required by the application of the provisions of this section, nothing in this Act shall be deemed to eliminate or supersede existing law with respect to restrictions by local authorities on operation of Stage 2 aircraft.

Strike section 334.

Amend section 335 to read as follows:

SEC. 335. LIMITATION ON AIRPORT IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM REVENUE.

Except as specified in subsection (a), under no conditions shall any airport receive revenues under the provisions of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, or impose or collect a passenger facility charge, unless the Administrator assures that the airport is not imposing any noise or access restriction not in compliance with this chapter.

In section 342, amend paragraphs (6) and (7) of added section 1113 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to read as follows:

"(6) No passenger facility charge shall be approved for imposition prior to the adoption by regulation of a national aviation noise policy in accordance with the provisions of title III Act and, in no event, prior to such date at which the uncommitted balance contained in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund is less than $5,000,000,000.

"(7) Authority for the approval of any new passenger facility charge, or the modification of any existing charge, shall terminate in the event that appropriations fail to be made to fund at least 90 percent of each amount authorized for essential air service and the airport improvement program during any fiscal year. Further, all authority to approve any passenger facility charge shall terminate at any time funds are spent from this Act except as authorized by this Act.

Strike section 352.

Amend section 353 to read as follows:

AIR CARRIER SPECIAL AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 353.(a)(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall by rule create, at Washington National Airport, a pool of 30 daily air carrier special authorizations which shall be spread evenly throughout the day from the hour 0700 to the hour 2200 and shall be available only to air carriers that—

(A) will utilize such special authorizations to conduct operations with turbojet aircraft or any aircraft having a certificate maximum seating capacity of 75 or more; and

(B) hold fewer than 12 existing slots at Washington National Airport.

(2) Such special authorizations shall be created and allocated in such a manner that the actual number of daily operations does not exceed the total number of authorized daily operations at Washington National Airport as provided in subpart K of part 93 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations.

(3) Such special authorizations shall be allocated by lottery and in such a manner that, to the maximum extent practicable, all such air carriers have an equal number of slots and special authorizations overall at Washington National Airport. No such air carrier shall receive a special authorization under this subsection which gives that carrier more than 12 slots and special authorizations overall at Washington National Airport.

(4) If such special authorizations remain unused after such air carriers have had an opportunity to obtain them, the remaining authorizations may only be made available to air carriers that have fewer than 12 slots at Washington National Airport.

(5) Each such special authorization shall be public property and its use shall represent a nonpermanent operating privilege within the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the Secretary and the Administrator. Any such privilege may be withdrawn, recalled, or reallocated by the Secretary for reasons of aviation safety, airspace efficiency, the enhancement of competition in air transportation, or any other matter in the public interest and in accordance with the public convenience and necessity.

(6) If the holder of an air carrier special authorization fails to initiate use of the authorization within 60 days after receiving the authorization or thereafter fails to use the authorization in accordance with rules for use of existing air carrier slots, the authorization shall be withdrawn and, if appropriate, be reallocated to another air carrier as provided in this subsection.

(b)(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall by rule create, at LaGuardia National Airport, a pool of 30 daily air carrier special authorizations which shall be spread evenly throughout the day and shall be available only to air carriers that—

(A) will utilize such special authorizations to conduct operations with turbojet aircraft or any aircraft having a certificate maximum seating capacity of 75 or more; and

(B) hold fewer than 12 existing slots at La Guardia National Airport.

(2) Such special authorizations shall be allocated by lottery and in such a manner that, to the maximum extent practicable, all such air carriers have an equal number of slots and special authorizations overall at La Guardia National Airport. No such air carrier shall receive a special authorization under this subsection which gives that carrier more than 12 slots and special authorizations overall at La Guardia National Airport.

(3) If such special authorizations remain unused after such air carriers have had an opportunity to obtain them, the remaining authorizations may only be made available to air carriers that have fewer than 12 slots at La Guardia National Airport.

(4) Each such special authorization shall be public property and its use shall represent a nonpermanent operating privilege within the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the Secretary and the Administrator. Any such privilege may be withdrawn, recalled, or reallocated by the Secretary for reasons of aviation safety, airspace efficiency, the enhancement of competition in air transportation, or any other matter in the public interest and in accordance with the public convenience and necessity.

(5) If the holder of an air carrier special authorization fails to initiate use of the authorization within 60 days after receiving the authorization or thereafter fails to use the authorization in accordance with rules for use of existing air carrier slots, the authorization shall be withdrawn and, if appropriate, be reallocated to another air carrier as provided in this subsection.

Amend section 354 to read as follows:

HIGH DENSITY TRAFFIC AIRPORT RULES

SEC. 354. (a)(1) On January 1, 1991, the Administrator shall initiate a review of the provisions of subparts K and S of part 93 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations. The review shall evaluate the impact of such provisions on aviation safety and ground congestion at each of the high density traffic airports.

(2) Not later than January 1, 1992, the Administrator shall submit a report to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives regarding the findings of the review initiated under paragraph (1) and any recommendations to be taken in light of those findings.

(b)(1) On January 1, 1991, the Secretary shall initiate a review of the provisions of subparts K and S of part 93 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations. The review shall evaluate—

(A) the impact of such provisions on airline competition and how such provisions have facilitated, and continue to facilitate, new entry at such airports; and

(B) methods by which the public can benefit financially from the provision of slots to carriers and how much revenue or other financial benefit can be generated by each such method.

(2) Not later than January 1, 1992, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives regarding the findings of the review initiated under paragraph (1) and any recommendations to be taken in light of those findings.

Strike sections 376 and 377.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I understand now that I have 5 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. FORD. I would like to yield myself 2 minutes and I would like to yield the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], the remainder of the time.

My colleagues, this section of the bill has been studied about as much as any. Let me briefly go through it in the short 2 minutes that I have.

The Secretary of Transportation will establish a national noise policy by October 1, 1991, which includes a total phaseout of the noisy stage 2 aircraft. The Secretary of Transportation will establish rules for the imposition of a passenger facility charge on origin and destination passengers; authorizes FAA, F&E, and R&D programs for 2 years; creates university air transportation centers where we begin to try to train pilots and we are going to need about 100,000 new pilots by the year 2000; creates a set-aside for the military airports. There are a lot of forts and camps that are being closed down and those that have airport facilities will be turned in to the community so they might develop their own airports; requires an environmental impact statement for the east coast plan.

In the modification, Mr. President, it grandfathers in existing noise plans up until October 1, 1990. Any plan that was in place has been grandfathered in; no restrictions on stage 3 aircraft unless agreed to by all users or approved by FAA. DOT is to set the phaseout of the stage 2 aircraft. Slots applies to LaGuardia and National; requires increased air carrier authorizations to accommodate new entrants; airline merger language has been stricken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time allocated to the Senator has expired.

Mr. FORD. Fifteen seconds, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. The U.S. Conference of Mayors, administration, airlines, air cargo, and others have endorsed the position now as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I would like to yield 2 minutes to my distinguished colleagues from New Jersey, Senator LAUTENBERG and Senator BRADLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise in support of the motion of the Senator from New York.

I do so for two reasons. First, because the legislation has nothing to do with deficit reduction, and does not belong on reconciliation.

Second, I support this point of order because the legislation would have devastating impacts on efforts to control aviation noise in my State; and through the repeal of the high density rule, it could lead to diminished safety and increasing delays in air travel.

Aircraft noise is an issue that must be dealt with. But the provision contained in this reconciliation bill is not the way to do it.

We in New Jersey have been living with the problem of aircraft noise for some time. New Jerseyans were the victims of a massive change in air traffic patterns made by the FAA.

Those changes came with no notification, no public hearings, and no assessment of the environmental impacts.

Since 1987, when these changes went into effect, I have been working to get some relief for my constituents. It has been tough going. It took a year just to get the FAA to admit that there was a problem.

It has been a frustrating process, for me, and for those whose lives have been disrupted by the roar of jets overhead.

But, we have started to make some progress. A key part of this has been getting the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which operates the major airports in our metropolitan area, to start working constructively with us.

We are not talking about drastic steps that would cripple aviation, or interfere with interstate commerce.

We are talking about reasonable and needed measures that could help restore some quality of life to residents of the densely populated State and region.

That could mean more stage 3 jets, and fewer of the older, noisier stage 2 planes.

Currently, less than half of the fleet serving Newark International is stage 3.

When we consider that a stage 3 plane can be half as noisy as a stage 2 plane, the tremendous benefits that would result from increasing the number of stage 3 aircraft are apparent.

Mr. President, we need a national aviation noise policy.

In fact, I have called for one, through the fiscal year 1991 transportation appropriations report.

But, a noise policy should be developed as part of a deliberative process, with public input, and without bias. The measure included by the Commerce Committee in reconciliation does not take that approach.

It prejudges the outcome; it says that it should be national policy to preempt local controls, even in the absence of any real Federal controls.

And it says that if an airport is not willing to play ball, it is not going to get Federal funding.

That is not a policy that my constituents can live with.

It's not a policy that we should be mandating through a reconciliation bill.

This legislation would also eliminate the FAA's high density rule.

That's something that the FAA—the agency charged with ensuring the safety and efficiency of our aviation system—does not support.

It would mean trying to shoehorn in more traffic into an area that's already overburdening the air traffic control system.

This is legislation that should be considered through the normal authorization process. I hope that we'll have that opportunity, so that these issues might be worked out then. But, I must oppose the inclusion of this legislation on reconciliation.

The high density rule was adopted to cap the number of operations at several key airports: Chicago O'Hare, Washington National, and JFK and LaGuardia in New York. It was adopted to keep operations at those airports at a safe level.

Since the rule was adopted, not much has changed. If anything, we might say that things have gotten worse.

This provision would eliminate the rule; but not at all four airports. It would exempt National Airport.

So, that leaves us with three airports that would be impacted by this provision.

Let me make this clear: None of these airports has asked for this. They could petition the FAA to let them out of the high density rule. But none has. And, I can assure my colleagues, that the two airports in my region do not want this legislation.

Mr. President, the high density rule has its problems. Now is not the time to review them.

But, without the rule—or some other solution, which we are not about to develop on this bill—we'd see real chaos in our skies.

Just yesterday, Senator D'AMATO and I were working to get some help for air traffic controllers in our region. These men and women oversee some of the most complex airspace in the world.

And they are doing it with fewer than half of the full performance level controllers that even the FAA says there should be.

This is, to say the least, a difficult job. But this provision would make it worse.

It would remove the restrictions on how many flights could come in and out of JFK and LaGuardia.

It would mean more and more planes that these controllers would have to guide, and keep apart.

They simply cannot handle the burden. So, we will have one of two results: First—and worst—if could mean diminished safety, as these air traffic sectors become overloaded.

Or, it could mean tremendous delays, as controllers simply keep planes away from the region until they can be safely handled.

And, my colleagues should not think that this is just a New York-New Jersey problem. Our aviation system is a national system. When planes start backing up over our airports, it's going to back up all over the country.

Planes will be sitting on the ground, waiting for clearance, in Chicago, Denver, and Dallas.

Neither of these options is acceptable. And they should not be forced on us through this reconciliation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. D'AMATO. Senator BRADLEY I think seeks recognition, and Senator MOYNIHAN.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, the FAA has in no way earned the spending powers that this legislation has given them. A case in point is the east coast plan that has hit the State of New Jersey very hard in the last 3 years.

The FAA has been totally unresponsive to local initiative and local inquiry for some relief from the extended loud noise that is roaring over the State of New Jersey today. Therefore, I will join the distinguished Senator from New York in his point of order.

This is not the time for us to ratify a national noise policy to be conducted by the FAA. They have not proven in my view worthy of that increased authority. I hope that they will demonstrate a willingness to work more fully with local agencies and local citizen groups who are so grossly offended by the increased noise over our region.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Who yields time?

Mr. D'AMATO. I yield 1 minute.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, this is an atrocious measure to be on a budget reconciliation bill. It affects three airports in the country, O'Hare, La Guardia, and Kennedy. La Guardia is the most congested airport in the Nation. The theoretical object is to increase the number of flights. It cannot be done. There are no more minutes in the hour.

The only thing it will do is increase delays. It will increase the cost of airlines, it will increase the cost to the public, and it will make matters worse for New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. I do not understand why it is in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I yield as much time as I have left to the distinguished Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, as we understand this legislation, it will reduce the noise by 75 percent. There are now under this bill expected $40 billion of purchases of new stage aircraft that will make things so much quieter. This will be done on a national scale.

We now have over 440 different ordinances, And aircraft, airlines, and air carriers do not know exactly when to get in, when to get out, or what aircraft they can take. It is about time we started doing something on a national level.

I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. I thank the Senator from Kentucky. I really only have one point to make. That is this particular provision is absolutely essential to the administration's transportation policy. This is the single biggest objective of Secretary Skinner in his tenure as Secretary of Transportation. He has worked on this very hard. I have spoken with him any number of times, as has Senator FORD, and Senator FORD has been a terrific leader in this effort. Secretary Skinner, together with OMB, have both discussed this matter with me. It is a top priority with the administration. My hope is that we would support this provision.

The most important aspect of it is the passage of the facility charge. It permits airports around the country to be able to have the capital construction budgets that are necessary to provide the infrastructure for the future. I do not see how they are going to be able to have that infrastructure to provide for air transportation for America's future without that PFC. That is the very heart of this particular provision. It is essential as far as air transportation is concerned. It is certainly essential as far as administration policy is concerned.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the motion to invoke the Byrd rule to strike the extraneous aviation provisions within the budget reconciliation bill.

First of all, I have deep reservations over making substantial national aviation policy revisions on a budget reconciliation. While I am appreciative of the extensive last-minute efforts that have been made to fashion acceptable aviation provisions during the last few days, there simply has not been time to adequately address all the legitimate concerns that need to be considered.

One of the provisions included in the aviation section of the reconciliation bill is language that would create a national aviation policy. This language would have far reaching consequences for the millions of Americans living beneath the landing and takeoff flight paths of our Nation's airports. In many communities, the pending aviation noise legislation would effectively preempt existing local aviation noise controls. Even worse, this legislation would essentially preclude communities from being a relevant participant in the process of devising and implementing aviation noise restrictions.

Regrettably, congressional consideration of the national aviation noise policy did not begin until less than 4 weeks ago when my distinguished colleague and Chair of the Senate Aviation Subcommittee introduced S. 3094. Some of the measures embedded in S. 3094 also exist as separate bill pending before the Senate and have followed the proper and fair procedure for the consideration of legislation. Other provisions, including the national aviation noise policy, have not had sufficient and indispensable legislative deliberations required to create good public policy.

While the other Chamber hastily convened a hearing on the aviation noise issue, this Chamber held no such hearing on the highly controversial issue of federalizing aviation noise controls. In fact, the Senate has not held a hearing on this issue in more than a decade. However, a careful review of the testimony that was presented to members of the other chamber suggest that Americans have a great desire to participate in the process of establishing a workable and effective national aviation policy. However, the aviation noise provision currently included in reconciliation take action before most citizens have had an opportunity to scrutinize and analyze the ramification of the proposed language. I think we unwisely short-circuit the democratic process if we act before the people have had a chance to respond.

Furthermore, I know that several of my colleagues share my irritation that the national aviation noise policy legislation is being moved without the input of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee has jurisdiction over several elements of the aviation noise issue and should have the opportunity to provide its input on the matter.

In conclusion, I cannot sanction the attaching of a major reauthorization to reconciliation such legislation deserves and demands the requisite public debate and careful examination needed to fashion regulations which the American public will accept. Millions of Americans live beneath the flight paths of our Nation's airports and they deserve to have their concerns heard and considered before this legislation is enacted. While I acknowledge that my colleagues have tried to placate these concerns by permitting local input into the regulation process that follows enactment of this legislation, that indulgence will give short shrift to the concerns of these citizens.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Kentucky, the sponsor of the National Aviation Noise Policy provisions in the reconciliation bill, whether it is correct that section 332 of the bill, the noise and access restriction provisions, does not apply to airport noise or access restrictions at Detroit Metro Airport because of the unique circumstances at that airport which have caused the FAA to form a working group to examine the noise impact of air traffic control procedures there.

Mr. FORD. The Senator from Michigan is correct.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank my distinguished colleague for this clarification and for his work on this matter.

Mr. GRAMM. I am concerned about the provision in the Ford substitute which creates 30 new special authorizations at National Airport. Is it the intention of the sponsor that the special operating rights at National Airport be withdrawn from the slot holdings of existing carriers?

Mr. FORD. No, this provision is not designed to result in the withdrawal of any slots of a carrier currently serving Washington National. If necessary, the language would be modified in conference to ensure that result.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I want to express my strong support for removing the national noise policy provisions in the Airport Capacity Act of 1990 from the budget reconciliation bill, and I would like to outline my reasons for strongly opposing the inclusion of this initiative in that legislation.

First, I do not feel that such a major initiative impacting on hundreds of cities and communities throughout America should be considered this way. No hearings were held in the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, and this provision was added at the last minute to the reconciliation bill without careful scrutiny in the committee. In fact, the bill was only recently drafted and was introduced as S. 3094 on September 24, 1990—just a few weeks ago.

Second, this legislation has far-reaching ramifications for cities and towns throughout the country. Many of these communities have already been through the long, and often painful process of developing comprehensive noise standards for their airports. Frequently, these plans involved balancing the economic development interests of those communities and the desire to provide a healthy environment free of noise pollution and the congestion associated with large airport projects. In some instances, the development of these noise plans took years of planning, public hearings, and even changes in design and location of runways, terminals, and access roads.

Third, this initiative would change very basic assumptions about the role of the Federal Aviation Administration in the airport noise question. The FAA has generally left the adoption of noise restrictions up to individual airports. The FAA may sue an airport if it regards the airport's noise control program as unfair or discriminatory; however, the FAA has done so in only a limited number of cases. One can generalize about the FAA's role by saying that the FAA has not contested noise restrictions adopted by airports including those whose expansion plans have been financed by FAA funding.

Since 1968, the United States has pursued a comprehensive national policy of abating aircraft noise at its source using both statutory and regulatory programs. By January 1, 1988, this policy had resulted in the complete elimination of all large so-called stage 1 aircraft from the U.S. commercial aviation fleet.

The effectiveness of this policy is clearly evidenced by the fact that between 1980 and 1985, approximately 1 million individuals previously exposed to unacceptable levels of aircraft noise found themselves residing outside shrinking airport noise zones around this Nation's commercial airports. For all its technical detail and mandated Federal review of local airport noise abatement plans, this legislation retreats from existing Federal source noise control in its failure to announce as a national goal the establishment of a date certain for the phaseout of stage 2 aircraft. The best this legislation can muster is a vague reference to the possible phasing out of stage 2 technology aircraft. If we had taken that approach in 1968, source noise control as a national policy would have a hollow ring to it.

Baltimore-Washington International Airport, a State-owned facility, has been in the process of developing a comprehensive noise abatement plan. The Maryland Department of Transportation has held hours of public hearings on their plan and worked closely with local community groups. Those community groups have not always agreed with the actions or proposals of the State, and I have tried to play a role in keeping the dialog open between the government and the citizens living near the airport. I can tell you, however, despite the serious problems some communities have with the State's noise plan, they all oppose this bill. They certainly do not want the Federal Aviation Administration in Washington making the decisions about noise restrictions at their local airport.

Let me quote for a minute from a General Accounting Office study of September 1990 on the Aviation Noise issue. It says:

> Leaving the responsibility for noise regulation to the airports has some advantages. Airports vary greatly in how sensitive their neighbors are to noise. One airport may be under great pressure to reduce noise from its neighbors, and may be willing to suffer a substantial reduction in service in order to reduce noise. Other airports may place a greater value on high service levels than on noise reduction, and may favor a less restrictive noise policy. Leaving noise regulation to the airports allows each airport to tailor its noise policy to its own individual situation. The benefits of noise reduction are greatest when the noise reduction is concentrated on airports that are most sensitive to noise.

Finally, I salute the chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee, Senator FORD, and my colleague from Virginia, Senator ROBB, for their positive efforts to ensure that the existing noise standards at Washington's National Airport would be maintained. I opposed passage of the 1986 Act, at least partially, based on my deep concern about a loss of local control over aircraft noise generated by National Airport. I am concerned that the integrity of that law be maintained including retention of the high density rule and the ability to retain the existing nighttime curfew.

This legislation is not good public policy. It has been sprung on the Senate without careful consideration in the committee. It has had no hearings. It ought to be removed from the reconciliation package and defeated. Mr. President, I support Senator D'AMATO's motion against this section of the bill.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, for people who live near airports, excessive noise is an all too real intrusion into their lives. As air travel and air shipping increase, there is greater pressure to expand routes and build bigger airports. This development can worsen the problem of airport noise if effective steps are not taken. I strongly believe that we need to address this matter fairly so citizens are not subjected to unacceptable noise levels. In doing this, it is vital that these matters be worked out with the needs of citizens directly affected firmly in mind.

We have a special situation in my State of Michigan that points to the need for consistent policy by the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA]. Less than a year ago, flight patterns were altered at Detroit Metro Airport creating a tremendous noise problem for tens of thousands of people in the area. Right now, citizens are working with the FAA and local authorities to resolve the aviation noise problems in the Detroit area. Progress is being made at the local level.

As originally introduced, the Aviation Capacity Act did not adequately allow those who are involved with an FAA working group to develop a policy that best meets the needs of their communities. Without the important changes in the proposal, discussions going on in my home State of Michigan would have been cut off, preventing interested citizens from resolving noise problems in a way that effectively meets the needs of their particular communities.

I am pleased that this proposal will now enable this process to continue in the Detroit area and I thank the distinguished chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee, Senator FORD, for responding to the concerns of many Senators.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, do we have any time left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has 4 seconds.

Mr. FORD. The House has already placed like language in their legislation. We ought to have something to offer or we will be in real trouble.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, let me put it quite simply. This is a reauthorization of a major bill, the Airport Capacity Act. Has anyone here discussed these issues? Have we discussed what the noise situation is going to be in your community, what your local governments can do? Have we really discussed what the density as it relates to slots going into America's most congested airport is going to do?

Who is pushing it? What airlines are going to be benefited? How come? Let me ask you something. Are the residents of New York and New Jersey, and the other environs less considered as it relates to these standards than National? If you are looking at Virginia, it is OK. We have to make sure we are protected, that they can close the airport.

If you do not live there, if you live on the south shore of Long Island, or some other place, do not worry about it.

This legislation does not belong here. This nonsense about the most important thing that the administration is doing does not change the correctness of it.

PFC's, passenger facility charges; blackmail. Skinner called up all the airports and had all his minions doing it. You want that; you had better vote for this.

Why did you not put it in here freestanding? The House has it in. You would have reconciliation.

We slow slots to LaGuardia. We open up the noise levels. We open the density levels. What kind of nonsense? Are we going to yield to that?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, pursuant to the unanimous-consent decree, I cite section 2001 of the Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act. I raise a point of order that title III, subtitle (b), and all those chapters in this provision violate subparagraph (D)(1)(a) of the statutes because it does not produce a change in outlays of revenue.

POINT OF ORDER; THE BYRD RULE

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to waive the Byrd rule and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to waive the Byrd rule. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAUTENBERG). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 69, nays 31, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAUTENBERG). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who have yet to vote?

If not, on this vote, the yeas are 69, the nays are 31. Three-fifths of Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion to waive the Byrd rule is agreed to. The point of order falls.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Therefore, the point of order falls.

Mr. SASSER. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the inquiry?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, time has expired on all amendments on which we had debate scheduled by unanimous consent.

May I ask the Chair if there are other amendments to be considered now that would not be debated under the rules? I say that hoping, Mr. President, against hope that there are no other amendments to be considered.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I have an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In response to the manager of the bill, all time for debatable motions has elapsed.

AMENDMENT NO. 3044

(Purpose: To reduce the pay of Members of Congress corresponding to the percentage reduction of the pay of Federal employees who are furloughed or otherwise have a reduction of pay resulting from a sequestration order)

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota, [Mr. PRESSLER], for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. LEVIN, proposes an amendment numbered 3044.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill add the following new section:

SEC. . REDUCTION OF PAY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

(a) REDUCTION IN PAY.—For each month during fiscal year 1991 in which, by reason of a furlough or other employment action necessitated by a sequestration order under section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 902), the total amount of the pay paid to any Federal employee is projected to be less than the monthly equivalent of the annual rate of pay established for such Federal employee pursuant to law, the rate of pay payable to a Member of Congress shall be reduced to the rate of pay established for such Member pursuant to law.

(b) COMPUTATION OF REDUCED PAY.—The rate of pay payable to a Member of Congress for any month referred to in subsection (a) shall be equal to the amount determined by multiplying the rate of pay established for such Member pursuant to law by the percentage reported to Congress for such month under subsection (c)(1)(D).

(c) DETERMINATION OF PERCENTAGE FOR COMPUTATION OF REDUCED PAY.—(1) No later than the first day of each month in fiscal year 1991, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall—

(A) determine whether, for a reason described in subsection (a), the total amount of the pay paid to any Federal employee in that month is projected to be less than the monthly equivalent of the annual rate of pay established for such Federal employee pursuant to law;

(B) estimate the average of the percentages that would result by dividing the monthly equivalent of the annual rate of pay established for each such Federal employee pursuant to law into the total amount projected to be paid such Federal employee for such month;

(C) aggregate the percentages determined under subparagraph (B) for Federal employees for each agency and determine the highest average percentage for any agency; and

(D) transmit to Congress a written report containing the average computed under subparagraph (C).

(2) The Office of Management and Budget may use a statistical sampling method to make the estimates and determinations under paragraph (1).

(3) For purposes of this section, the term "agency" means an Executive agency as defined under section 105 of title 5, United States Code.

(d) APPLICATION TO OTHER FEDERAL LAWS.—For the purpose of administering any provision of law, rule, or regulation which provides premium pay, retirement, life insurance, or any other employee benefit, which requires any deduction or contribution, or which imposed any requirement or limitation, on the basis of a rate of salary or basic pay, the rate of salary or basic pay payable after the application of this section shall be treated as the rate of salary or basic pay.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this section and shall apply to the first applicable pay period of members of Congress or Executive officers and employees occurring on or after October 1, 1990. If the date of enactment of this section is after October 1, 1990, and the provisions of this section become applicable in the reduction of pay of members of Congress or Executive officers and employees, all reductions which would have occurred if this section had been enacted as provided in subsection (b) and the amount of such reduction shall be recovered for the remaining pay periods for fiscal year 1991.

(f) APPLICATION TO EXECUTIVE OFFICERS.—The provisions of this section and the computations as they apply to the reduction under subsection (b) shall apply to the rate of pay for the Vice President, and any executive officer at a position level V or above of the Executive Schedule under sections 5311 through 5317 of title 5, United States Code, any executive officer or employee in the Executive Office of the President who on the date of the enactment of this section is paid at a pay rate equal to or above of the pay rate for a position at level V or above of the Executive Schedule under sections 5311 through 5317 of title 5, United States Code.

Mr. PRESSLER. I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

So the amendment (No. 3044) was agreed to.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. May I inquire of the Chair, are there any other amendments pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other amendments pending?

The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, there being no response to the inquiry by the distinguished manager regarding any further amendments, I will in a moment request consideration of the one remaining leadership amendment dealing with budget process reform.

There being no other amendments, I now ask unanimous consent that no amendments other than the leadership amendment on budget process reform be in order.

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object, does that include secondary amendments to the leadership package?

Mr. MITCHELL. No. I suggested no other amendments than this amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Germane amendments to that amendment would be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska cannot be heard.

Mr. STEVENS. I am sorry, I was asking the leader, if I may, would germane amendments to the leadership amendment be in order?

Mr. MITCHELL. Not if my request were granted. Obviously if the Senator——

Mr. STEVENS. I will wait.

Mr. MITCHELL. So there is no misunderstanding. Mr. President, I withhold the request.

Just so there is no misunderstanding, approval of the request as stated would foreclose amendments other than the Budget Process Reform Act and also foreclose second-degree amendments to that act.

If the Senator objects to one or both of those provisions, he obviously should so state.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to the former. For the time being I would like to reserve on the latter until there is an explanation of at least a couple of the portions of that amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, Mr. President, I modify my request to ask unanimous consent that there be no amendments in order other than the Budget Process Reform Act and germane second-degree amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, Members of the Senate, the hour is late. I know all Senators are weary from weeks in which we have been engaged in this process. There remains this one additional amendment which is a very important amendment. It is the budget process reform provisions that have been worked out through several weeks of negotiation.

I know many Members of the Senate have a keen interest in and concern about these provisions. Under the rules by which we deal with the reconciliation bill there is no time remaining for debate. I have consulted with the distinguished Republican leader, with the managers, with several interested and concerned Senators. It is my belief that an amendment of this magnitude warrants a period of debate and discussion and the opportunity for Senators to ask questions or express their views about it. So I will momentarily propound a unanimous-consent request, asking that there be 1 hour of debate on this amendment so any Senator who wishes to ask questions or to express a view on it will be free to do so.

I suggest that time period not arbitrarily, but after having consulted with a large number of Senators who have expressed an interest in this matter. It is conceivable, indeed likely, that I did not, personally, reach everyone because I am not aware of each Senator who may be interested in this. But I made an effort to contact as many as possible and consulted with as wide a range as possible. In view of the hour I believe, as do most of the Senators with whom I conferred, that this would be an appropriate time period.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for 1 hour of debate on the Budget Process Reform Act amendment which I will now send to the desk in behalf of myself, Senator DOLE, Senator SASSER, Senator DOMENICI, Senator BYRD, and Senator BENTSEN and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me separate the two so that Senators will have a chance to express objection.

AMENDMENT NO. 3046

(Purpose: To reform the budget process)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration, and I withhold the unanimous-consent request with respect to the time for debate on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. SASSER, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BYRD and Mr. BENTSEN, proposes an amendment numbered 3046.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the majority leader for giving us this opportunity to discuss the matter. I know the Senator from North Carolina and I do. I see other Senators standing.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will yield, I have not yet obtained unanimous consent to 1 hour for debate. I wonder if I might do that, if it is the Senator's intention to discuss the matter. I wanted to make certain Senators had an opportunity to express objection to it.

I now ask unanimous consent that there be a period——

Mr. PRESSLER. Reserving the right to object, is it possible if a Senator has questions, say to the chairman of the Finance Committee, that he can enter into a colloquy? That time will be divided? During the hour, how will one obtain time?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am going to ask the time be controlled and divided in the usual form by the distinguished chairman and ranking member, the managers of the bill.

I will state my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. I would like to speak on it. I also have a secondary amendment. Is that included in the 1 hour?

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not have a chance to complete my request. I intend to cover that in my request, if I might complete it, and then give the opportunity to any Senator to object if he wishes to do so.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be 1 hour for debate on the amendment with the time to be equally divided and controlled in the usual form; and that there be 30 minutes equally divided and controlled in the usual form for debate on any second-degree amendment which may be offered to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the hour is late and there could be unlimited second-degree amendments. We could be here past 2 a.m. just by Senators who put in second-degree amendments. I hope we will not have to stay here all night long. We have been here a long time.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as the Senator knows, my original unanimous-consent request would have precluded second-degree amendments. Objection was heard to that. I am attempting to accommodate that. I want to modify or amend my request that any second-degree amendments be germane. I stated it in my initial request. I do not believe I stated it in this latter reiteration.

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object, and I have great respect for the leader, as the Senate knows. This is the most far-reaching nongermane amendment that is subject to a point of order I have ever seen. It is a procedure that further complicates the procedure that we have now gone through in October on a process that should have been completed by May.

I am being respectful to my friend by saying I think if we could have a period of discussion to find out what the intent of the leadership is with regard to this package, we may not have any amendments, and it may well be that the leadership may see fit to modify it itself to avoid such amendments.

I do not have any amendments in mind myself at this time. I do have a series of questions. I think others have questions.

We are grateful to all who have been part of the leadership group in negotiating this package, but I saw it for the first time this afternoon and I have spent 2 hours reading it. Maybe I am dilatory in that, but that is when I received it from my staff. It has raised a series of questions with me, and I do not mean to prolong this matter.

I would like to have some answers to questions as to what is intended with regard to some of the powers that are conferred upon the Office of Management and Budget and the Budget Director and how these triggers would impact particular processes under these caps that are outlines.

My colleagues, I think, understand it full well. I am not trying to delay. I urge the leader to let us have the debate period without any amendments in order at all and then see if any of us want amendments later on. Maybe we can work it out that way.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I appreciate the concern of my friend, the distinguished Senator from Alaska, and share that concern. This is a far-reaching measure. That is why I am attempting to accommodate the interest of those Senators who want to have time to debate it. Under the rule, there would be no time for that purpose. The objective of this unanimous-consent request is to create a period of time for such discussion which would not otherwise exist.

I would also say while I did not attend meetings involving budget process reform at any stage during this process—from our side that was left entirely to the distinguished chairmen of the relevant committees—I am acutely aware from my meetings in the summit that this is of critical importance to the President. Over and over again I was told directly by the President's top negotiators that budget process reform was an essential condition to the President of any budget legislative package. The distinguished ranking member is here and if I am incorrect in that regard, I would welcome to stand corrected. But I have been under the impression what we are doing here is attempting to accommodate the President's request by proceeding with this package of reforms.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the majority leader yield for a second?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, for a moment, I will speak to this side of the aisle, and then I will speak generally. Over the past 3 months as this package of tax increases, entitlement changes, and reductions in 5 years of discretionary accounts, principally defense, I do not know how many of my colleagues have asked, will there be a new process to make sure we get what we bargained for? I do not know how many said, if you do not give us that, you can rest assured the package is not going to pass.

We tried. That is what this is. I think by the time we are finished discussing it, we will be able to convince you that while it is different, it truly renders this package rather credible, not only from our eyes but from the public's eyes. We can expect the deficit reduction that we vote for, in terms of the various cuts, taxes, changes, and the like, will be achieved.

Might I say to all the Senators, I think a very similar package has been adopted by the House. So for those who think it is extremely different from anything we have ever had, it is only somewhat different. They have adopted it with a couple of changes, but for the most part, it is part of their reconciliation package.

In fact, I think I know a couple of areas where we differ and we can probably talk about those, or we will talk about them in conference, if we ever get this matter through, and I hope we do.

I might say from this side of the aisle, I heard from at least 10 Senators who said they were not going to vote for substantial deficit reduction unless the budget processes were reformed to assure we got what we bargained for. I think we tried that, and I look forward to sharing with you what we achieved.

There were about five Senators involved from both sides of the aisle, about five House Members, and ultimately 10 or 15 Members from each side, along with the OMB Director and whatever experts we had here. We did the best we could, and I think it is a good package.

I thank the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I renew my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARKIN). Is there objection to the request of the majority leader?

Mr. STEVENS. Is this the request for no amendments?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, it is the request for 1 hour of debate on the pending amendment and 30 minutes on any germane second-degree amendment that is offered thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleagues.

If I might just state before yielding to the distinguished Senator from New York that I hope we can complete action on this within a reasonable period and leave for the night. I implore my colleagues to permit us to complete action at a reasonable hour this evening. We have a very long day tomorrow with appropriations bills pending and we hope at some point to get back a conference report on this measure. So I thank my colleagues for their cooperation.

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the majority leader pursue or consider having a vote on this tomorrow?

Mr. MITCHELL. No.

[Laughter.]

Mr. DECONCINI. I take it the majority leader would like staying here until midnight tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, there has been a request for time from this side of the aisle, and it has been represented to the Senator from Tennessee that the Senator from New York was requesting 10 minutes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Correct.

Mr. SASSER. I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the chairman of the committee. I thank the President.

Mr. President, we are told that this is a bill to reform the budget process. And if that is not an oxymoron, we have not heard one in this Chamber since Senator Russell graced our aisles.

This bill of momentous consequence appeared on our desks this afternoon. I obtained a copy at 11:25. A 122-page bill that changes the way the Government works, and the Senate works, and we have never seen it.

We are told by the majority leader, our friend, that it was the result of several weeks of negotiation. We learned from the distinguished ranking member of the Budget Committee that there were, count them, five Senators involved. I assume I have reason to believe that this negotiation took place in an armed military base behind barbed wire some distance from the the Capitol. Further, that last-minute changes were made by the Budget Director at the White House during an all-night meeting determining whether the President would come down to give his assent.

If I can say from my deep knowledge of Roman history acquired from the novels of Robert Graves, I have come to the conclusion that it is a mistake for Senators to allow themselves to be taken off to a military base, put under armed guard, and told to write legislation.

There were no hearings. There has been no debate. There has been no consideration. The distinguished Senator from Alaska got it at 7 o'clock this evening. I claim the earliest arrival. I stood down by the Xerox machine and at 11:25 I got my hot copy in my hands. We have no idea what is in this. I will tell you a few things.

First, Mr. President, 5 years ago on this floor I stood and, as a bill of this kind was being written in the Republican cloakroom, the first budget process reform, the Gramm-Rudman legislation, I said, "Never, not ever in our wildest imagination have we thought that such a device would be used to force unconsidered and in my view ill-considered legislation in the Congress. No hearings have been held on this proposal. No definition settled, no real understanding of what is involved. Indeed, the legislation changes hourly." Just as there are in here, you will be interested to know, new budget targets for 5 years.

I have an important announcement to make. Things are getting worse in our country. Since we first enacted this mode of legislation, we have always known that in 5 years time we would have a balanced budget. Not this year, not next year, but in 5 years. Zero.

In 1986 we set the targets which led us up to 1991; zero. Again, in 1988 we set the targets, set it up to 1993; zero. We are now at the first zero and we find in this bill, that, no, the deficit is not zero; it is $242 billion. I have to report to the Senate that in 5 years time this time it is not zero anymore, it is $62 billion.

Now we propose to divide our budget into three parts. The defense spending authorization part actually goes up each year for 3 years. International affairs, a minimum $20 billion, stays there, with no opportunity taken to use a peace dividend in world affairs, much less domestic affairs. The Pentagon is getting all it wants, even at the end of the cold war. Yes, it is over. The Secretary of State keeps telling us. The President keeps telling us that. But their defense budget rises. As Helen Dewar wrote in the Washington Post this morning, "not one weapon system of the cold war disappeared from this budget."

I have 40 years of my life in that era, and I do not have to apologize, I, hope for the views I had then. But that was then. This is now. But not according to this measure.

There cannot be five Members of this body who have read more than three pages of this amendment. I say to you, Mr. President, we do not know what we are doing accepting this one thing. We are letting the legislative process disappear from this body.

The New York Times after the Senators returned under guard, or at least by military vehicle, from Fort Andrews, spoke of government by cabal. How else do you describe the measure of this consequence? Never printed, never seen until the day of enactment on which point we are assured it has been agreed to in another place, unspecified; by other persons, unnamed, excepting that it is important to the President.

I give you just one item. I will not keep you long because I have not a great deal to say about a bill which I have scarcely read and only dimly understand. But how do you like this? Remember, we were told in the State of the Union message do not mess around with Social Security. Which really meant let us, let me spend it as if it were general revenue. There is a little item here. Anything you want to do on any subject, if it spends any money, takes 60 votes, forever now. Forever.

But with respect to Social Security, there is one additional nice provision here. Under this leadership legislation, changes to the financing of Social Security would also be subject to that ubiquitous 60-vote point of order, and this is—now I quote, Mr. President—this may be as much as anybody in the Senate learns about this legislation tonight so I ask my friends to listen. This point of order obtains "without regard to whether such changes increase, decrease or have no impact on the outlays of and income to such program." Whether it increases outlays, decreases outlays or has no effect, you need 60 votes even to consider it.

That is a gag on the Senate. This legislation is filled with such provisions. It is taking away the Senate's prerogative. There was something deeply symbolic about the President taking our people away to a military base, keeping them there until they had agreed, and then giving them the right to return to Capitol Hill in something less than the stature with which they left.

I do not speak as to any individual, but can this really be done to U.S. Senators? Given legislation at noon today and told to enact it, forever. Enact it in the evening and no votes, no amendments, no discussion, no hearings, not even having it printed. Why do we do this? I will tell you why we do this. We do this to reelect the President. That was his price of letting our Senators free.

First of all, we increased the debt ceiling by $1.9 trillion. That means 5 years with no debt ceiling discussions, none of those inconvenient discussions of what are you doing with that money? How much are you borrowing? Where did it all go? Five years. No more of that during the first term. For 3 years in this world of sequester, sequester, sequester, for 3 years no sequesters. Let us see, 1991, 1992, 1993. That is it, 1993, 1994 all the sequesters you want. No sequester now. Like in Alice it was jam yesterday and jam tomorrow, never jam today.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. No, the Senator will not yield for any question. I have never been asked about this before. It is too late to ask me now.

Mr. President, if you want to reelect, if you want to reelect——

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the galleries as well as in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BYRD. The Chair has responsibility to maintain order in the galleries as well as in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be no outbursts from the galleries.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I appreciate the intervention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator please desist just a moment. The Chair will remind the Senator that the 10 minutes yielded to the Senator have expired.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Might I have 10 seconds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield more time to the distinguished Senator from New York?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Ten seconds.

Mr. SASSER. Yes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time did the Senator yield?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Ten seconds.

Mr. SASSER. I would be pleased to yield 1 minute to the Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. One minute.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, we are in the process of diminishing the legislative role of the Senate at the behest of the President. If you would like to diminish the national election process as well, here we have it. This is a bill to reelect the President of the United States by statute. All that could be done is done. It is too late. You will have done it. God save the President. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield 1 minute; half a minute?

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend from New Mexico, of course I would be pleased to yield to him. I have a number of Senators on our side who want to speak.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to make a clarification. It will take me 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will suspend, the Senator from New Mexico controls one-half hour of time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will take 30 seconds.

I just want to say to my fellow Senators the Social Security provisions that the distinguished Senator from New York has talked about are current law. We codified them in this amendment because the Finance Committee made the request. They are current law.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, on our side of the aisle there have been requests from a number of Senators to speak. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD] has requested 5 minutes, as has the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM], as has the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS]; 5 minutes for each of those Senators, and the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has not requested——

Mr. PRYOR. I would like to request time or at least ask a question.

Mr. SASSER. Does the Senator wish time or to ask a question?

Mr. PRYOR. If I may have 5 minutes of questions.

Mr. SASSER. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas is allocated 5 minutes, and that eats up the 30 minutes on our side of the aisle.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator, the chairman of the Budget Committee, I thought I had 5 minutes in there.

Mr. SASSER. As a matter of fact, the distinguished Senator from Illinois has 5 minutes.

Let us recapitulate here. I have allocated out more time than I actually can allocate, I say to my friend. I say to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas that I had Senator SIMON on the list prior to the distinguished Senator requesting time. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois would be good enough to split his time with the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SIMON. If I may respond to the Chairman, I will be offering a second-degree amendment. I will not take 30 minutes. I would be pleased to give some of that to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SANFORD addressed the Chair.

Mr. SASSER. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, there are a great many things about this bill that ought to bring rejection. The Senator from New York has certainly made the case very well on most of the points. I want to simply emphasize one point primarily, and then maybe a couple of secondary points.

For the past several years I have been bothered by one major factor in the budget; that is, that we did not know what the figures were. The public did not know what the real deficits were. Somehow we managed to cover up the true deficits. All the time, for 10 years, when we claimed we were reducing deficits we were actually increasing the true deficits, piling up an unprecedented national debt—the largest in the history of both this Nation and the world.

I think that has to stop. I think we have to have honesty in our budget. I think the people must know the honest figures if we expect the support of the people in dealing with the deficits.

Mr. SASSER. If the distinguished Senator from North Carolina will yield for a quick question?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. The distinguished Senator will be pleased to——

Mr. SANFORD. I am well aware of that section.

Mr. SASSER. I ask him if he does know that in the package before us we have——

Mr. SANFORD. Yes. I am going to come to that. I was going to say we had a little bit of honesty in here.

Mr. SASSER. We included the provision that he has supported for a number of years here. We think that is a welcome addition to the package.

Mr. SANFORD. I think it is the best thing in this amendment. But we come to this 5-year plan, Mr. President, and we proclaim loudly that we are going to take $500 billion off the budget deficit, $500 billion in reductions of deficits, and at the same time over that 5-year period we are going to be adding $1.4 trillion, $1.6 trillion, $1.9 trillion, depending on whose figures you take to the debt.

I think this is something that we simply cannot permit to go on for 5 years. We must come to terms with this deficit and this debt. To lull ourselves for 5 more years of complacency I think would be a great tragedy.

I can see the day when the big limousines do not pull up to the Federal Reserve building, and our bonds do not get bought. If that happens, 1929 is going to look like a church picnic. We are going to have the worst kind of financial disaster that could be imagined.

So I think it would be a great mistake if we saw this as a 5-year plan, and if we permitted a President or ourselves to talk about this 5-year plan as getting at our problem in a substantial way.

I thank the chairman for both putting into this bill and mentioning that the debt increase will be considered a measure of the deficit. However, I do not think that the debt increase is a measure of deficit. I think the debt increase is the deficit, and the sooner we admit it, the sooner we get honest, the sooner we will get on with solving this problem so we will not bankrupt and wreck this country.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Let me yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, physicians train so that first you diagnose the patient, attempt to understand the problem, and then you prescribe. I would suggest if you look at a diagnosis of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings over the last 5 years you would find these as some of the problem areas: First, it has not contributed to credible deficit reduction. That is shown by the fact that we have had unprecedented addition to our national debt during the same period of time that we have had Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

I suggest that the reason why we have not had credible deficit reduction has been in part because so many items were off budget; that we did not count.

We did not count, for instance, a substantial amount of the S&L bailout costs last year. We do not count those things that occur after the magic date when the window was closed and all spending no longer counts for the calculation of Gramm-Rudman. We have no effective postenactment enforcement mechanisms.

Most States which have a balanced budget constitutional amendment require some kind of combination of executive and legislative action to reduce spending in the event that fiscal patterns are leading toward an imbalanced budget. We do not have that with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

So what is our prescription to this diagnosis? Our prescription is to eliminate for all practical purposes the deficit targets. We no longer are talking about attempting to reduce the deficit. We are now talking about reducing spending, maintaining our spending within certain ceiling levels.

I will make with the highest sense of confidence the statement that if we adopt this approach tonight, we will have deficits in the next 3 years that will make even the deficits of the last 10 years pale in comparison. There will be no discipline in our spending, there will be no discipline in our overall deficit posture, because the only thing we will be looking at are the spending ceilings.

The revenue falls below expectations because of unrealistic economic ambitions, and I believe this whole program is built upon those. We will have burgeoning deficits. There is no sequester to provide any minimal restraint in the event of those burgeoning deficits.

The ceiling limits on spending are not transferable among categories. There will be no disincentive not to spend up to the ceiling because there are no opportunities to, for instance, find new domestic programs that justify greater spending by saving spending on the defense side. Enormous loopholes.

How many people realize that in this provision, we are about to vote effectively for Egyptian debt relief, Polish debt relief, and completely a blank check for Operation Desert Shield? All of those are going to be outside the spending limits, outside the deficit targets, since there are no deficit targets.

Mr. President, when this century opened, there was a country which many people thought would be the great country of the 20th century; it had beautiful land, it had cultured people, it had tremendous possibilities. It was at that time the sixth largest economy in the world.

Today, that country is the 65th economy in the world. It struggles with one of the largest debts and one of the most broken economies in the world. That country is Argentina. And it fell from grace in 90 years, in large part because it did not have a capacity to exercise some discipline, some sense of vision, some direction, to its national purpose.

I am concerned that by adopting provisions such as this before us tonight we are about to move even further down the path of Argentina, and it saddens me that our generation of Americans should be the generation that will take that step.

I imagine that this is going to pass. I can count, not as well as everyone in here, but well enough to see that there is a majority of votes for this. I do not think this is going to be one of our proudest hours, and I believe we will have ample opportunity to be well advised of the ill wisdom of the decision that we are about to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the junior Senator from the State of Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I wondered if our time here tonight was well spent. The distinguished Senator from New York has told us that on this vote we reelect the President. If we do that, we are doing the Lord's work, and I rejoice in being part of it.

Mr. President, we have had a reference here to the budget process being an oxymoron.

Mr. President, I submit if we went out to any household in America we would find that they had a budget process, and that budget process would not be an oxymoron. I submit that in any business in America, be it large or small, they have a budget process that is not an oxymoron.

In fact, we stand on the single spot in the United States of America where budget process is an oxymoron, and as a result we are the laughing stock of the Nation.

Mr. President, it is interesting that after all of these remarks, we are finally debating, in my humble opinion, the one part of the bill that I know is in the interest of the people who do the work, and pay the taxes, and pull the wagon in this country.

Mr. President, let me outline the so-called outrages we are talking about in this amendment. The first outrage is that we have three caps on spending each year for 3 years, and what the cap says is if you violate that cap, 15 days after you pass the spending bill there is an across-the-board adjustment that cuts spending back to the level that you said in law that you would adopt.

Mr. President, if that were submitted to a vote of the working people of this country, it would be adopted by an overwhelming margin.

I hear our colleagues say there is no enforcement, there is no sequester. Mr. President, we have more sequesters in this bill, more enforcement in this bill by far than we have ever had before. We have three caps that are absolutely enforced with a mandatory offset. We have a sequester for the first time on entitlements and underperforming funding measures. We have the Gramm-Rudman sequester process strengthened with an ironclad enforcement.

Mr. President, what we are trying to do here is to do something that we have all been concerned about. It is easy to make promises, it is easy to write budgets. It is very hard to live up to those promises in those budgets. There is no ironclad guarantee. You cannot build legislatively a four-sided fort where you can draw the drawbridge up and go back to sleep. But what we have here is the strongest process we have ever had before, a stone wall to our back in the gunfight of those who really want to do something about spending.

Mr. President, I have heard the language stretched to the breaking point, but how anybody could possibly believe that by having binding constraints on spending, we move this great Republic toward the financial crises of Argentina, I find that totally incomprehensible, and obviously I do not believe it to be the case.

Let me say, Mr. President, that the current vehicle that we operate on, as imperfect as it is has worked. Let me remind my colleagues that before 1985, when on the floor of the Senate we adopted the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced budget law, the 20 years prior to the adoption of that law saw Federal spending grow by 11 percent a year.

With all of its failings since that law went into effect, Federal spending has grown by half of that rate. The Federal Government was spending 23.9 percent of GNP the day that law passed. Today the Federal Government is spending 22.4 percent of GNP.

And let me let you in on a secret. With this agreement fully enforced, with moderate growth at least 80 percent of the level we have achieved in the last 6 years, Government spending as a percentage of GNP in 1995, at the end of that fiscal year, will be 18.3 percent, 24 percent smaller than it was when Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was enacted in 1985.

Mr. President, I ask for 1 additional minute.

Mr. STEVENS. Is the Senator going to save time for those who want to ask questions?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 1 additional minute, and say to the Senator I clearly intend to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, we do not have a perfect device in front of us. We have a device that is aimed at trying to deal with runaway entitlements; we have a device aimed at trying to control spending and help us live up to the commitment that we make in this bill.

It is not a perfect process. But it is a dramatic improvement over any enforcement process that we have had ever in the Congress of the United States of America.

I believe that of all we do here, if this reconciliation bill ultimately becomes law, that the greatest impact by far will be the changes we make in the budget process tonight.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I am most struck this evening by the tremendous change, the shocking change, in our procedures. Heretofore, since 1974, whenever we finally got a budget determined, settled upon, we would immediately forward it over to the Congressional Budget Office to get their estimations. Not so with this one. As the Senator from New York said, you could not find this blooming amendment until late this afternoon. I heard rumors about it. I wondered how the S&L bailout was treated, and I wondered about Social Security, and I wondered about many other critical elements. Then, in one fell swoop, we are presented with a 126-page amendment.

Under this leadership amendment, you can forget about the Congressional Budget Office. The fellow who is going to oversee all the enforcement that the Senator from Texas talks about is the same guy, Richard Darman, who told us less than a year ago that we would have a $100 billion deficit, and we ended up with $262 billion. Now, this amendment says don't worry about deficit targets, and it quote-unquote "holds harmless" huge chunks of Federal spending.

Well, that reminds me of the insurance company looking for a slogan, Capital Life: "We'll surely pay, if the small print on the back doesn't take it away." They are going to hold harmless. Well, you know who is going to see to it that the Administration's pet projects are held harmless. That is the Director of OMB, armed with his fairy dust economic and technical misestimates. So OMB will now be in the driver's seat.

I am really amazed that some of the very people who are so outspoken and dogged about defending the prerogatives of the U.S. Congress have now yielded over to the executive branch this massive discretion and power. The Republican minority takes total control.

Mr. President, this amendment presents us with a formula for a gridlocked Congress and a do-nothing Government for the next 5 years. It also grants three-way veto authority to a willful minority in Congress. Take your pick from the Sununu veto, the DOLE veto, and the Darman veto. The Sununu White House can exercise the traditional constitutional veto requiring 67 votes for override. The distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE, has his own veto power under the provision requiring a 60-vote point of order for any bill exceeding the spending caps. And Dick Darman has yet a third veto option by virtue of OMB's authority under the terms of this package to rule unilaterally on whether a given bill violates the spending caps.

Meanwhile, the Senate Budget Committee will be reduced to automatic pilot. It will be stripped of any meaningful role in establishing budget priorities, and will quickly fall into irrelevance.

What we have here, as the Senator from New York says, is a statutory enactment of the reelection of the President. That is all they had in mind.

You do not see Senators jumping up over there on the other side of the aisle. They know that they are holding four aces. They say hush your mouth; if we can get this in here, we have a hammerlock on the government for 5 years. They don't have to worry anymore about November 6 and how many seats they can pick up, because this gives them minority control from the White House, and particularly with this so-called budget process reform.

It is a scandal, if you study it closely. They put the S&L bailout mostly on budget because the deficit levels don't matter under this new budget regime.

This amendment essentially guts the original focus of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Heretofore, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has been premised on specific targets aimed at achieving a balanced budget. That is now gone. In its place, this amendment talks only about targets for proposed savings. In other words, in 1991 we only have to reach the proposed savings of $40 billion, and no one is supposed to notice or care that the deficit skyrockets to $253 billion. By 1995, the last year of this plan, even the wildly optimistic OMB projection foresees a $63 billion deficit—even after raiding the trust funds, factoring in rosy economic assumptions, and excluding the S&L bailout costs. A more accurate deficit projection for 1995 would be closer to $200 billion. In other words, the deficit can continue to grow unchecked in each and every year of this agreement, but as long as we reach our target for proposed savings, then we get to claim that we did our job. Perhaps nothing more clearly illustrates the inadequacy and sham of this approach.

That is scandalous, I can tell my colleagues here right now. I have worked in this field as long as anyone in this U.S. Congress and I am ashamed of this particular thing.

I thank the distinguished chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. I ask the distinguished Senator from New Mexico if he has anyone on his side of the aisle who wishes to speak?

Mr. DOMENICI. We have the distinguished Senator from Alaska, who desires to use some time to ask questions, I assume.

How much time does the Senator from New Mexico have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 23 minutes and 46 seconds remaining to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. What is the desire of my colleague?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not wish to use the time if there are people who wish to ask questions. I can get time on an amendment, and intend to do so, if it is necessary. I do have some questions. I will be pleased to have some time to ask them now.

Mr. DOMENICI. We can do it either way. I want a little time to explain this as I see it, but it is not urgent. Why does the Senator not direct his questions to me?

Mr. STEVENS. I will wait.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield myself 5 minutes.

I am sure others are going to do a much better job of explaining this package. I see the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, who spent untold hours on this process. I just want to tell my colleagues, I really do not believe that he would be part of many of the things that have been alleged about this package. It is inconceivable to me that he would have turned over the power of the Congress and the U.S. Senate to the White House, the U.S. House, or anyone.

Having said that, let me tell Senators about the background on this process reform proposal. We were unable to get our business done early in the year because we could not get budgets through this place and through the U.S. House. We had a crisis and we were languishing. We were going to get nothing done.

The President of the United States said in sequence: Let us put everything on the table, and let us try to solve this problem. Ten days later that was not enough. He did what was right. He said revenues are on the table; taxes.

That set in motion a process of trying to get together on the budget of the United States, with three groups participating: The House, the Senate, and the President and his people, with Democrats and Republicans participating.

We set an agenda. Let us reduce the deficit. Let us see what we can do with entitlements. Let us see what we can do with revenues.

We put a great big red mark, let us reform the budget processes. So we can tell the public that what we have produced is more credible than the past.

With that background, negotiations went on for a long, long time. The Budget Committee held hearings on budget reform and budget packages while that was going on. And all kinds of ideas were there.

What we decided to do essentially in this package seems complex, but is simple. We said we are going to try to have a 5-year plan. That is point No. 1. Point No. 2, we are going to try to divide the Federal Government into discretionary appropriations, entitlements, and revenues. We said let us have a 5-year plan on discretionary appropriations for this country. The distinguished chairman will better explain what happened there, how it all will work, and his support for what was done.

But we set actual numbers, budget authority, and outlays for the next 5 years for all of the discretionary programs combined. Then we broke it down each year into defense, discretionary domestic, and foreign. And we set numbers for each one and said for the first 3 years those targets are binding, both the big one cumulatively, and each one under it.

For the last 2 years, only the cumulative target is binding.

What does binding mean? Binding means that when you are through appropriating you have met the target. And, if you have not, no bill, no line item veto, no rescissions. Instead, the entire sum of appropriated accounts, take whatever small cut or large cut across the board that is required because you broke the targets.

I do not think that is a terribly onerous provision. In fact I think it is calculated to make the American people believe that over the next 5 years we will achieve $184 billion in discretionary savings, most of which comes out of defense.

Then we said, third, let us have pay-as-you-go for entitlements in the future. If someone wants to put new entitlements in they have to pay for them and they have to be budgetary neutral or there is a point of order. I do not know what is wrong with that. I think that is pretty good.

That is new. I think it is pretty healthy.

Then we said we ought to extend the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings for 5 years and see if we can get close to zero, and we recognize some shortcomings of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. We modify it annually for the first 3 years, if the economics change, or if technicals change.

Those who are interested in budget language will know that we are really trying not to punish the appropriations for failures to meet the targets. And we are trying not to sequester appropriations based on economic changes that cause the sequester numbers to change. We did that.

We then put in credit reform that everybody is telling us we must do. We took Social Security off budget just like Senator HEINZ and Senator HOLLINGS asked us to do. And, from what I can tell there may be some other parts that are details, but that essentially is it. And anyone who says this is not a better process than we have had in the past, and that it is calculated to do this package in rather than to make it enforceable, I truly do not believe they have looked at it. We would be pleased to discuss it more with them.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, let me just say a few things here. I think the distinguished ranking member has done an excellent job in generally outlining the parameters of the package. But let me just answer a couple of things that have been said.

First, with regard to whether or not hearings have been held on this matter, there were 2 days of hearings, joint hearings between the Governmental Affairs Committee and the Budget Committee, several months ago. Some Members who are critical of this package here this evening testified at those hearings and some of the suggestions that they offered at those hearings are included in this particular budget reform package.

We held a markup in the Senate Budget Committee in which certain portions of this package were discussed there, not as parts of this package but as parts of other Member's views of how the budget process could be improved.

Some of those items have been incorporated here. As the distinguished ranking member from New Mexico said, the concept of the Senator from South Carolina and others to take Social Security off budget and out from under the calculation of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets has been done.

We now see for the first time OMB starting to tell us precisely what the deficits are with three different sets of numbers. One with Social Security and RTC, with Social Security counted to offset the deficit and with RTC off budget; then they come with another set of numbers that show us with Social Security now off budget, with RTC on budget, and so on. So we get a fair picture of precisely what the deficit actually is. There are a number of provisions in here that Members have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. SASSER. How much time did I yield myself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All of the time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for an additional 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator is recognized for an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I think the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee would be the one to discuss some of these matters. But to suggest that the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, ROBERT C. BYRD, and the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, LLOYD BENTSEN, and the majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, and even myself were taken off to some military base and hoodwinked, that we did not know what we were doing, that ROBERT C. BYRD was taken advantage of by someone who manipulated the rules, that suggestion is absolutely laughable. If I have ever known one individual who knew the rules, and knew how to write them, and knew how to interpret them for the advantage of the U.S. Senate, and those he represents in the U.S. Senate, I think we would all have to agree it is the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

One of the interesting things we are going to find in this budget package that we present here this evening is that no longer can OMB come forward with one set of economic assumptions in January and predict the deficit is going to be so much in January, allow us to mark up a budget to that particular deficit number, and then come along 3 or 4 months later and say the economic assumptions have changed since we submitted our budget. And now you the Congress have to make that up and you have to reduce the deficit about three or four times more than we had it reduced in the administration's budget.

From now on, under this particular budget document, we will all be singing off the same sheet of music. We will all be using the same economic assumptions to arrive at what deficit savings need to be made.

Mr. President, I think that pretty will covers some of the points I wanted to make. Do we have other Senators who wish to be recognized on the other side of the aisle?

Mr. ADAMS. Is the Senator proceeding to answer questions?

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator will withhold, we have a number of other Senators who have requested time. Senator SIMON, I see, is on his feet. At the appropriate time, Mr. President, I am going to ask for some additional time for the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Parliamentary inquiry. I do not want to be presumptuous. A point of order under 305(b)(2) can be made at the expiration of the hour; is that correct? I make that parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of order can be made at that time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. When is that time? I think it has to be made before the perfecting amendment. That is why I make the inquiry here. I am not trying to cut anybody off, but then I do not want to be told it is too late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. It has expired?

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator withhold?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I withhold. The Senator from New Mexico probably has some time left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the Senator from Alaska 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, keeping in mind the problem the Senator from South Carolina has mentioned, and realizing after that point of order there still are potential second-degree amendments, I want to ask some questions that might be relevant to our consideration of that point of order which I know will be made.

Let me just ask the Members who are managing this proposition this question: We have in this proposal, for instance, a new concept. It is called a look-back sequester on November 15. The sequester is part of existing law already, but this look-back concept is new. I think the Senator from Texas and the Senator from New Mexico might be able to tell us. As I understand it, the results of the fiscal year that preceded that November 15 would be reviewed by the Director of OMB and he would look to see what deficit overage had occurred in the previous fiscal year, not the one coming ahead, as is the case in current law.

Today we have an initial sequester on October 1 where you actually look ahead, take a snapshot of the projected deficit and see what might happen. But this is a look-back concept.

I want to ask this question: Suppose we had another S&L type failure. As I see it right now, that has cost us somewhere between $165 billion and $195 billion, or at least that is the estimate now. Suppose the OMB Director sees that another crisis of that sort took place in September and he had to listen to the Secretary of Treasury, as we did; and say, we need more money, billions more money.

As I read this, November 15 comes and the Director of OMB says, there is at least a $165 billion deficit that you have not taken care of. What happens under this look back? As I understand it, there will be an automatic sequester; am I wrong? Will there not be an automatic sequester if he finds that? We are out of session and there is an across-the-board cut somewhere.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator's question had to do with an S&L type of problem.

Mr. STEVENS. An S&L type loss. It is a loss that was not projected in any of the budget process caused by legislation that was passed in the preceding year.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say to the Senator in response to this question, and other Senators, what we are doing here. There was a constant concern that the sequester process penalized the appropriated accounts. That is what we were worried about, that at the end of the year, if you breached your targets, you looked and said, "Well, what can we cut?" Gramm-Rudman defined the pool. The pool was half comes out of defense and half comes out of discretionary. So we said, how can we make other parts of the budget more responsible for breaking the budget, breaking the targets, and this concept applies to entitlements. It is applied at the end of the year. If the entitlements exceed their targets——

Mr. STEVENS. Respectfully now, the Senator gave me 5 minutes. What happens under this law if there is an unexpected loss of $165 billion to $195 billion when the Budget Director looks at the results on November 15?

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to the Senator, I cannot answer easily because I am trying to tell you that the minisequester you are referring to will only be impacted if the entitlements do increase because of policy changes. If something else causes it to be over, like economics, this does not apply.

Mr. STEVENS. That is what I thought. As a matter of fact, it does not take care of an S&L type loss at all. So the next year we come around and guess what he tells us? You have to pay interest on $165 billion you did not take care of and, by the way, boys, now you must take care of this. You must take care of it. You must reduce discretionary accounts; you must reduce defense spending. We are on a balanced-budget concept, are we not? Does this not presume a balanced-budget concept?

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to my colleague, it takes everything we know that was going to occur and everything that we could project, and on those projections, and given the economics we used that gets to balance under OMB in 5 years. If you are concerned about a sequester occurring because of an S&L crisis, then I would tell the Senator, or the OMB Director, having to cut something because of that kind of S&L crisis, it is not there. The Gramm-Rudman targets are automatically adjusted in the first 3 years, including interest.

Mr. STEVENS. I want to tell my colleagues that this proposal will not take care of an S&L-type crisis automatically; is that right? Is that the answer?

Mr. DOMENICI. It will not take care of it automatically. We are not going to go to a sequester because of it under the Gramm-Rudman targets, if that is what you have in mind as automatically. It will not. But we intended it not. This was intentional. We did not want to have a sequester of the appropriated accounts based upon an S&L crisis. That is why we worked so hard.

Mr. STEVENS. I thought one of the reasons we were here on a 5-year plan was to try to find a budget plan that would, in fact, take care of the S&L crisis we have now. At the end of the 5 years, theoretically we have made up for this, have we not?

Mr. DOMENICI. Absolutely correct.

Mr. STEVENS. This plan does not take care of the main problem we have today.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator was asking about an unknown S&L crisis. All that we have funded and know about are in this budget, taken care of, and we meet the targets.

Mr. STEVENS. I accept that answer, and I will comment on it later if I offer an amendment.

Let me ask about the multiyear aspect. If we look at this proposal, this is now a multiyear prospect. It strikes out 2 years and inserts 4 years. Would someone explain that to me? Why do we have to have a 4-year concept in the permanent law now in dealing with this? I will be glad to give the correct page. If you look at page 35, you have planning levels for each of 2 years, you knocked that out and you insert in place of that 4 years. We do not have the advantage of a full text. We have a series of amendments that deal with existing law. We have not had time to compare this really to existing law. I do not understand the necessity for having a 4-year planning level in a budget package that I thought was dealing with 5 years.

Mr. DOMENICI. This is 1 year, the year we are doing plus 4 equals 5 and that is how we got to 5.

Mr. STEVENS. Does this not set up 4 years out? Next year will we not be dealing with 4 years again?

Mr. DOMENICI. Next year we will be dealing with 3 additional years, as far as the mandatory targets.

Mr. STEVENS. Is the answer that by 1995 then we do not have a Budget Act? What happens in the succeeding years in terms of planning? We are knocking out a 2-year planning process and putting in a 4-year planning process. What kind of planning cycle do we have now if this passes?

Mr. DOMENICI. We have this year and 4 years and when these targets and these provisions expire, we have the Budget Act. And we have met our targets.

Mr. STEVENS. Where is that Budget Act after the end of the 5 years? Where is it?

Mr. DOMENICI. It is still substantive law.

Mr. STEVENS. But this is changing the substantive law, Mr. President.

Mr. DOMENICI. Were we to have brought 6 years in—not the Senator from Alaska—some would say it is too long. We brought in a 5-year plan. Some even think that is too long. Some think we cannot plan beyond 2. We think with the flexibility we have provided that we can plan for 5.

Mr. STEVENS. Answer me another question. I am sorry to perplex my friend and to confuse this matter. Again, I read a summary of the budget summit agreement that was given to us, and I find that the amendment as offered tonight is nowhere like the summary. For instance, there is no automatic reconciliation instruction for revenue decreases in this proposal I can find. It is out now, right? Things we read were going to be here are not here.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think I know a little bit about this and if I sound confused I apologize, but I do not think that is the document that explains this bill. I think that is the document that explains the so-called summit agreement and I think we changed it, but I am not sure of that.

Let me ask the Senator about page 39 of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me see that.

Mr. STEVENS. "To the extent that a concurrent resolution on the budget specifies and directs matters described in paragraphs (1), (2), or (4), the concurrent resolution shall specify and direct deficit reduction for the 5 years covered by the concurrent resolution in amounts equal to or greater than five times that specified and directed for the first year covered for each committee directed." Is that permanent law? Is it every year we are dealing with 5 years from now on?

Mr. DOMENICI. When we write a budget resolution, we cover the first year and write a resolution that covers four additional years, so it is a 5-year budget resolution. And we do that every year. So if we write one next year, it will be for 1 year longer than this budget agreement. What we have talked about in this bill is to make certain new provisions binding for those 5 years.

Mr. STEVENS. That is what I am talking about next. Are they binding for the full 5 years in the enactment now? Under what conditions can Congress change.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is right.

Mr. STEVENS. What does it take to change this 3 years out?

Mr. DOMENICI. You have to change the law. There are many things that you can change with 60 votes.

Mr. STEVENS. It takes a supermajority to change any of it, right?

Mr. DOMENICI. For much of it.

Mr. STEVENS. Any of it.

Mr. DOMENICI. You can change the law and you can change much of it by supermajority.

Let me also say, Mr. President, intentionally—and I want all Senators to know—we intentionally made reconciliation bills 5-year bills and they will be measured on their 5-year impact, not 1 year as in the past, because you used to put big savings in the first year and none in the outyears.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I believe I have almost exhausted my time. I will have some amendments. I might make some comments about the matter. I say most respectfully, the people who have been involved in this process have my absolute admiration and respect. I just really fear this process because here we are late in the session. One of the things I have concerns about is the schedule that says the next Congresses will do things by April 15, by May 30. It has never been done. I think one-third of the votes we have cast this year have been votes related to the restrictions we put on ourselves to try to perform and what is the result? We have not performed. We find out that we have had an S&L crisis that has crippled the banking industry, harmed a great many people. We did not even know it was going on. And now this proposal before us would not solve a similar problem if it came upon the country.

I do not understand why we should go through the process and call it reform when it is a procedural nightmare that we are dealing with in this bill.

The chairman of our Appropriations Committee I think has protected domestic spending in a way that is herculean and we have tried our best to make certain that the defenses of this country will be protected under this also, and entitlements need protection. I do not question that. What I question is why a group of grown people need to put parameters around themselves and their future colleagues in order to do our job and to do it right.

Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield time to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield me 2 minutes?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time do I have remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have 2 minutes only.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico has 2 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Have arrangements been made for Senator BYRD to have some time?

Mr. SASSER. Do I have any time remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator does not.

Mr. SASSER. Pardon?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator does not have any time remaining.

Mr. ADAMS. Then if the Senator would yield me 30 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 30 seconds.

Mr. ADAMS. I just want the Senator to know—the Senator is an old friend and dear friend—I am so deeply offended by this document that I cannot now vote for this whole process. I cannot tell you—and I am saying what the Senator from Alaska did—whether this is permanent law or what the budget process was, which was a rulemaking part of the process of the two Houses of Congress. That is what it was, rulemaking. And yet as I understand this, as the Senator from Alaska just stated, for 5 years we have passed a permanent law that removes from the Congress of the United States its powers, its rulemaking power capacity, concurrent resolutions, and established permanent law which controls all budget and appropriation processes. I am deeply offended by it.

I thank the Senator for the 30 seconds.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Parliamentary inquiry. The Senator from South Carolina, I believe, is on the verge of making——

Mr. HOLLINGS. A point of order at the chairman's volition. I am not trying to preempt anybody. At the appropriate time.

Mr. SASSER. Following the point of order on the motion to waive, we will have 30 minutes, will we not?

Mr. HOLLINGS. All time has expired on the first degree?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty minutes will be available should the point of order not be sustained and should second-degree amendments be proposed.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am sorry; I did not hear the ruling of the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. I am sorry; I did not hear the ruling of the Chair as to the point of order.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. No point of order has been made.

Mr. SASSER. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. HOLLINGS. All time has expired.

Mr. SASSER. There will be time for debate available on the motion to waive.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no time provided for on the motion to waive.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Point of order, Mr. President.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico controls the time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I say to the Senator from Washington, I will try my best, if I have an opportunity, to dissuade the Senator from his views. I do not believe they are right.

Mr. ADAMS. If this is a part of the rulemaking power, this is appropriate.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will go over it in detail with the Senator.

Let me ask, how much time do I have remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if the Senate would consider yielding an additional 10 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SIMON. Parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, have 10 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I apologize. I want to hear the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, but this is monumental and I would like the opportunity to ask at least five or six questions after a while. When will that opportunity be available to a Senator, let us say to the junior Senator from Arkansas, to be specific?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can ask questions only if those controlling time are prepared to yield time for that purpose. Senator BYRD has 10 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have 10 minutes. I yield to the Senator to ask them.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, during World War II in order to save gasoline—I am old enough to remember that. A lot of our colleagues are not—little signs were posted on the highways and byways that said, "Is this trip necessary?" My question is, is it necessary that we have a budget reform package of this magnitude in order to move this reconciliation bill that I am supporting on to the House of Representatives to a conference? Is it necessary that we have this package?

Mr. BYRD. May I say, Mr. President, this package of 123 pages is not budget reform. This contains the entire package that has to do with taxes, entitlements, discretionary spending, et cetera, et cetera. This is not all budget reform. As a matter of fact, references to the budget reform process is a misnomer. This is not budget reform.

What we have here is an agreement, and provisions whereby we will enforce those provisions. This is not the budget.

Mr. PRYOR. If the distinguished chairman would also follow with me on pages 11, 12, and 13. I am deeply concerned that our acceptance of this amendment tonight of 120 pages is going to vastly change a system by which we might, for example, forgive the debt of Israel, or for an Arab republic, or of Egypt. That is on page 12. I am wondering if that adds to our deficit. I think that we are really walking off into some waters that we are not sure about.

I wonder if the Chairman could explain this area.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the problem here is we do not have enough time.

May we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We will have order in the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. We do not have enough time. That is our problem. These are serious questions. Most of them I think ought to be answered. We cannot do that in this limited time.

Let me try to answer the one question of the Senator. With reference to writing off of debts, of Egypt, or Israel, or whatever; would the Senator ask his question again?

Mr. PRYOR. Yes. I am wondering if the process is being changed or if we are permitting ourselves or even allowing the President to write off these debts without congressional consent.

Mr. BYRD. No, no, no, no. That is not being changed. Furthermore, let me say this. The provisions that are in this package protect the Appropriations Committee from having such writing off of debts, if it is agreed to; if such a writing off is agreed to. A vote on this does not ipso facto agree to writing off the debt.

But if it is the position of the Senate and the House that those debts for Egypt and Poland should be written off, they will not be charged against the international discretionary spending cap. Otherwise, if we had foreign operations and domestic discretionary, all as a single fundible item, and the decision was to cancel Israeli debt, and then someone offered an amendment to cancel the debt of Turkey, to cancel many of those debts could have impinged upon domestic discretionary spending. Under this amendment domestic discretionary spending is not penalized if international spending exceeds the cap.

So the protections are in here that will assure us that if the Senate and the House should make those decisions they will not be charged against domestic discretionary spending of the Appropriations Committee. Those protections are there, and they are important.

I am not sure I answered the Senator's question.

Mr. PRYOR. I once again am not challenging——

Mr. BYRD. No. No.

Mr. PRYOR. The distinguished President pro tempore. There is no person in this body who has more respect, as our friend from Tennessee, Senator SASSER, has said, and has said Senator DOMENICI. In no way am I even suggesting that the Senator is trying to give away any powers of this Senate. There is no greater protector of this body in this institution. But may I once again ask this question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. PRYOR. On page 14, section (E), top of the page, this relates to Operation Desert Shield costs, costs meaning no incremental costs directly associated with increases in operations in the Middle East, and do not consider costs that would be experienced by the Department of Defense as part of its normal operations absent Operation Desert Shield.

Is there an interpretation of this that a layman like myself might understand?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the administration at the summit wanted to include Desert Shield in the regular appropriations process. And the question was how do we know how much Desert Shield will cost in fiscal year 1990. The answer was, well, we would predict that it would cost $15 billion.

My position throughout that conference was that whatever Desert Shield costs, it will be outside this appropriation, the regular process. It would not be charged against the defense allocation, and it will not be charged against the domestic discretionary; it would be done in a supplemental appropriation.

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. The funding for Operation Desert Shield would be treated as an ordinary emergency supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. PRYOR. It would have to be appropriated by the House and Senate.

Mr. SASSER. It would have to be appropriated. It would have to be an emergency, subject to hearings, and acted upon by the Appropriations Committee.

The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee was seeking to protect the Senate and the Congress from having the administration come in here and ask for massive sums of additional defense money without proving this was indeed an emergency under the provisions of an emergency supplemental bill. There would be hearings. There would be offsets from other funds collected from Saudi Arabia, et cetera.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am going to sit down because I am embarrassed keeping the distinguished chairman up answering these questions.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, let me say to the distinguished Senator that his questions are important indeed. He should not be embarrassed by keeping my attention here or keeping me on my feet.

The position I took and the result of this agreement the way it is written is that the administration would have to come before the Appropriations Committee and request a supplemental appropriation for any amounts that result from Desert Shield.

I took the position that it ought to come by way of the appropriations process so that the Appropriations Committee can conduct hearings, receive testimony, and find out how much other countries are contributing to Desert Shield.

We have no way of seeing how much they are going to contribute. We have no way of knowing what the costs are going to be. We cannot predict what is going to happen in the desert.

Therefore, if the administration wants to make requests for Desert Shield, let the administration come before the Senate and House, before the Appropriations Committee, request its supplementals, and submit the facts and let the Senate and House make a judgment thereon. It will be outside this process, so the Senate and the House are fully protected insofar as Desert Shield is concerned.

That was an excellent question, and I hope I have helped the Senator.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank the Senator.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, how much time is remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from West Virginia has expired. The Senator from New Mexico has 15 seconds.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, in view of the importance of this matter and the fact that several Senators have very serious and appropriate concerns about it, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from West Virginia be recognized to respond to questions and to comment on this matter for an additional 30 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman if we are assuming a new obligation for a 5-year period that we have not had, before we vote on this amendment. Are we creating a new 5-year commitment or an obligation?

Mr. BYRD. Commitment for what, may I ask?

Mr. PRYOR. Commitment for a new, for example, system of budgets, a new Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and this is Gramm-Rudman-Hollings II. What are we committing ourselves to in the outyears with the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. BYRD. What we are talking about here, insofar as my part is concerned, is discretionary enforcement. We are not talking about budget process reform.

I know where that term got started. The President had much to say about the need for budget process reform. It was all this suggestion that there be a line-item veto, that there be enhanced rescissions, and so on and so on. That was called budget process reform.

We do not have that in here. What we have here are provisions that will enable us to enforce the agreement which we have entered into. Whether or not that agreement bears the final stamp of the Senate and the House remains to be seen. But I feel that if we are going to try to deal with this deficit, we are going to have to do it in a bipartisan way and we are not going to be able to deal with it unless we have Republicans and Democrats and the President on board.

And, consequently, I feel that if I got a commitment out of the administration, let us say to hold appropriations harmless for economic and technical miscalculations, then I have a commitment to do something, also. This cannot be a one-way street.

May I say to my friends, there is no need to worry about Robert Byrd giving away the powers, the authority, the constitutional prerogatives—I could not give that away if I would—of this body. And all this talk about, well, they were taken over to Andrews Field over there and the President took them over there, and they were put under armed guard, and they were kept there and they were not allowed to come home until the President gave his approval, and then he let them come home—Mr. President, that is ludicrous.

I have heard a lot of ludicrous statements here. Of all the ridiculosity that I have ever been exposed to, I have heard it throughout these summit hearings. And all these subtle knifings at those who went over to the summit, I get a little sick and tired of it.

We have a song down in West Virginia, "I Am Looking for the Bully of the Town." Let me say nobody bullies this Senator, not here in this Chamber, not in the conference, nor on the street at midnight. I have had experts try to twist this arm—Lyndon B. Johnson—and I said no. I can say no to any man living, and I get tired of these little subtle cynicisms and darts that are cast at the summit hearings.

If there is a Senator here who wants to say that to me directly, let him speak. Nobody is going to bully this Senator: the President, a Senator, or anyone else. If I am wrong, I will be the first to say I am wrong. But we did our best over there, and it is said that we had those meetings over there and we have not had any conferences since.

We have had many conferences that did not occur over at Andrews. They occurred before we went to Andrews; they occurred since we went to Andrews. I have been here at night, late at night; Senator SASSER has been here; Senator BENTSEN; Senator MITCHELL; I can name them one by one. We were here when you folks were sleeping.

It is easy to pick. Anybody can ask questions. That is the reason we Senators always have the advantage over the witnesses who appear before our committees. It is easy to ask questions. It is difficult to answer them, and it is easy to pick. But I think he that picks ought to be a little more careful how he addresses his criticism.

This Senator is not knowingly ever going to permit any shift of power from this branch, and if there is any Senator who thinks I will, let him stand and say so to me now, call my name. All of these veiled needles and daggers, I get a little tired of them. Anybody can pick and anybody can find fault.

I just heard so much of it, and these poor devils who went over there and stayed over there at night—I did not stay all night; I have a wife that has to stay at the house by herself with my little dog Billy. But I get a little tired of those who went home at night and slept continuing to find fault with something that those of us who did our best to do our duty and uphold this body and its prerogatives and its powers and its traditions—I get a little tired of these veiled criticisms.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask a question now?

Mr. BYRD. No. Let me just finish, and then I will be happy to.

It has been said now. Does the Senator have any other questions? May I say to the Senator I was not directing my remarks to him.

Mr. PRYOR. I appreciate that. I was beginning to wonder. I might say, Mr. President, the great President pro tempore was getting awfully close. But I understand exactly what the distinguished Senator, my good friend, was saying.

Mr. President, I am going to make a 30-second observation, if I might, and I am going to sit down. And there will probably be questions.

That observation is this: Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has been referred to many times tonight on this floor in this debate, the difference in Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and maybe some changes we are making in the budget. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, whether we agree or disagree with the outcome, in my opinion, is one of the great debates we had in this Senate Chamber in the 12 years I have been here. It was over a weekend. It was just us, and we really looked at the priorities of how to do what we needed to do. I voted for it.

I must say, and I say this in respect, Mr. President, to every person, I say this in respect to the Senator from West Virginia, the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from New Mexico, and everyone who has been involved in this process, and I have been involved as of late—I am on the Finance Committee and I voted out the package—but the Senator is right; we do not have the time to find out what we are doing.

I trust the Senator from West Virginia. If I vote for this amendment, to be honest with you, it will be for one and only one reason, and that is because the Senator helped to craft it, and I do not think he is going to sell us out, and I do not think he is going to give away the power or the authorities.

I wish we had more time, I say to my friend, and with that, I will yield the floor and I thank the Senator for granting me the privilege.

(Mr. DASCHLE assumed the chair.)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish I had more time, too. I can appreciate the concerns the Senators have. I can appreciate the frustration that I have presented this package late. I can understand all that.

I do not understand everything that is in the package. But a good bit of it deals in areas that are under the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee or other committees of the Budget Committee.

I am sure that each of us has an understanding of the areas which were ours to debate but not the other areas. I can fully appreciate the frustration of the Senator. I wish we could take the time and answer all the questions. But some of it we will have to accept on faith, and I am accepting some of it on faith as well. I do not know. I hope it will work, but who is to know?

I yield to Senator ADAMS.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I say to the Senator, he is my very good friend, and he is one of the great experts on the Senate. Many of us are concerned because we received this this afternoon. One of the reasons I left the Chamber was to go through and read it. I have never said to any Member the summit did not work. I have said nothing about them. I have said nothing about the budget process because I felt that it had changed since I was the first chairman and came into the rulemaking power.

The questions that we have, Senator PRYOR is correct, cannot be answered in a short period of time. We are going to pass this. We have been placed up against the wall as happened in 1982. And that is going to occur.

I am sorry if I in any way gave you the impression that my sense of outrage and frustration was directed toward you or any other Member of this body. There is a great change that occurs here, I say to the Senator. We now have in law, that will have to be signed by the President, a series of limitations on the power of this Congress. I have read the last part that says it is rulemaking power. But the first portions of this that state what the limits are by various categories will be in law, just as your protections are in law.

I compliment you for separating Desert Shield. I see your fine hand through this as I read it in the short period of time that I had. I compliment you on protecting us against the Egyptian forgiveness potential, because this document is a mixture of rulemaking power and of law. In the reconciliation process, it is almost impossible for some of us, even though we have worked with the budget process, to know which parts are law in the reconciliation bill and which parts are rulemaking power.

For 5 years we have taken the position, as I read this document, that the Budget Committee will have three separate categories and cannot exceed those categories without the signature of the President. It is a secondary type of veto which goes beyond the veto of individual bills. It is a veto in the aggregate. It is cleverly done, and it is very well done because it means that all revenues that come in beyond what we anticipate will flow immediately to pay on the deficit. I think it is a very clever plan.

I do not accuse you or any other Member of giving away the powers of the Senate. You made an agreement. It is an agreement which we in 1974 were trying to fight off Nixon who was impounding the money by saying the President should stay out of our business. We will send the bills over and you will sign them or veto them. I am not directing anything toward you or any other Member because I respect what you did there. I simply am stating that what this Senator sees, and it is a short view that I have had an opportunity to make, is that we now have the President in the budget process.

The second thing is we tried to fight off OMB. We did not want to accept their projections. They are now accepted in here. Those are projections which came over in the Presidential document, and I am referring to the pages up to page 18 in the budget of the President. They are always political documents. You and I have seen those. I have helped draft some of them. The economic assumptions, the economic projections are all of that nature.

I do not mean to prolong this debate. I am not even going to debate it because I do not think there is time and I do not think I could do it justice, and I would not attempt to interfere with what the people who have worked on it have done. I think we should go to a vote.

I simply wanted, as one Senator, to say what I felt in my heart about it and explain why I was going to vote the way I did. And if my tongue was sharper than it should have been, I apologize to you and the other Members for that.

But it is not something that we can study for weeks. I do not intend to. I do not intend to debate it any further. I hope we will vote right now because I think the Members have their minds made up, and I think this will go on different lines than an intellectual debate.

So I ask no further questions of Senator BYRD, but I wanted him to know what my position was, why I had taken it, and why I am concerned about the separation of powers. And I know, God willing, you would do everything in your power and have, and I respect particularly what you have done for discretionary spending and its protection. I am concerned about the fact that the levels for defense are higher than they are for domestic spending and remain higher during the whole 5-year period. But if that is the will of the body, then we should pass this—it is 20 minutes of 12—and not spend any more time discussing it.

I thank you very much for giving me the time and I thank you, Mr. President, for letting me say what I had to say.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 13 minutes 40 seconds.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if we could have order in the Senate, and we will have order before I start using my 13 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BYRD. I suppose the best way for me to proceed is to attempt to read into the RECORD a short statement here. Perhaps it will help to answer some of the questions that have been asked and some that would be asked. So let me try that.

It is important to remember that the provisions contained in this amendment to enforce the 5-year deficit reduction targets that are provided for in this budget agreement are not permanent. They do not displace the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets, which have been left in place as a further control on spending and in order to keep us aware of the size of the budget deficit.

For fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993, there will be three caps on discretionary appropriations: One cap on budget authority and outlays for defense, one cap on budget authority and outlays for international, and a cap on domestic discretionary budget authority annual outlays.

These caps are ceilings, they are not floors. There was an attempt to make them floors. Some of the earlier discussions, as I understood them, would have made them floors, also. How a number can be both a ceiling and a floor and expect to achieve budgetary cuts I cannot understand. So they are not ceilings and floors. They are ceilings, not floors. This means that Congress is not required to fund up to the levels allowed for in the cap.

To the extent that the funding levels enacted are below the caps, the savings will go toward deficit reduction. If funding for any of the three categories exceeds its cap, a sequester will occur to bring spending for that category back into conformance with the cap. The distinguished Senator from Alaska was asking questions on that point.

The device of a cap puts a real lid on the spending, and the three separate caps protect each category from being raided by another category. I do not want to see domestic discretionary raided by foreign operations. Because the Senate, in its unwisdom, may march down one day and because a certain popular amendment is offered, we fall all over ourselves to vote yes on that amendment and we relieve a particular country of its debt and it comes out of domestic discretionary spending.

So I want to protect domestic discretionary. And all Senators, especially those who are subcommittee chairmen on appropriations, ought to have some appreciation of the fact that their chairman did everything he could do to protect discretionary spending so that the various subcommittees can have higher allocations and not have those allocations wiped out because a Senator offers an amendment 1 day here and the Senate, because of special interest groups or whatever, votes for that amendment. And then we find it has wiped out our allocations.

Like the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, he needed some additional money allocated to him to carry out certain important programs which are beneficial to the country. I saw to it that he would have some additional money and I said to him in the conference, you will get them and I will prove to you that they are in there; I am going to see that you get them. And I did. He did not have to come out here on the floor and move to waive the Budget Act. He did not have to come out here and attempt to raise the allocation through a 60-vote waiver. I got it through this process that we worked out over in Andrews, and many nights over in the other side of the Capitol, and nights down in my office. Not under guard; not tipping our hat to any President, saying may I go, Mr. President? When may I return?

And I should think that we would appreciate the fact that some did their best and did some good.

I said to Mr. Sununu, we are nobody's underlings. May I say, I am not very persuaded by Senators who are always ready to criticize what somebody else does. What everybody else does is wrong. I do not apologize for my work over at the summit or here in the Capitol. There is nothing hidden. I do not have anything hidden in this. And I am as loyal to the Senate, as loyal to the flag and as loyal to the Constitution as any other Senator here in this Chamber now, any who has ever sat in this Chamber or any who will ever grace this Chamber.

I can understand the honest, sincere, conscientious questions that Senators have about this packet. I understand that. But I turn a deaf ear to the constant naysayers who can do nothing but find fault and pick and pick and pick. Nobody's plan is right but their plan; nothing will work but whatever they suggest. And I say let them vote against the packet. They probably will not vote for it anyhow.

If funding for any of the three categories exceeds its cap, a sequester will occur to bring spending for that category back into conformance with the cap.

As I said, this protects each category from being raided by another.

The amendments should preclude sequesters for fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993, so long as congressional action remains within the caps for discretionary appropriations and achieves the policy goals set forth in the agreement with respect to deficit reduction.

Unlike previous years, across-the-board reductions in discretionary operations will likely not occur in fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993 simply because of mistakes made by OMB such as economic and technical miscalculations or inaccurate forecasts. This means that Congress will be able to proceed with its budget and appropriations processes each year with greater assurance that, as long as congressional action comports with the agreement, no sequesters should occur.

In addition, executive branch agencies can better plan their annual spending programs without the uneasiness and the disruption that the threats of sequesters cause. If we live up to the deficit reductions called for in this package in entitlement savings and revenues and stay within our appropriations caps, there should be no sequester for fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993.

I do not like sequesters. There are some who would like to have them every year. I do not like them and I do not think that we have written anything in here that will assure the reelection of President Reagan, or Reagan-Bush, or whoever it may be. That was not my interest in going to the summit, leaving my wife over at the house by herself until 12, 1, 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. That is not my interest: in reelecting Mr. Bush.

Mr. Bush had the courage at least to say that he was wrong in the campaign when he had said no taxes. He saw the real world when he took the oath and he changed his mind. That takes some courage.

But I do not like sequesters and I think we have to raise our sights just a little bit above partisan politics here.

Of course I want my party to win in the congressional elections. Of course I want a Democratic President in the White House. But there is something more important than that to this Senator, that is what happens to our country. It is being torn apart and it is time we quit thinking about ourselves and think about our country and our children. Try to avoid these sequesters. Just get on with the job.

Of course the national debt is going to be higher if we accept this, but it will be $500 billion less, we hope. Of course it is going to be higher. But what would it be if we did not have this package?

This is a vital improvement to current law under which discretionary appropriations for such activities such as law enforcement, education, water projects, research and development, highways, transit, VA medical care and so forth, are required to suffer across-the-board cuts if the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit target is missed because of the faulty economic and technical estimates.

As I pointed out in my remarks to the Senate last evening, domestic discretionary spending has not contributed to the increased deficit. In fact these programs have been cut, as I pointed out, by a cumulative total of $326 billion, under baseline, in the past 10 years. This change eliminates—the change we are talking about now—eliminates mindless cuts to domestic programs that help to educate our children and protect our citizens, or to defense programs at a time when we may be at war in the Middle East, so long as we live up to the requirements of this agreement.

The amendment will place the burden of meeting the deficit reductions called for in the agreement upon all the committees of jurisdiction, not just upon the Appropriations Committee. Upon all committees of jurisdiction.

Unlike existing law, those committees that violate this agreement will be forced to pay a penalty for their shortfall. That is all committees, not just the Appropriations Committee. All committees will have a stake in making this agreement work.

Now, what do we want to do? Do we want to enter into an agreement today and then break it tomorrow? An agreement is an agreement. A handshake is a handshake, back where I live. And if we make an agreement I expect to keep my part and I expect the other fellow to keep his. That just did not become my credo yesterday.

In addition, the agreement will allow a mechanism for both the President and Congress to provide funding for unforeseen emergencies — earthquakes, hurricanes and so forth— without having such costs trigger a sequester. Last year we had two sets of disasters, hurricane Hugo and the California earthquake.

OMB ruled that a portion of the appropriations that were made for these disasters was discretionary. For example, the $1 billion appropriation that was made to repair the bridges and highways that were destroyed in the earthquake was treated as discretionary spending. This $1 billion caused the Appropriations Committee to exceed its allocation, but we escaped a sequester because this was a disaster that occurred after the October 15 sequester date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator his time has expired.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for such time as I may need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHAFEE. Well, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. Do not worry, this Senator will end it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I thank you for your nice card that I received today. [Laughter.]

Your very nice card about the item that I helped you with in the Interior appropriations bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAFEE. I had that in mind as I rose to my feet. [Laughter.]

The reason I rose was I thought I wanted to assist you in any way I could in an extension of the time you wanted. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRD. I say to the Senator, wait until next year and he will write me a bigger card. I thank the Senator.

Under this agreement, disasters will be treated as mandatory spending and will not cause a sequester, no matter when they occur. And that might occur in my State, it may occur in your State or any State.

It is sound policy; it is good common sense. As I have already indicated, the administration sought to have Desert Shield funded in the regular fiscal year 1991 Defense appropriations bill. I opposed that approach because it would have hidden the costs of Desert Shield in the DOD baseline which would have meant from then on Defense would have had a blank check, a blank check, and those Senators who are so concerned about how much Defense is spending, and how we should cut Defense might take careful note of that. Desert Shield will not become a part of the baseline which would go on and on, as inflation goes up. This would have made it very difficult to keep a separate accounting of Desert Shield appropriations. Under this agreement, Desert Shield spending will be treated as a separate supplemental appropriations. This will enable Congress to carefully scrutinize the administration's request for Desert Shield appropriations and will prevent DOD from getting a blank check by assuring necessary funds will be made available.

This agreement also strongly encourages the administration to secure commitments from our allies to pay their fair share of Desert Shield costs. I understand Saudi Arabia, for example, has increased oil profits from this crisis to the tune of $10 billion since August 2 because of the rise in oil prices. Perhaps it is more than $10 billion.

Overall, I believe this enforcement package, not budget reform process, this enforcement package is necessary. I think it is fair to us. If I did not think so, I would not sign on.

At the same time, I think the administration is committed also. I cannot have it all my way, nor do I expect the administration to have it all their way. It does not do injustice to the delicate balance of power between the executive and legislative branches, but it does provide the teeth to keep us faithful to this bipartisan agreement.

Mr. President, I thank the Members of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Do I understand that there is a fence for a period of 3 years between that part of 050 which goes to energy, water, discretionary non-Defense and Defense?

Mr. BYRD. There is a fence for Defense, for international and for domestic discretionary.

Mr. JOHNSTON. And that lasts for 3 years?

Mr. BYRD. 1991 and 1992 and 1993.

Mr. JOHNSTON. After that, the targets under this are for 5 years, but that fence lasts 3 years.

Mr. BYRD. Only for 3 years. After that, everything is fungible.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The assumptions, the economic assumptions, I understand are locked into these targets so that if the economic assumptions at least for the next fiscal year should change, that they do not affect the targets? Will the Senator explain that mechanism?

Mr. BYRD. The easy answer is, that is correct. And that did not come easy, may I say.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Do those assumptions last beyond the 1 year? Are they locked in?

Mr. BYRD. For the 3 years, 1991, 1992 and 1993, appropriations will be held harmless for economic and technical miscalculations.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is for succeeding years, next fiscal year those assumptions are already made and they are only made for 1 year by this document; is that correct?

Mr. SASSER. I say to the chairman, might I amplify in response to the Senator's questions? We have to change our mindset a little bit, I will say to the Senator. The economic assumptions themselves become irrelevant for the 3 years.

What the Senate and the Congress has bound itself to do with the administration is to reduce the deficit by a set amount for 3 years. Therefore, thanks largely to Senator BYRD's work, the economic and technical assumptions become almost irrelevant. In other words, we are safeguarded from those in the sense that if the economy should deteriorate or if the administration should have faulty economic or technical assumptions, then the appropriated accounts would not have to pay the penalty. We are simply committed to a set amount of deficit reduction for 3 years.

Mr. JOHNSTON. And, in effect, we would really not need a budget resolution for a period of 3 years; in fact, we will have that for 3 years.

Mr. BYRD. We should have the budget resolution as well. This does not eliminate the requirement for a budget resolution.

Mr. JOHNSTON. But we will be given the operative numbers for that budget resolution.

Mr. BYRD. We know what the allocations will be now under the budget resolution.

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator will allow me to amplify more on that. We will need a budget resolution because the agreement itself provides for new programs. In other words, we may institute a new entitlement program, but we must pay as we go. If we institute a new entitlement program in the budget resolution then the program will also have to be paid for and the budget resolution would be a vehicle for providing either for a new mandatory program which would have to pay for itself either by increased revenues or by cutting spending in other entitlement programs or for a new domestic program which would be paid for either by raising funds through the budget resolution by directing the Finance Committee to do that or by cutting another program elsewhere.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If we adopt some form of a budget package here that is assumed to raise a certain amount of money over a period of, or reduce spending by a certain amount of money over a period of years, is that the kind of assumption that is then locked in for 3 years, or do we come back and find out exactly how much money you did raise under your taxes and have to readjust from year to year?

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BYRD. Please.

Mr. SASSER. The enactment of the reconciliation bill itself locks in the deficit reduction amounts that we are committed to for the 3-year period.

Mr. SASSER. For that reason, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets for those 3 years will become simply advisory because we meet our commitment, if we reduce the deficit the first year by $40 billion figure and the corresponding figure for the second year and the corresponding figure for the third year.

Mr. JOHNSTON. You do not come in and reestimate—if we adopt this tax package or a tax package which is deemed today to satisfy those requirements of the 3 years, then you do not check again next year to find out that a deteriorated economy had actually resulted and less taxes had been collected.

Mr. SASSER. That is correct. Thanks again to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, we are held harmless for technical mis-estimates and economics. For example, if there is a faulty estimate of the amount of revenue that would be produced or if there is a deterioration in the economy which would produce a revenue loss, then the appropriated accounts would not be held liable by that by way of sequester as long as they met the deficit reduction amounts that they had agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My final question is: What this package will give us is, first of all, budget peace and, second, budget certainty, so that we will not have to fight these battles and be here on October 1 wondering whether we are going to meet the new fiscal year; we will have all that information early enough so that we will be able to plan with certainty, will not have to come back and redo what we did the previous year but will have budget peace, is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. I hope that will be the result. Nobody can foresee what is going to happen in the Middle East. Nobody can see what is going to happen with respect to recession or depression. But as best we can we have protected the legislative process, and we have made it possible for the Appropriations Committees to act with some certainty and to be able to proceed with some certainty so that we can deal with the infrastructure and the investment deficit to which I attempted to address my remarks last evening.

There will still be sequesters if certain things happen. There can still be a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequester if we reach the targets and there can be the sequesters that may occur in the appropriations process. If we do not live up to our part of the agreement and we exceed our allocations in domestic discretionary, whatever, then there will be a sequester that will be across the board for discretionary spending. I hope that we can discipline ourselves. We always like to vote for these measures that increase spending. At the same time we want to reduce the deficit.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS. I am sorry to interrupt, but that is precisely the question I was going to get to with the first amendment I was going to offer. It is getting very late. I am not going to do that.

I would like to ask this question. The Senator said now several times if we live up to the deadlines in this proposal, sequester would not take place. I recall the Senator from Texas made that same comment when we supported Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and I was going to call attention to the two schedules that start on page 73 of the amendment that deal with specific deadlines for the Congressional Budget Office, the Senate Budget Committee, the concurrent resolution deadline, annual appropriations bills to commence by May 15, to be finished by September 30.

The Senator from West Virginia is my great friend. I am sure we all know that, and I am delighted to work with him on this process. As I understand it, there is no discipline implied in the whole process yet for the Congress as a whole to meet those deadlines, but there is a severe worry and fear in this Senator's mind that we are going to live through 5 more years of threatened sequesters on the appropriations process because other committees have not in fact done what they are supposed to do.

Why not build into this proposal now some sort of a mechanism to assure that the Budget Committee will report its concurrent resolution on April 1, that we will start appropriations bills through the House on April 15? We waited until after August for our appropriations bills this year and every year but once since Gramm-Rudman-Hollings passed we have not had the appropriations bills to act on before the summer recess.

Now, my good friend has been inconvenienced by that and the whole Senate has. Why can we not have some mechanism built into the system for discipline on the part of the rest of the Congress in dealing with these deadlines?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is discipline here. The Senator is pointing to the fact that there are times when we cannot get budget resolutions out and enacted and agreed to by the other body so that the appropriations process can begin in the Senate. The House can proceed under its rule but the Senate cannot.

Mr. President, if I may have the attention of distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, there is no way we can assure that he can get a resolution out of his committee. He has a difficult time in his committee. Give him four or five or six additional members over there who will support him and he will get that resolution out.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRD. Wait. Let me finish. We do have discipline here. We are providing that within the appropriations process if the domestic discretionary exceeds its allocation, if defense exceeds its allocations, if foreign operations exceeds its allocation, and as a result the overall allocations for domestic discretionary, let us say, are above the allocations, then there will be a sequester, there will be a sequester of domestic discretionary, and it will go entirely across the board, across every one of the 10 appropriations subcommittees with jurisdiction over domestic discretionary programs. That should help us to discipline ourselves.

When I come out here and offer an amendment, it may be good for my subcommittee but every other subcommittee chairman should view that amendment with some jaundice in his eye saying, well, if that results in a sequester down the road, if that results in raising the allocation, domestic discretionary, Senator BYRD's subcommittee is not the only one that is going to have to pay for it. My subcommittee is going to have to pay an equal percentage. So there is that self-discipline built into this process. The same would be true with regard to defense and government ops.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's comment. I think we have come through a process now, particularly this year, where to some people sequester was a crutch. They voted for things that they knew we could not afford, knowing full well that sequester would come along and take them away. As I look at the developments in the world with the European Community coming along, the great changes in Europe, the whole concept of our domestic finance problems, one of the great fears this Senator has is that revenues will not be there that are in these projections. If they are not there, it is my understanding sequester is going to become a reality no matter whether we do our job or not. Am I wrong?

Mr. BYRD. Two points. If the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings figure is exceeded, there will be a sequester, just as we have now—50 percent discretionary, 50 percent defense.

Mr. STEVENS. What if revenues are not up?

Mr. BYRD. Then the Appropriations Committee will be held harmless. There are categorical sequesters here: one on entitlements, and one on discretionary spending. So that discretionary spending does not have to take all of the brunt anymore. Last year the appropriations took the brunt for $4 billion because certain other committees did not meet their requirements under reconciliation.

They did not meet; they did not fulfill their instructions. So we took it. The majority leader told us in his office. And Senator SASSER was there. The chairman of House Ways and Means was there, Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. BENTSEN and others were there. The majority leader says we have this problem. We are $4 billion short. I can tell you the exact words I said to the majority leader. It did not take me 30 seconds to do it. I have seen a lot of Senators around here hem and haw, hem and haw, when they are asked to bleed a little bit. I said to the majority leader, I do not like it, but if that is what it takes, we will absorb it; $4 billion.

Do you think I had forgotten that when I went to the summit? No. I said if other committees don't meet their targets the revenue raising falls down, let those committees take their cut. I believe Senator BENTSEN supports that 100 percent. If it is entitlements, then they are entitlements. Do not put it back on our domestic discretionary spending. So there will be that categorical sequester, may I say to my friend.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, speaking to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, let me say I do not see anything in here that takes care of the problem that I am trying to address; that is, if revenues are not raised, according to the projections, and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget makes the finding on November 15 that there is a deficit because of the failure of the systems to produce the kind of revenue that was anticipated, is not there going to be a sequester because of that failure of revenues, and will that not fall on both entitlements and domestic spending—and defense?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the distinguished chairman yield, and I will try to respond?

One of the big changes that was effected in this agreement—and I want to say to the Senator from West Virginia, all of us kind of lost in our explanations the forest from the trees. The Senator from West Virginia brought it back when he said we are trying to enforce an agreement.

This is a 5-year effort. That is what we agreed to. We did two things: first, with reference to Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets, that is what the Senator from Alaska is worried about.

Mr. STEVENS. No. This Senator is worried about the failures of revenues in the future, and I do not see anything here that takes care of it, I tell the Senator frankly.

Mr. DOMENICI. If the Senator will just let me finish, the reason he is worried about revenues not reaching where they ought to be is because they create a deficit. You do not meet the target until you are going to have a Gramm-Rudman sequester. That is why he is worried about it.

Because the distinguished Senator from West Virginia insisted, and he won, the first 3 years of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and the sequester under this agreement is changed significantly, and perhaps I could explain how it has changed.

First, the target is fixed but it is altered annually based upon real economics and technical adjustments. One of those real economic aspects is the revenues. The reason revenues are down is because we are using old economics and we have a fixed target.

Remember the fixed target only had a $10 billion float. The $10 billion float was to take care of economic errors, technical errors, and overages. There is no float left because you do not need it because every year for the first 3 years of the agreement the target is fixed. Because economics and technicals are out of our control and are readjusted each year based on economics, the chances of having a sequester if we do our job are very minimal.

The savings that are permanent all occur when we pass this reconciliation bill tonight, and when we live up to the targets under appropriations.

So what could go wrong would be economics that might be off, or technical adjustments, and in the first 3 years we protected against it. I think that is a fair statement. Those who were there—Senator GRAMM, is that a fair statement?

I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, some of the questions that are being asked are under the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, if I can address a question to the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia retains the floor.

Mr. BYRD. I do not intend to hold the floor longer. I want Senators to have an adequate opportunity to ask questions. I think they are entitled to that. I do not want to impose on the Senate if it seems that I am doing that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator that as soon as he gives up the floor all time has expired.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, could I address a question to the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee?

As I understand the provisions that we have in here, additional technical revisions on page 11 essentially provide that the Director of OMB has the authority to allow certain increased funding in a limited number of cases without that increased funding counting against the deficit, counting as increasing the deficit.

The specifics that I wanted to ask about is with regard to the item that is at the bottom of page 12 where we essentially provide that the Director of OMB can make reestimates to cover any amount appropriated in 1990 or 1991 calendar years to forgive debts of Egypt or Poland. In the case of Egypt it is the foreign military sales indebtedness. I think I understand that. That would then not be counted against the deficit.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct. That is to hold us harmless in appropriations in case it is enacted.

Mr. BINGAMAN. If there were any other forgiveness of debt for any other country, Israel, Turkey, any country, that would then count against the deficit and would require a reduction in expenditures in the foreign account or in the domestic account?

Mr. BYRD. Domestic discretionary would be held harmless. That would come out of international discretionary, if spending in that category were in excess of the international cap.

Mr. BINGAMAN. That would come out of foreign ops if we forgave the debt for any country except Egypt and Poland?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the chairman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. LEVIN. I think the Senator from West Virginia has pointed out eloquently in recent days that domestic discretionary spending has gone down in real terms over the last decade. I think nobody in this body has done more to try to protect domestic discretionary spending than my friend from West Virginia. I commend him on it.

One of the things that troubles me about this is that if next year or the year after, despite the herculean efforts of the chairman—I think successful efforts—of the Appropriations Committee to have a higher level of domestic discretionary spending, if in the next Congress we decide, those of us that are here to transfer money, for instance, from defense, at the level indicated here, to domestic discretionary or vice versa, that we could not do so.

Mr. BYRD. I would oppose that.

Mr. LEVIN. Pardon?

Mr. BYRD. I would oppose that.

Mr. LEVIN. My question is, Am I correct in saying that if next year or the year after, that instead of wanting a budget authority of $291 billion for defense and $191 billion for domestic discretionary, we wanted to move $5 billion from defense to domestic discretionary, or vice versa, that we could not do so under this?

Mr. BYRD. You could do so. A point of order could be raised, and if the Senate were able to get the 60 votes to waive the point of order, it could be done.

Mr. LEVIN. Am I correct, though, if done even with 60 votes, it would put the account above the cap and therefore require a sequester?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEVIN. That seems to me to be tying our hands in advance to numbers, which again let me commend the chairman of the Appropriations Committee because I know how hard he worked to get a reasonable number for the discretionary domestic accounts. So I am not in any way being critical of the effort; quite the opposite.

But we still may want to transfer more into our domestic programs from defense in 1992 or 1993, or vice versa. We always have to allow for that possibility, and we cannot do so. Our priorities are backed into for 3 years by this, and I must say in frankness—and we talked about this—that I am very troubled by that effort.

Mr. BYRD. We cannot have it both ways. We cannot have it both ways. We cannot protect the discretionary and build a fence and say no trespassing, and at the same time, if we are going to have an agreement and the administration is part of the agreement, and I am part of it and the other Senators who participated, we cannot have it both ways.

I wanted to protect domestic discretionary from the predatory raids that are being made on domestic discretionary. The only way that we can protect domestic discretionary is to at the same time have some fences that will protect the other two categories.

Mr. LEVIN. This Senator will agree we cannot have it both ways. My problem is we should have it neither way. We should not attempt in this Congress to say for 1991 and 1992 what those numbers are, and there cannot be a transfer from any of those three accounts to any of the other three.

Mr. BYRD. If I could by a wave of my hand produce the solutions absolutely perfect to me, I would have done it.

Mr. LEVIN. I think the Senator did it in years 4 and 5, if I may so, if you do have that.

Mr. BYRD. That is fungible; that is true. Let us suppose, when it is fungible, suppose a Senator offers an amendment to forgive the debts in 1994 or 1995, let us say, of Turkey or Israel. If it is fungible, does the Senator know what category is going to pay part of the price for that? Ordinarily, if it is fungible, a portion will come out of domestic discretionary.

Mr. LEVIN. It is a matter of present with me; whatever the transfer is in years 4 or 5, we permit it. But in years 1, 2, and 3, we do not. I do not think we can appropriately prohibit the future Congress from transferring money from one priority of this Nation to another.

Mr. BYRD. We cannot prohibit a future Congress from coming in and changing this.

Mr. LEVIN. No. They can change the law if in fact they can get the votes to do so.

Mr. BYRD. That is right.

Mr. LEVIN. Which in the Senate requires 60 votes.

Mr. BYRD. We do not have to wait to future Congress. If this Congress were not able to end, this Congress even itself could break it. I would oppose that. There is an agreement.

As to the fungibility of the last 2 years, may I say to the distinguished Senator, the Senator can thank summiteers for making that fungible. The administration wanted it solid, across the board, for 5 years. But we have made it fungible for the third, fourth, and fifth.

But I will say to the distinguished Senator, I think that by protecting discretionary, domestic discretionary, as we are doing, we are striking a blow for liberty for the United States of America and its infastructure, physical and human.

The administration wanted to freeze domestic discretionary spending for a year. That would have put us $39 billion below the baseline. He backed off a little bit and said: How about 6 months? That would have been $19 billion below baseline.

Where we are now, we are above baseline. We can reverse the trends. I hope we can reverse this trend in cutting away at the infrastructure of this country. But in order to do that, when you are dealing with another party, I cannot have it all my way. I would like to have had it differently, but I think I got a little better than 50 percent of the bargain, and otherwise we would not have had any bargain.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator, and I appreciate his concern. I believe if he had been the fly on the wall watching that summit, he would be there tonight saying: Well, I think it is a pretty good package.

It is the best that we could expect under the circumstances. You cannot forget that we are dealing with a situation in this country here where everybody is going to have to hurt a little bit. It cannot be painless.

Mr. SIMON. If the chairman of the Appropriations Committee will yield, just to respond briefly to my friend from Michigan, I would have an amendment very shortly, I hope, that would get rid of the 60-vote fence that is there. That, I think, would make it easier to make that transition.

Mr. LEVIN. If the Senator will yield, and I know he does not have the floor.

Mr. SIMON. I do not have the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. If my friend from West Virginia will yield, I do not believe an amendment that simply eliminates the 60-vote requirement will cure the problem.

Mr. SIMON. It does not cure it, but it helps.

Mr. LEVIN. Not if not allowed to transfer the money from one account to another. For if in the process there, you put more money in the account that is capped, it leads to automatic sequester. Elimination of the 60-vote requirement does not cure that problem.

Mr. SIMON. We will get into it shortly.

Mr. BYRD. I know the distinguished Senator from South Carolina wishes to make a point of order. I will sit down shortly. Does the Senator from Florida have a question?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am concerned about the question of the deficit as we have defined it during Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, which is the difference between spending and revenue.

Under the current law, we are supposed to be at a deficit for fiscal year 1991 for $64 billion. Under this bill, the deficit for 1991 will be $242 billion.

My question is, What happens if we do not meet the $242 billion figure? We know what happens under the current law, because that is why we had a weekend sequester a couple weeks ago, and we are faced with the prospect of substantial reductions in Government spending to come into compliance or near compliance with the $65 billion figure.

What happens if we end up with a substantially greater deficit than $242 billion? What is the discipline that will go into effect?

Mr. BYRD. If it is beyond the control of Congress that that is breached, it will not be a sequester.

Mr. GRAHAM. So if, for instance, the recession that many people think we are in or heading toward were to result in——

Mr. BYRD. Gramm-Rudman allows an exemption, if there are two successive quarters.

Mr. GRAHAM. If serious decline in revenues or if other external events cause that deficit to be greater than $242 billion, there is no consequence in terms of mandatory restrictions; is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. It depends on what causes the severe decline in the revenue. If it is caused by a number of things beyond the control of the Congress, we would not be held responsible. If it is the fault of Congress, then there would be sequester.

Mr. GRAHAM. I guess my concern is, to put this in a sense of a family, if you had a family, and let us say the main source of income was real estate commissions. They are living on a level of $50,000 a year that was their spending ceiling because that is what they had been taking in.

Now it gets to a tough year in the real estate business. Instead of having commissions of $50,000, you only have commissions of $35,000. The family would have to make some adjustments to bring its spending from its traditional levels down to what would accommodate this new reality of family income.

If we were that family and had a sudden differential or spread between our traditional spending levels—what we hoped and expected and what the new reality of our income is—what are we going to do?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I say to the Senator we cannot operate like a family, No. 1. No. 2, this is an agreement whereby, if we live up to our part of what is expected, we hope to be able to cut the deficit by $40 billion this year and $500 billion over the period of 5 years. Now that is about the best we could do. Let me respond, then I am going to sit down. That is about the best we can do. That was discussed at the beginning of the summit. And if anybody wanted to cut it $1 trillion, it was felt that would push this country off the precipice into a recession or even a depression.

So that was the figure that was decided upon as being prudent and realistic and efficacious. And that is what we are striving to do here. That is a pretty good-sized step. And if we live up to our part of the agreement, we hope to achieve it and, if something happens beyond our control, then we will be held harmless on appropriations.

Mr. GRAHAM. It seems to me that puts a tremendous amount of obligation on us to have confidence that the economic assumptions upon which we are entering this are realistic to conservative. That is, if we start with economic assumptions that are unlikely to be realized, then we have a suspicion we are going into this transaction but the results are not going to be as they appear on page 3.

What are the economic assumptions upon which the maximum deficit reductions for the 3 years that we are about to enter are predicated?

Mr. BYRD. That falls a little out of my purview.

Mr. SASSER. As I indicated earlier, I think, in response to a question of the Senator from Louisiana, for the first 3 years, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets are merely advisory. We are not seeking to hit those targets at all. All we are seeking to do and all we pledge to do under this agreement is simply to reduce the deficit by a set amount over 3 years.

If the economy declines precipitiously or falls out from under us, we are still just obligated to reduce the deficit by those set amounts over 3 years. Clearly, if there is a severe economic downturn, then all bets are off and there has to be some sort of change in policy emanating from the executive branch in conjunction with the legislative branch.

Mr. GRAHAM. Let me ask the question a little different way. Are the economic assumptions upon which these maximum deficit targets, are they the same economic assumptions that OMB utilized in its——

Mr. SASSER. If I could interrupt the Senator, I think I could shorten it. The economic assumptions on which these deficit numbers are grounded in this budget agreement are based on the latest CBO economic assumptions. And that would be as late as June. We have not received any new CBO economic assumptions since then, although we expect some in the not too distant future. These deficit numbers are not based on the OMB economic assumptions that some were criticizing a few weeks ago.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does the staff in the committee have a set of those CBO economic assumptions?

Mr. SASSER. I am sure they could be furnished to the Senator; yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank all Senators for their attention. I will shortly yield. I thank those who asked questions. I thank the distinguished majority leader and Republican leader. I thank all other Senators who have been very patient.

I feel we have gone some distance in attempting to allay the concerns of the Senators. I think Senators who have listened to this debate, although I would not give it much of anything like 75 percent or above a grade C in my responses, at least I think they feel that I share their frustrations and their concerns, and perhaps they may be a little bit overly excited. All this is not going to Hades in a handbasket if I can help it.

What we have done, I think we have protected the legislative branch, protected the appropriations process. There has not been any shift of power to the executive branch from the legislative here. We simply have an agreement and we are attempting to enforce it. That requires some discipline on our part.

In the final analysis, we hope that this will redound to the good interests of the American people. There will not be an opportunity to debate the point of order. There will not be an opportunity to debate the waiver of the point of order.

I would like, while I retain the floor, to yield to the majority leader if he has something to say.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished President pro tempore and chairman of the Appropriations Committee for what I think has been a most informative discussion here this evening. I, who sat through much of the budget summit process, learned a great deal from it and I know that all the other Senators did. I also thank him for the tremendous effort he put into the preparation of this agreement, as he puts it very succinctly, a way to enforce an agreement.

It is my hope, Mr. President, that we can now bring this to a conclusion. I hope that every Senator feels he or she has had ample opportunity to express his or her views, ask questions, and understand it. There comes a time when we simply have to take action and complete that action. I hope we can do that shortly, I say to the chairman. I hope all Members of the Senate are prepared to vote. I know the distinguished Senator from North Carolina is prepared to make a point of order, and I understand the chairman will move to waive that point of order.

I urge my colleagues to join us in the motion to waive the point of order. This is an essential part of this agreement. This is a deficit reduction package which includes reduction over a 5-year period, and this is the means by which we attempt to ensure that the reduction will occur over a 5-year period. Obviously, no one of us can fully foresee with great precision what is going to occur next year, let alone 5 years from now. This is the best effort, by very experienced and knowledgeable persons, to accomplish that objective led specifically by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and others.

I hope we can now bring it to a conclusion, and I hope our colleagues will join us in waiving the point of order so that we can proceed to approve this, approve the deficit reduction package, and get moving toward completion of this effort.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have not yielded the floor yet. I simply want to thank the majority leader. I want to express to my colleagues my deep concern if this point of order should not be waived. I think this is a critical decision, the waiving of this point of order. And I hope we will vote to waive.

I thank all Senators. I thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina for his patience.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I raise the point of order, Mr. President, under section 305(b), the point of order of germaneness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 I move to waive section 305(b) of the Budget Act for consideration of this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMON. Parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SIMON. Yes, I have been waiting all evening to have a very brief amendment and a very brief explanation.

At what point? Do we vote first on the motion and then the amendments are in order? Is that the procedure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the motion to waive prevails, the amendment will remain in order and subject to amendment.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 75, nays 25, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote there are 75 yeas and 25 nays. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn, having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, tonight I reluctantly voted against the leadership amendment. I say reluctantly, because I believe that those who put this package together did so in good faith. I believe that they had the best interests of the Nation and of the Senate in mind. And I honestly appreciate their efforts.

However, as I understand it, this amendment fundamentally changes how the Senate goes about budgeting for the operations of the Federal Government. Where in years past, we tried—often without result—to match our expenditures with our receipts, now we will focus on preset spending ceilings. These ceilings are written into law. They won't change with economic circumstances, with the unforeseen needs of the Government, or with the changing priorities of this body.

I am afraid that this new way of budgeting separates our spending decisions from our bottom line. And in my opinion, this represents policy both irrational and dangerous.

No business or no family could run its operations on the basic principles we adopted tonight. Firms, banks, multinational corporations, even other countries, must look both to how much money they have coming and how much money they have going out. In the long run, the two sides of this equation have to match up. Only the United States—because it is large and powerful and vital to the world economy—has been able to get away with piling up debt year after year after year. And even the United States, with all its power and importance and vitality, has started to reach the limits of how much it can borrow.

Yet, by adopting the leadershp amendment, we have denied that we are coming to the dangerous end of our enormous line of credit. This amendment says that it is the budget policy of the United States to ignore what we add to the debt each year as long as we hit certain preset spending targets. Budget policy will no longer be fiscal policy—it will no longer be an overall decision about how much the U.S. Government should borrow from the private sector. Budget policy will be appropriations policy: how can we keep within the spending caps we've set—no matter how unrealistic, unresponsive, or irresponsible they are.

And I am concerned, Mr. President, that this amendment separates, in the minds of the American people and of the Congress, Federal spending from Federal receipts. That is exactly what President Reagan did when he told the American people that they could have lower taxes and higher defense spending. He told the American people that they didn't have to pay for the benefits they received. He separated taxes and spending.

And look where that policy has brought us. We face, as David Stockman faced 10 years ago, $200 billion deficits as far as the eye can see. We face a national debt that will grow to $6 billion in the 5 years that this deficit reduction agreement covers. And, we face many more years of tough budget choices.

This is not the time to budget by separating spending from revenues. We cannot stop focusing on the bottom line—even if it will make it easier to enforce this important deficit reduction agreement. The bottom line is our primary responsibility, and because the leadership amendment ignores that, I could not support it.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, we are nearing the end of this long road. There is one amendment that has been cleared on both sides which the managers will accept. Senator SIMON from Illinois wishes 3 minutes to explain the amendment and then I believe we are ready to go to final passage.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 3047

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on behalf of Senator BRADLEY and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SIMON], for himself and Mr. BRADLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 3047.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 9, beginning on line 18, strike all through line 12 on page 11.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of my colleagues, I have serious concerns about what we are doing. This amendment that I understand is going to be accepted modifies those concerns a little. Under the present procedure, it takes 60 votes to transfer between the three categories. I think that is a mistake. I think 51 Members of this body ought to be able to do that. I am concerned because of the numbers that we write in here. For the first time we are saying, for example, in Defense, function 050, budget authority for the fiscal year 1993 is going to be $292 billion, for fiscal year—the outlays are going to be $292 billion. I do not think anyone here has the foggiest idea what our needs are going to be.

After World War II, we reduced defense spending 90 percent in 3 years. We now have studies that show that that is one of the main reasons our economy took off.

I am not suggesting that we are living in a world where we can do that, but maybe former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara was right when he suggested we could go down 10 percent a year and significantly improve the economy of our country. I think the great threat to us today is what is happening to our economy. It is not the Soviet threat. And yet these numbers do not reflect that.

Anyway, the amendment that Senator BRADLEY and I are offering——

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Order, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMON. I appreciate the Senator in the bow tie helping me out.

What this amendment permits is a little greater flexibility, and I appreciate the consideration of the managers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, does the Senator yield back the time?

Mr. SASSER. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment (No. 3047) was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, we have yielded back all time, so I urge adoption of the leadership amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3046) was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SUPERFUND

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Superfund, Ocean and Water Protection, the effective functioning of the Superfund Program is always a concern to me. Since this program was renewed in 1986, our subcommittee has performed a strong oversight role. In 1989, I issued a comprehensive report, Cleaning up the Nation's Cleanup Program, on ways to improve the Superfund Program based on several years of subcommittee hearings and investigations.

Mr. President, the first 5 years of the Superfund Program were a profound disappointment. While I still have concerns with EPA's implementation of the program, EPA has done a better job since the reauthorization. Administrator Reilly, in response to concerns I raised about the program, undertook a 90-day review of the program shortly after he assumed his position in 1989. This review resulted in a plan for improving the program, which included a number recommendations from my report on Superfund. While I have not agreed with Administrator Reilly in every measure, to say the least, he has worked to improve the program. In turn, I have worked hard as a member of the Appropriations Committee to secure adequate funding for Superfund and as Superfund Subcommittee chairman to recommend ways to improve the program's implementation.

Mr. President, I was deeply involved in the last Superfund reauthorization process. I remember vividly the damage caused to the program by the disruption in funding that occurred. Indeed, I was the author of several short-term interim funding measures to keep things going. While we did keep a skeletal program going, we lost valuable personnel, cleanups were delayed, contracts were threatened, and it was unclear that the program would survive.

Therefore, Mr. President, when the budget summit developed the concept of a 5-year budget and deficit reduction program, it seemed to me that it made sense, to avoid disruption in the Superfund Program, to include a Superfund tax and authorization extension in the budget package so that Superfund did not fall victim to future budget fights. The budget package is a 5-year package. I sought a 5-year extension on the Superfund tax and spending authorization. To this end, after consultation and discussion with EPA, the environmental community, industry representatives, and my colleagues, I initiated letters to the chairman and ranking minority member of the Senate Finance Committee asking them to consider a 5-year funding extension as part of the reconciliation process. In this I was joined by Senators BURDICK, CHAFEE, and DURENBERGER. I also introduced legislation to accomplish this goal, which Senators BURDICK, CHAFEE, and DURENBERGER joined in cosponsoring. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letters and text of the bill, S. 3182, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, DC, October 8, 1990.

Hon. LLOYD BENTSEN,
Chairman, Committee on Finance,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As the Finance Committee considers its reconciliation measure, we would urge you to include the necessary provision to extend the current Superfund tax and general revenue structure for an additional five years from its current expiration date of December 31, 1991.

We believe such an extension is essential to avoid a repetition of the funding disruptions that occurred during the last reauthorization of Superfund. While we believe the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) must continue the effort to make vigorous improvements in the operation of the program, we also believe that the program is currently performing at a level that is significantly improved from its early years. In addition, the EPA's publicly acknowledged commitments through the Administrator's Superfund Management Review issued last year, suggest an improved effort at achieving greater qualitative and quantitative results from the program.

As the Superfund Reauthorization process begins, we believe an extension of the current funding structure coupled with continuing Congressional oversight and EPA commitment to a well-managed program can provide steady progress in the program during the period required to consider fully any necessary legislative improvement. Providing for the extension at this time would avoid the possible slow-down in the program beginning in FY 91 that might be made necessary, according to EPA staff, by a lack of certainty of funding sources for the years following.

We appreciate your consideration of our request.

Sincerely,

DAVE DURENBERGER,
Ranking Minority Member, Subcommittee on Superfund, Ocean, and Water Protections.
JOHN H. CHAFEE,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on Environment and Public Works.
FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,

Chairman, Subcommittee on Superfund, Ocean, and Water Protection.

QUENTIN N. BURDICK,
Chairman, Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Hon. BOB PACKWOOD,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on Finance, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PACKWOOD: As the Finance Committee considers its reconciliation measure, we would urge you to include the necessary provision to extend the current Superfund tax and general revenue structure for an additional five years from its current expiration date of December 31, 1991.

We appreciate your consideration of our request.

S. 3182

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Section 111 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9611) is amended as follows:

(1) subsection (a) is amended by inserting immediately after "Reauthorization Act of 1986," the following: "and $8,500,000,000 for the period commencing October 17, 1991, and ending September 30, 1996,";

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I intend to continue the effort to push EPA to improve its implementation of the current law, while at the same time beginning in the next Congress to consider ways to improve the law. Since the goal of both oversight and reauthorization is to improve the operation of the Superfund Program, it simply does not make sense to allow the program's funds to run out during such efforts.

Mr. President, the Finance Committee was unable to include a Superfund extension in their reconciliation bill. Mr. President, I look forward to working with the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee to extend funding for the Superfund Program next year, as we have already discussed several times. I appreciate the Senator's interest in this regard and his assurances that he is also interested in avoiding disruptions in the Superfund Program and moving early next year to consider such legislation.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I appreciate the leadership of the Senator from New Jersey, the chairman of the Superfund Subcommittee, in working for the effective operation of the Superfund Program. As the former ranking minority member of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, I worked with the Senator from New Jersey on the Superfund reauthorization of 1986, and I share his concern and commitment. I strongly support the continued funding of the Superfund Program, and I am committed to moving legislation early next year that will prevent any interruption in the Superfund Program.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas for his concern and commitment to early action of the Superfund funding question. It is essential that Congress take these steps. To prevent disruption in the program while Congress considers the extension next year, as a member of the Senate Subcommittee on VA, HUD, and independent agencies, I have been working to provide as much funding as possible under the tough constraints of the budget for the Superfund Program. Despite some tough constraints, and a woefully inadequate proposed EPA budget from the President, we were able to provide about $1.61 billion for Superfund for Fiscal Year 1991, which would be the largest appropriation for the program to date. In addition, in an effort to lessen any disruptive effects that might occur as we come closer to the expiration of the taxing authority, I authored a provision in the Senate appropriations bill, which was adopted in conference, that will use all the remaining authorized general revenues, about $861 million, for the Fiscal Year 1991 Superfund appropriation. By using such general revenues in Fiscal Year 1991, I was able to provide what is, in effect, a cushion for Fiscal Year 1992, against the effects of the tax expiring. This appropriations provision will free up about $861 million in tax revenues received through December 31, 1991 for use in Fiscal Year 1992. While this is not a sufficient amount fully to fund the program, it should help mitigate potential disruption as Congress considers the tax extension.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss our attempt to reduce the deficit.

In recent weeks we have seen extraordinary forces at work in our republic. Months of negotiations conducted between congressional leaders and representatives of the White House were concluded with a summit agreement as the fiscal year ended.

That summit agreement would have reduced the deficit but its savings in mandatory or entitled programs depended upon severe cuts in Medicare. It required new taxes, half from increases in regressive excise taxes. The burden of these cuts and taxes would have fallen on lower and middle income Americans.

The President asked Americans to support the summit agreement. A firestorm of popular opposition was unleashed. Reeling from the outcry, the President was unable to rally a majority of his troops and the House of Representatives rejected the summit agreement. Failing to provide the necessary legislation to keep the Government operating, the Government closed over the Columbus Day weekend. Suffering from a major loss, the President vacillated and slipped into an uncertain and unclear leadership role.

The Congress, determined to act, returned to the budget process, passed a budget resolution setting the broad outlines of a deficit reduction plan, and directed congressional committees to achieve budget savings.

The committees have now presented their work in this budget reconciliation package before us today.

These recent events were not the result of an immediate crisis. Rather, they are the culmination of a decade of failed leadership and shortsighted policy.

We began in 1981 by enacting supply side economic policies offered by a popular President elected in a landslide. The plan to cut taxes by 25 percent, increase defense spending, and balance the budget simply did not add up. Realistic budgets were not forthcoming from the administration. With deficits and debt rising at an alarming rate, the Congress resorted to gimmicks like Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Promises to reduce the deficit were made through budget summit agreements based on unrealistic economic assumptions.

Much of the argument centered on whether or not the Federal Government spends too much or taxes too little. Clearly wasteful and unnecessary Federal programs must be eliminated. It is my view, however, that most important Federal programs have broad popular support. The politically popular position for too long has been no new taxes, no real spending cuts, and a skyrocketing deficit.

The Nation's economy has been put through a decade-long Alice-in-Wonderland claim of continued prosperity that was actually a credit card binge, adding an additional two and a half trillion dollars of debt to the one trillion existent just 10 years ago. That's a tragic epitaph for the claims and excesses of supply side economics.

I believe that any realistic deficit reduction effort requires a combination of spending cuts and additional revenue. I thought we had turned that corner this year.

Mr. President, in a sense, we are suffering from our own success. Because of our failure to act, the American people are not convinced of the danger of rising deficits. After years of putting this problem off, we just cannot slip into the back room, hammer out an agreement, make a short television speech, and expect the American people to understand that deficits are important, that deficits must be reduced, that deficit reduction is painful and costly, and that we intend to do something about it.

Our role as lawmakers should be and ultimately must be to critically identify our problems and provide realistic solutions. To continually bend in the political wind shirks our responsibilities.

The proposal before us is a step in the right direction, but at the same time we are compounding our problems. It does reduce the deficit. No one doubts that the deficit will increase without action. We promise $500 billion in deficit reduction, yet I suspect we will fall short. The economic assumptions alone ensure that.

I understand that we operate in the world of compromise and practice the art of the possible. A few days ago, the senior Senator from Arkansas, Senator BUMPERS, asked why it is that he is always being asked to sacrifice his values and his principles in the U.S. Senate? I share his sentiments. We are asked to support particular provisions that we oppose in order to achieve a higher purpose. But, promising more than we know we can deliver undermines our credibility.

Of paramount concern in today's debate is the fairness of deficit reduction. Who shall bear the burden? I am concerned about the lack of progressivity in the tax provisions. I am concerned about whose program will be cut. I am also concerned about how my State is affected.

I believe that higher taxes should be paid by those who are most able to afford those increases. I support a progressive tax system. Those with higher incomes have benefited by reductions in taxes as deficits increased. Regressive tax proposals contributed to the failure of the summit agreement. Although this plan is not as progressive as I would like, it is progressive. Those who make more pay more.

I oppose many provisions in this budget reconciliation bill. In fact there is a lot in this package that I don't like. I oppose Medicare cuts that hurt the elderly, tax breaks for the oil and gas industry, requiring State and local employees in my State who already have a retirement and health plan to pay Medicare taxes, and a regressive gas tax. Nevertheless, it is a vast improvement over the budget summit agreement.

I believe that we have been called upon to provide needed leadership. We have the responsibility to listen to our citizens and to reflect their views. But in the end we must make the difficult decisions. While I am critical of some of its provisions, the Committee on Finance has a package that a majority can support.

Because we face a devastating sequester as the alternative, I believe we must pass the bipartisan reconciliation measure produced by the Finance Committee. I am hopeful that the conference committee will provide more progressive revenue provisions and that the President will act in the best interest of the Nation and approve the final bill. In that spirit, I will vote in favor of this package.

ENERGY SECURITY PACKAGE

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, one section of the reconciliation bill includes a $3.5 billion energy security package to encourage domestic production of oil and gas.

This is an important part of our deficit reduction effort because the price of oil has a direct impact on the economy. It affects potential growth, and inflation. It is a significant factor in both our Federal and trade deficit. Oil is responsible for 28 percent of our trade deficit.

Mr. Alan Greenspan, the Federal Reserve Board's chairman, told Congress on September 19 that a sustained oil price of $30 per barrel would knock 1 percentage point off America's GNP growth in 1991. He also testified that a $30 oil price would add 1½ percentage points to inflation in 1991.

One percent less growth in 1991 would increase the Federal deficit by $6 billion in the first year and continue to have a ripple effect for several years, adding as much as $79 billion over a 5-year period to our national debt.

If we experience $40 dollar a barrel oil, it would increase inflation by 3 to 4 percent and cost us 2 percent in real growth.

This would constrain the Federal Reserve's freedom to ease interest rates as fears of inflation grow.

While this energy incentives package isn't a perfect offset for higher oil prices, and while it may not be significant enough in and of itself to influence world prices, it is a step in the right direction. The goal of this energy package of incentives is to revive American domestic production.

It has provisions to maintain stripper oil production, to enhance production from wells already drilled and to explore for new resources. It includes incentives for oil and for natural gas.

The package of incentives has the flexibility to be judiciously frugal under high price scenarios and prudently effective in low price scenarios.

I want to commend the chairman of the committee for his hard work on this package of incentives. The budget summit agreement included a similar package. It is long overdue policy for the country.

The specific energy provisions include extending section 29, the nonconventional fuels credit for coalbed methane—coal seam—and restores the credit for tight sands gas. This is gas that is difficult to drill. Thirty States have nonconventional fuel production potential.

In my State of New Mexico, the coalbed methane, alone, could double New Mexico's natural gas reserves. We also have an abundance of tight sands gas. Because of this tremendous resource I introduced the first bill last Congress to restore the tight sands credit when a Supreme Court decision rendered the credit inoperable. Earlier in this Congress, S. 425 and S. 2288 were introduced to restore the tight sands credit and to extend the credit.

I am very pleased that the package also includes a 15-percent investment tax credit for enhanced oil recovery.

The United States has produced more oil than any other nation in history, but unless new technologies are rapidly installed, the United States will leave behind twice as much in known reservoirs as it has ever produced from them. We are leaving behind 70 percent of the oil when we drain proven fields using primary oil recovery techniques.

Of this massive 340 billion barrel resources, as much as 76 billion barrels could be made economically producible using technologies that we have developed, or that could be developed, within the next decade.

Economic recovery of this oil presupposes use of existing wells, but the accelerating rate of well plugging could eliminate access to as much as two-thirds of the remaining oil by 1995.

EOR clearly has a significant but time-sensitive potential. To maximize it, it is essential to maintain the stripper well production. This package addresses both types of production.

Last year I introduced S. 828, the Enhanced Oil Recovery Tax Act. It was cosponsored by Senators BOREN, DOLE, NICKLES, WALLOP, JOHNSTON, BINGAMAN, GARN, MCCLURE, GRAMM, BUMPERS, COCHRAN, BURDICK, LOTT, HATCH, STEVENS, and CONRAD. This bill was the basis for the EOR provisions contained in this package.

The approach taken in the original bill was to combine the 10-percent tax credit with a depletion allowance. The incentives were limited to "pay back," that is the point at which a project has produced and sold enough oil to recoup all investments and operating costs associated with the EOR production.

For as little as 35 cents per barrel, this bill would have added as much as 10 billion barrels of oil to our domestic reserves over the life of the EOR projects.

You never get to enact provisions exactly as you wish. And tax policy becomes even more difficult when it is revenue-estimate driven. I would have preferred a combination tax credit and depletion allowance for EOR. However, I fully support the EOR provisions in this package. They are very significant and will add to our energy security. I believe the Finance Committee should be commended for making the hard decisions necessary to go forward with this package.

Under the provisions included in this reconciliation bill, the 15-percent EOR credit would apply to tangible property which is an integral part of the project; intangible drilling and development costs and the cost of tertiary injectants.

The 15-percent investment tax credit is price sensitive and phases out when the price of oil is in the $28 to $34 range. During periods of high prices the incentive is not available. However, the incentive serves as a safety net if prices fall. Since EOR projects are long-term investments, this safety net is very important to encourage producers to financially commit to EOR projects. This is especially important in uncertain times with volatile oil prices such as we find ourselves now.

This bill includes important incentives for strippers. It repeals the transfer rule for properties transferred after October 12, 1990. The transfer rule is a disincentive for independents to take over properties owned by integrated producers. It is a disincentive that denies an independent producer percentage depletion on properties that have changed ownership if the chain of title runs from an integrated producer to an independent producer. Since independents often have lower operating costs, it makes economic sense for an independent to develop or maintain a property. However, the current law the Tax Code was penalizing this economic fact of life. I am very pleased this bill repeals this disincentive.

The bill also increases the net income limitation from 50 percent to 100 percent. Increasing the income limitation to 100 percent would double the amount of percentage depletion that an independent could take on a property.

The variable price floor is an insurance policy against lower prices and provides percentage depletion up to 25 percent for marginal wells under low price scenarios—$10 to $19 dollars per barrel. For every $1 the price of oil drops below $20 per barrel, the current law 15-percent percentage depletion increases by 1 percent.

At the same time that we are maintaining the production we have, and are taking steps to encourage additional production from wells already drilled using enhanced oil recovery techniques, we also need to explore for new reserves.

This bill provides a 15-percent exploratory drilling credit.

The bill also provides some breathing space for producers who are in the alternative minimum tax situation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a factsheet on the energy security package be printed in the RECORD. I also ask that several tables listing States where this production comes from be printed in the RECORD following my remarks. And last, I ask that an Op-Ed piece dealing with enhanced oil recovery be printed in the RECORD.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ENERGY SECURITY PACKAGE

CURRENT DOMESTIC ENERGY SITUATION

U.S. dependence on foreign oil has risen substantially in the past five years. In 1985, approximately one-quarter of our oil was imported. Today, we are importing virtually one-half of our oil, with trends pointing to further future increases.

This dependence on foreign oil is a dangerous dependence; the current situation in the Persian Gulf makes this clear. But beyond that, it translates into an economic dependence that creates a tremendous burden on the economy. Last year, for example, energy imports totaled (on a net basis) $43 billion—comparable to 40 percent of our $108 billion net merchandise trade deficit.

U.S. oil production has plunged to its lowest level in 28 years, and domestic exploratory drilling for oil has declined by almost 60 percent in the last 5 years. The number of domestic oil producers has fallen from some 13,000 to less than 5,000 over the last decade.

In addition, 1989 was the fourth consecutive year in which the U.S. rig count average fell below 900. This compares with the average of 1,800 rigs during the past 46 years.

In 1989, domestic crude oil production had its steepest annual decline in history: it declined 553,000 barrels per day. At the same time, total petroleum imports reached a ten-year high, averaging nearly eight million barrels per day.

ENERGY PACKAGE—GENERAL

This energy security package is designed to be judiciously frugal under high price scenarios. Except for a couple of rule changes, there are no oil and gas incentives if $40 oil continues. Most of the tax benefits included in the package phase-out when prices exceed $28 and are completely phased-out at $34 per barrel.

The package is also prudently effective in low price scenarios. The variable price floor for marginal production doesn't trigger until the price of oil drops below $20 per barrel.

The package could increase U.S. domestic oil and gas production by as much as a half million barrels per day. A half million barrels of additional production is equivalent to ¾ of what the U.S. previously imported from Iraq.

More importantly, the package has the potential to add substantially to domestic energy reserves. It has been estimated that the package could increase domestic reserves by as much as 8.6 billion barrels, an increase in domestic oil and gas reserves of one-third. This is more than the total amount of crude oil discovered over the past decade.

Adding to U.S. domestic production by these magnitudes will have an impact at the gas pump.

The cost of this package is $3.5 billion over 5 years. Operation Desert Shield has cost approximately $3.5 billion in just 2 and one half months.

Some members have asked why, this Deficit Reduction package should include tax incentives for domestic production of oil and gas.

Oil prices have a very direct impact on the economy. It affects potential growth and inflation. It is a significant factor in both our federal and trade deficit. This package is one step toward addressing this inescapable relationship.

Mr. Alan Greenspan, the Fed's chairman, told Congress on September 19, that a sustained oil price of $30 would knock one percentage point off America's GNP growth in 1991. Greenspan also stated that a $30 oil price would add 1½ to 2 percentage points to inflation in 1991.

One percent less growth in 1991 would increase the federal deficit by $6 billion in the first year and continue to have a ripple effect for several years. It could add as much as $79 billion in total to our national debt over the five year period.

COMPONENTS OF THE PACKAGE

Extension of the Section 29 credit for nonconventional fuels production, including tight sands gas: This tax credit has the potential of expanding substantially the reserves of natural gas in the United States. It has been estimated that an extension of the credit could add 500 billion cubic feet of natural gas a year by the year 2000. This could reduce our need for imported oil by about 230,000 barrels of oil equivalent per day. Also, there is tight sands potential in 20 states (with current production in 16 states); thus the credit would benefit a wider number of regions (see attached table).

Incentives to encourage the use of enhanced oil recovery: The potential reserve additions available through enhanced oil recovery (EOR) are quite substantial: conventional oil recovery techniques leave 65% to 70% of the oil in the ground, and it is estimated that recovery of only 10% of the remaining in-place oil through EOR would more than double the nation's proven reserves.

Provisions that would reduce the abandonment of marginal properties: Nearly three-quarters of all producing oil wells in the U.S. are stripper wells. Strippers account for 15 percent of total U.S. crude oil production. One barrel of oil meets the average daily needs of about six families. Stripper wells fulfill the oil needs of about 7.5 million U.S. households. Stripper well abandonments have been reported to have increased from 7,000 in 1979 to over 17,000 in 1988. As a matter of domestic energy security, it is important to stop abandonment of marginal wells: once a well is abandoned, the oil is normally lost forever, and enhanced oil recovery on the property becomes less likely. The package provides several provisions which would maximize the production from marginal properties and reduce the abandonment of marginal wells.

Exploratory drilling credits: This would encourage the addition of substantial new domestic reserves through increased exploratory drilling activities. In recent years, exploratory drilling has declined sharply—almost 60 percent over the last five years. The number of independent oil producers, who have historically drilled the majority of exploratory wells, have fallen from nearly 13,000 in the early 1980's to less than 5,000 by 1989. To further encourage reserve-increasing drilling, a limited reduction in the intangible drilling cost minimum tax preference is also provided.

Extension of the alcohol fuels credits and gas tax exemption: To encourage the use of alternative fuels. In addition, provisions are modified to include a special credit and exemption for small producers.

OIL INCENTIVE PROMISES TREBLE DIVIDENDS

(By Senator Pete Domenici)

America, with its boom and bust mentality, has forgotten about the energy crises. Few Americans realize that our dependence on imported energy has risen to more than 40 percent and is predicted to reach 50 percent in the near future. With our nuclear industry in intensive care, we are running out of options.

Nevertheless, we are at least left with the option of doing better with what we have—namely increasing production from existing oil wells through enhanced recovery techniques. We could get from 25 to 33 percent in additional production from many wells.

With a carefully targeted federal tax incentive-style investment of 35 cents a barrel, enhanced oil recovery could add nearly 12 billion barrels to the U.S. reserve base.

At the same time, we could reduce the risk of tanker spills along our coastline and on the high seas. Instead, we are importing 24 billion barrels per year that is transported by tanker—3,400 tanker shipments annually.

If the risk of tanker spills is too high when the U.S. is experiencing a 40 percent foreign oil dependence, the future only holds graver risks because dependence is continuing to grow.

If the risks of overdependence on foreign oil and damage to the environment are not reason enough to encourage enhanced recovery techniques, another argument is the effect oil imports have on our trade deficit.

Last year, the gap between what we produced and what we consumed accounted for $35.2 billion or 29 percent of our trade deficit. Experts predict that within 10 years we could have an annual oil import bill ranging from $150 billion to $200 billion. That amount is greater than our total trade deficit today, raising serious questions about our ability to reduce the deficit.

The Department of Energy has estimated that if the Enhanced Oil Recovery Act of 1989 were enacted, we could reduce the deficit as much as $50 for every dollar the Treasury forgoes through tax incentives for enhanced recovery.

Conventional well-drilling techniques leave behind as much as 70 percent of the oil. We know how to extract much of the remaining oil. Injecting steam or carbon dioxide primes the pump so that more oil flows from each well.

Without this advanced technology, we will continue to face the same problems that plague our energy industry today: low and unpredictable prices, and ineffective tax policy. The combination yields inadequate rates of return when companies analyze enhanced recovery projects, so oil fields are being abandoned long before the oil has been depleted.

Once a well is abandoned, enhanced recovery becomes much more expensive, if not impossible. In 1987, 18,241 wells were abandoned—almost three times the number closed down in 1980. The trend is clear. The longer we wait, the fewer wells we will have to enhance.

We can't do anything about the unpredictability of OPEC, but it is time for the tax writing committees to examine policy on oil and gas production.

Much of our energy tax policy was crafted in response to the oil embargoes and price spikes of the 1970s. Such policy is not valid during times of surplus and low prices.

Over the past 70 years, and particularly the last 20, tax laws have chipped away at and eliminated many of the safeguards necessary to make sure we only tax "income" earned from the extraction of oil and gas. Instead, I believe our federal tax laws are taxing the energy industry's capital. We are cannibalizing the capital structure of this country's resource base. This is bad tax policy and terrible energy policy.

The Enhanced Oil Recovery Tax Act of 1989 is basically a tax credit and depletion allowance for enhanced recovery projects. To make the incentives efficient, I would make them available only for the "incremental oil"—oil that would not be produced except for the enhanced recovery techniques. I would limit the capital recovery incentives so that once a producer sold enough oil to recoup his investment, the incentives would be eliminated.

Greater energy independence is reason enough to enact this law. Combined with environmental protection and trade deficit reduction, enhanced oil recovery can make a significant step for America.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, all of us recognize the critical importance of reducing the budget deficit and moving as rapidly as possible toward a balanced Federal budget. We all know that doing so requires tough choices. Since I came to the Senate in 1985, I have done everything I can to move us in that direction. I was the first Democratic Senator from the Northeast to cosponsor the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill as an important step in that direction. I have voted against budget resolutions, reconciliation bills, and appropriations measures over the years when I believed that they were inconsistent with achieving real deficit reduction and did not reflect the values and priorities of the people of Massachusetts. I have always been willing to make the tough choices on deficit reduction, but I have always refused to make the wrong choices for the people of Massachusetts.

In September, when after months of negotiations with the administration produced no budget summit agreement, I urged our leaders to abandon that process and to come to the floors of the House and Senate and begin to debate and decide on our priorities in the forum designed in our Constitution for this to occur. My frustration was echoed on both sides of the aisle, with the minority leader publicly suggesting that the White House negotiators appeared to be in no hurry.

Finally, with time running out, a summit agreement was reached, brought to the House floor and defeated by a majority vote of Republicans and Democrats alike. That flawed agreement led to the speedy passage of a budget resolution which, while more vague than the original proposal, still failed to meet the criteria by which I must judge any Federal budget. Therefore, I voted against it.

As I indicated at that time, I must apply three criteria to any budget in making my decision:

First, it must be fair to the working people of Massachusetts. It must not discriminate against our region of the country. It must not continue or increase the burden on the middle-class families of our State and unfairly benefit those with substantial wealth.

Second, it must be consistent with the expansion of the Massachusetts economy and recovery from the serious recession that we are currently in.

Third, it must have real, substantial multiyear reductions and abandon the recent practice of phony budgets with rosy economic assumptions and gimmicky short-term measures predominating.

Unfortunately, the budget resolution which came before the Senate failed to meet these criteria and, therefore, I voted against it.

First, the budget resolution increased taxes too much while cutting spending too little and held little prospect for reducing waste and mismanagement. More specifically, it required increased tax revenues of approximately $135 billion, with no assurance that low- and middle-class families would not be forced to pay the heaviest share of this burden. It also included spending reductions in defense that were much too small. In fact, if the resolution had accepted the Senate or House Budget Committee's recommended defense cuts, we could have reduced the proposed tax increase by from $26 billion to $62 billion. Finally, larger reductions in excessive subsidies on agriculture, to businesses conducted on public lands, and in loopholes for oil and gas and other businesses could have produced savings and reduced the need to raise taxes.

I have maintained that I would only consider tax increases as a last resort, after spending had been squeezed hard, loopholes had been plugged and mismanagement had been dramatically reduced. Obviously, this has not occurred, and the budget resolution I opposed would not move us sufficiently in that direction.

Second, the reductions required by the budget resolution in the entitlement area were very likely to produce major cuts in Medicare and in essential benefit programs for our veterans. It is simply unfair to exact an excessive share of the pain of deficit reduction from the elderly, many struggling to make ends meet on fixed incomes, and veterans who deserve our gratitude, not the budget axe.

Third, while many of the details were left to be filled in by the congressional committees, the President indicated that he would push for a final budget that closely reflected the ill-fated and ill-advised original budget agreement. Since that agreement was unfair to Massachusetts and our working families, I was highly skeptical of the final product of such a process.

The budget resolution was passed despite my opposition. It created the framework within which the Senate produced the reconciliation bill that has been presented to us today. However, as I suspected, this reconciliation bill could not rise above and overcome the fundamental flaws that afflicted the framework document, the budget resolution. It is much like building a house. If the blueprint is defective, the chances are slim that the house produced will be satisfactory, and that is the case with this reconciliation bill.

It does not reduce excessive spending in defense, on agriculture and in other areas sufficiently.

It does not close unnecessary tax loopholes adequately.

It does not reduce waste and mismanagement as it should.

It does not distribute the burden of taxation as fairly as it should by asking more of those that have great wealth and less of those who already pay a great deal when compared to their income.

It does not fairly impose the burden of reduction on all States and regions of this country.

It does not adequately reflect the special needs and living requirements of the elderly and our veterans.

As a result, it does not pass the test of fairness to the people of Massachusetts, their values and priorities that I must apply in reaching my decision on the reconciliation bill. I will, therefore, vote against it.

I want to reduce the deficit. I have been willing, as I indicated earlier, to make the "tough choices," but the reconciliation bill makes the "wrong choices" for Massachusetts and the Nation.

I understand how hard it is to produce a budget that we all can support.

I understand that our leaders had to fashion a proposal that they believed could pass.

I commend them for the difficult and thankless task to which they have devoted themselves so generously.

I believe that they have produced a better budget than what was produced in the budget summit. For this I am grateful.

For example, I am pleased that the Medicare costs to our elderly have been reduced somewhat.

I am pleased that some modest improvement in progressivity is included compared to the original budget agreement.

I am pleased with the expansion of the earned income tax credit.

I am pleased with the child health care package.

And I am pleased that the 2-cent tax on heating oil has been discarded.

And there are a few other provisions that are improvements. I am pleased that I was able to help change these provisions.

But, better just is not good enough. This reconciliation bill is seriously flawed.

For example, the tax increases proposed remain excessive and regressive. Excessive reliance on the gas tax, for instance, without increasing taxes significantly on the very wealthy leaves us with a tax system that is unfair. This is a fundamental problem.

The Medicare provisions would increase the deductible from $75 to $150 in 1991 and other costs to the elderly for this health care would also increase. The veterans cuts remain excessive and unfair.

The mandating of Medicare for State and local government employees hits Massachusetts governments especially hard, as it does their workers. It would cost our State and local governments $150 million each year and our workers a similar amount.

The Medicare provisions would add a significant burden to hospitals in my State already under serious financial stress and reduce resources to Massachusetts teaching hospitals by approximately $28 million.

The tax incentives provided for oil and gas production are excessive and unnecessary, particularly in the period of rapid run-ups in oil prices.

The failure of this budget to include a targeted incentive for investment in small, new ventures—the source of important job and income growth in the Nation—and desperately needed in Massachusetts is a major failing.

I also believe that the Commerce Committee's decision to require the Coast Guard to begin to charge user fees, without any specific requirement for equity in the fee structure is unwise and, potentially very unfair.

And these are only a few of the litany of problems I could recite that make it impossible for me to support this measure.

During our debate on this bill I have also tried to make it better. I have supported amendments to reduce regressive gasoline taxes, to reduce unfair Medicare cuts, and to pay for these cuts by increasing taxes on the wealthiest of our citizens. I have voted to take Social Security off-budget to protect the integrity of the trust fund and reduce its use of artificially suggesting that the Federal deficit is less than it really is. And I have supported several other amendments intended to make this measure more fair. But despite these efforts, this reconciliation bill simply does not meet the criteria that I must apply on behalf of the people of my State.

I hope and pray that the final product produced in conference with the House and in negotiations with the President will be a big improvement over the bill before us tonight. But, I am a realist. I know that the die was cast with passage of the budget resolution. And while I can hope for a miracle, and work for change, I am not optimistic that we will ultimately enact a budget with which I am pleased. But I intend to do everything I can to make it better. For while better may not be good enough for my support, it is preferable to the current reconciliation bill which I must oppose.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am opposed to the budget plan before the Senate and will vote against it.

There are three main problems with this deficit reduction proposal:

It relies too much on increased taxes and places too much of the tax burden on the elderly and on the average taxpayer and family.

It fails to do enough to control spending.

It poses a very real danger to our economy at a time when we are sliding toward a recession.

During consideration of this bill in the Senate I voted to eliminate the immediate increase in gasoline excise taxes. I voted to reduce or eliminate the increased costs that would be imposed on the elderly in the Medicare program. And I voted to shift the burden of taxes from middle-income Americans to the wealthy. All of those proposed changes were defeated.

We should remember that the objectives of this budget plan—to reduce the deficit in 1991 by $40 billion and over 5 years by a total of $500 billion—were established in negotiations with the White House months ago. Since that time the evidence has grown steadily that our national economy is slowing and is in danger of sliding into an actual recession.

It is just plain bad economics to impose a heavy tax increase at a time when the economy is slowing down. Indeed, most economists agree that at a time like this it would be best to reduce taxes. With the size of our Federal deficit, we probably cannot reduce taxes, but we should certainly think twice about imposing heavy new tax burdens.

For all of these reasons I am opposed to the budget plan presented to us in the Senate.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, it is fashionable in this town to talk about crisis. In fact, crisis may be one of Washington's most overused words. Issues don't seem to count unless they are "crisis" issues. So we are here today to deal with the budget crisis, the deficit crisis, and the national debt crisis.

But are we really facing a crisis? Many people do not seem to think so. After all, our national debt has tripled in the last 10 years. We have run huge deficits, and this year's deficit will likely be the largest in history. Yet the American economy has grown steadily since 1982, and many of the catastrophic effects of ever-increasing budget deficits that were predicted have not yet come to pass. Many voters, therefore, see this as a phony crisis, and they think Congress and the President have created this artificial event without good reason.

I have to agree that crisis is probably not the word to describe our budget problems, but I also have to say that the problems are very real. It is true that the world would not end if we did not enact this bill this week. It is also true that we have to act, that we are running out of time to act, that the consequences of our past failure to act are growing, and that these consequences affect all Americans.

Our current national debt is over $3.2 trillion. Now, that is a very, very large number. It is also a number that is without any real meaning; numbers that big are just too abstract. Two comparisons, however, may help put that number into some kind of perspective.

First, think of the debt compared to American savings. Paying off the national debt today would require wiping out every checking account, every savings account, every certificate of deposit, and every other account held by every single American and by every single American business at all of our nation's banks, savings and loans, and credit unions—Every single dollar.

Second, think of the debt compared to the Government's income. The U.S. Government has a lot of income—over $1 trillion this year. Our debt, though, is over three times our income. Now, the general rule of thumb used by mortgage lenders is that the maximum mortgage a family can get is about 2½ to 3 times their income. Our national debt exceeds that level, which means that, if you think of the United States as a single-family home, we do not have a large enough income to be able to afford it.

What makes the situation even worse is that much of our debt is not long-term mortgage-like debt. Instead, a large part of it is like credit card debt—very short-term debt.

And how are we paying this short-term debt? The answer is simple—by issuing more debt. This is like a family using its mastercard to make the minimum monthly payment on the visa bill.

Americans know that if they use one credit card to make the monthly payment on another one, they are seriously financially overextended. An overextended credit card user can keep the house of cards from collapsing for a while, but eventually, the credit cards max out, and the ability to keep borrowing evaporates.

The U.S. Government is approaching that point. And while we have advantages that the ordinary American does not have—we can print money to pay the debt—the consequences facing the country are not less severe than the consequences facing individual borrowers who drown themselves in debt.

Individuals who cannot pay their debts are forced into bankruptcy. They lose the ability to borrow, and bankruptcy usually means that their standard of living declines precipitously.

Countries are somewhat different. They can go on inflating the currency—paying off debts with cheap, inflated dollars—and by offering higher and higher interest rates. Even countries, however, can eventually have trouble borrowing. A number of overextended Third World countries have lost access to the international lending community. The United States is not to that point, but it is worth noting that Japan, which has been the main foreign purchaser of United States debt over the last several years, is dramatically cutting back its lending to the United States. And while that may sound satisfying to U.S. economic nationalists, it is not good for our economy.

That leads me to my next point, Mr. President, which is that this massive debt load has consequences that affect all Americans.

The Government's huge and growing borrowing demand has resulted in interest rates that are very high by historical standards. Interest rates declined in the early 1980's as the Federal Reserve Board wrung inflation out of the economy. However, real interest rates, that is, interest rates adjusted for inflation, did not decline. What that means is that borrowing became more expensive. What that means, to use just one concrete example, is that homebuyers have had to buy smaller homes than they otherwise would, because money that could have been spent on more house was being spent on interest instead.

The debt has also hurt our economy by using up so much of our savings pool. Money that should have gone into productive investments went instead into Government bonds. The result of that is lower growth and fewer jobs.

Many Americans—in all likelihood, most Americans—think they are better off now than they were in the 1970's. It is true that in some ways we are better off. Inflation, for example, is clearly lower. Our economy, however, grew faster, on average in the muchmaligned 1970's than it did in the last 10 years. Productivity growth also declined in the last 10 years. What these abstractions mean is that the average American is worse off. Improvement in the standard of living for the average American slowed, and for many Americans, stopped altogether. For more and more Americans, the only way to make ends meet was to have two wage-earner families. And for a growing number of young families, the American dream of home ownership seemed to be drifting out of reach.

All of these problems are related to our failure to deal with the Federal budget deficits, but they are not the only consequences. We also need to consider the things debt has prevented our Nation from buying, like: cleaner air and water; hazardous waste cleanup; up-to-date, repaired roads and bridges; health care assistance for Americans that need it; child care programs for families with both parents working; and better education assistance.

In short, deficits have hurt and are hurting every American in many ways. Not addressing this issue simply increases the pain now, and will make the pain even greater when we do eventually act—and if we do not act voluntarily, we will eventually be forced to act. We therefore must find a way to get our deficits under control.

Some people argue, Mr. President, that the solution to the deficit problem is simple—cut spending. There are a number of things to say about that solution. The first is that Congress has cut spending.

I could give many, many examples of program cuts, but let me mention just two. I serve on the banking, housing, and Urban Affairs Committee. The two largest spending programs under that committee's jurisdiction are mass transit and housing. In my time in the Senate, mass transit spending has been cut by over 40 percent, and Federal housing programs have been cut by roughly 80 percent. These are not cuts from some theoretical baseline that makes assumptions involving continuing program growth. These are the cuts from the actual 1980 spending levels—cuts of billions and billions of dollars.

A second answer involves the magnitude of spending cuts involved. If, for example, we attempted to balance the budget this year by simply cutting spending, we would have to eliminate:

The Department of Agriculture including the basic price support programs, food stamps, and every other agriculture and nutrition program;

The Department of Commerce, including the weather bureau;

The Department of Education;

The Department of Energy, including the strategic petroleum reserve;

The Department of the Interior;

The Department of Justice, including the FBI and all Federal prisons;

The Department of Labor;

The Department of State;

The Department of Transportation, including all air traffic controllers, all highway and transit spending, and the Coast Guard;

The Department of Housing and Urban Development;

The Environmental Protection Agency;

NASA;

Customs and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms;

The Small Business Administration; and

All of the so-called alphabet agencies, including the CIA, the Federal Trade Commission, the Financial Regulators, the Federal Communications Commission and numerous other agencies.

Even this group of cuts only balances the budget if there are also substantial cuts in the defense budget. And even with the Defense cuts, the budget is not balanced if Social Security taxes and spending are taken out of the budget, or if the cost of closing insolvent savings and loans is included.

Yet a third answer is that there are some things we cannot cut and some things we should not cut. We cannot, for example, cut interest, the most rapidly growing part of our budget. We are currently spending roughly $250 billion on interest alone, if the interest paid to Social Security and the other trust funds is included. This is about 50 per cent of the entire amount the Federal Government receives from the individual income tax.

Think of that! Half of every Americans' income taxes goes to paying interest, and we don't have any choice about interest. Our only choice is to pay it. And the only real way to reduce it is to reduce Federal debt.

While we must pay interest, we must not cut Social Security. Social Security is a compact with the American people. Cutting Social Security benefits would mean breaking that compact, and that is something I know the Congress will not do. I know the American people would never want us to do such a thing.

Further spending cuts can be accomplished, but the truth is that, if the costs like interest that must be paid are exempted, and programs like Social Security that should be exempted are exempted, the budget cannot be balanced via spending cuts alone in any reasonable time frame without causing terrible pain to the American economy, and without terminating many programs and activities that are critically important to Americans.

The only way to reduce Federal deficits that will work, therefore, is a gradual package of spending cuts and revenue increases. That is what the budget summit tried to do. That is what the reconciliation package before the Senate now tries to do.

I know raising taxes is painful, just as I know that going to a debt councilor or a bankruptcy judge is painful. I also know, however, that its like going to the dentist—waiting makes things worse.

Though it may be painful to act now, it will be much more painful not to act. The deeper in the hole we let ourselves get, the greater the sacrifice that will eventually be required to dig ourselves out.

If any further demonstration is needed that some revenue must be part of any serious deficit reduction package, it was provided during consideration of the reconciliation bill by the House of Representatives. The House Republicans attempted to offer an amendment that basically left out any additional revenues. Their amendment was declared out of order, however, because it did not reduce deficits by the amount the President requested. Even the House Republicans could not produce a 5-year package of spending cuts alone that they thought was workable that reduces deficits by $40 billion in 1991 and $500 billion over 5 years, which is what Congress and the President have committed to do.

Therefore, Mr. President, what we have before us today is a package that contains both spending cuts and some additional revenues. There is a lot that I do not like about this package. Even its most ardent proponents recognize that it has serious flaws. I know, however, that it is the only package that has any hope of passing this body.

I will therefore vote to send this legislation to conference, in the hope that the package that emerges from the conference with the House of Representatives will be fair and equitable to working Americans and disadvantaged Americans, and that the final legislation will ensure that our most well-off citizens carry their just share of the burdens required.

Let me conclude by restating what I said at the outset. While this may not be a deficit crisis yet, unless we start to act now, we will face one in the future. Our past failures to get the deficit under control have hurt every American and have damaged the American economy. Solving the problem entails hard choices and real pain. Anyone who has been living beyond his or her means by borrowing knows there is a day of reckoning, and that dealing with the debt means real financial pain.

We are rapidly approaching that day of reckoning. The only way to avoid very serious pain then is to begin to endure a little pain now. That is why enactment of a deficit reduction package is so important. That is why we must act.

We need to act in a manner that is as fair and as equitable as possible. We need to act in a way that minimizes any potential risks to our economy. But we must act. There really is no other choice.

SUPERFUND

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President I had intended to offer an amendment that would have extended for 5 years the current tax levied to finance the Superfund hazardous waste cleanup program. However, I know that the leadership will not be able to support this amendment because, like many other amendments, it could violate the germaneness provisions of the Budget Act.

Mr. President, I have supported the leadership in trying to keep this reconciliation bill clean because the need to get this bill enacted into law is critical for the future health of this economy. However, I want to express my concern about what will happen to the Superfund cleanup program unless the Superfund tax is extended as soon as possible.

If Congress does not extend the Superfund tax at the beginning of next year, EPA program cleanup operations are sure to be slowed, and in some cases delayed for many months.

I have asked EPA for some figures on the financial status of Superfund. The agency's numbers show that almost all of the $1.5 billion in tax revenue raised each year will be used up by the end of the 1991 fiscal year. At that time, there will be less than a $30 million balance in the trust.

If the Superfund tax is not extended, early next year EPA will start making short-term contingency plans to husband scarce resources. They will not be able to enter into any long-term cleanup contracts. Their budgeting and planning for future activities will be severely hampered.

The last time that we sought to reauthorize Superfund, it took us three years to get the job done. And Superfund almost collapsed for the lack of revenues and appropriations. Cleanups were delayed; contracts were threatened, and Senior staff were looking for new jobs. Work that was in the pipeline literally stopped because of the protracted controversy over funding. Some projects took 18 months to resume. And because contracts could not be signed, relationships with contractors were severely strained. What's more, responsible parties withheld settling with EPA because they thought they could get a legislative reprieve from liability, with the result that cleanup work was further delayed.

Mr. President, I hope we do not repeat the mistakes we made in 1986. We need an extension of the Superfund and I hope that the leadership will make this a top priority, at the earliest possible time, for the next Congress.

Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. President, I appreciate the distinguished Senator's concern about the ability of the Environmental Protection Agency to fulfill its obligations next year under the Superfund Law. I have previously indicated my strong support for continued funding of the Superfund program and I am committed to moving legislation early next year that ensures no interruption of the cleanup program.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I feel compelled to rise and detail my opposition to this proposal—even though I know that it is undoubtedly one big political winner—because I want it known exactly what we are talking about here. On the surface, what could make more sense than something like this—"Tax the rich, they've got the money, those roitten bums. They can bail us out of our predicament. Why should any of the rest of us suffer?"

There is a very inescapable reason why the rest of us are going to have to suffer, and it is called the national debt. Has anyone missed that point? Remember that it is $3½ trillion that we have to repay; $196 billion in interest is what we expect to pay in this coming fiscal year alone?

Does anyone here actually believe that the Nation's problem is solely one of insufficient taxation of the rich? I have been down here before with all of the facts and figures showing that total confiscation of all of the wealth of all of the people earning more than $100,000 would run the country for about 4½ months. Let's here make a more relevant comparison, directly pertaining to the proposal presented by the Senator from Iowa. That proposal is to apply a 10 percent surtax on taxable income over $1 million, why stop there? Why not just take it all if that is the problem?

Let's take a look at that—let's take all of the money of those evil millionaires, and multiply our surcharge intake tenfold—instead of $7.6 billion, we'll take all of that money in excess of an income of $1 million and bring in $76 billion—and that assumes, of course, that nothing changes—that even though we're going to take all of that money past $1 million, all of those people will continue to work and earn just as they are expected to now, hardly realistic! What a joke.

So how far have we then come? Have we paid off our debt? Not exactly. We would have enough revenue to run the Government for 21 days, 3 weeks! So hear that, that is not going to help us avoid having to make those tough choices in other parts of the budget.

If we really intend to get the deficit under control, we are going to have to face facts about where our money is going, 48 percent of our spending is now going into some form of entitlements, and that share is rising rapidly.

I want that so clearly understood, that is where the money is. And this is crucial, that spending all has increases built right into the law. Prior to the budget summit, the Federal Government planned to increase its spending on Medicare at a rate of 11.6 percent per year, the summit agreement would have trimmed that to 10 percent.

Only in Washington is a 10 percent increase in annual spending called a cut. But we do call it a cut and so the media has a field day, blasting our victimization of the elderly and demanding that the rich pay their fair share so that that does not have to happen. But something does have to happen, there are rich elderly too and they now can have 75 percent of the Medicare payments subsidized by Joe and Josie Sixpack. Forget taxing the rich, some of that money is paying the rich. You cannot balance a budget by refusing to touch spending which is going up at twice the rate of inflation. No amount of taxation can keep up with that. You can't stay even, much less achieve deficit reduction.

Given that situation it is absolutely amazing that entitlements were sheltered to the degree that they were in the budget summit, they accounted for only 23.8 percent of the deficit reduction, despite being 48 percent of our current spending and that, I remind my colleagues, would have only been a $119 billion savings from planned increases, not a cut in any honest sense.

This is what we have before us on Medicare, $49 billion in savings over 5 years and $32 billion of that is completely in the area of reductions to health care providers, not to recipients. Cuts pertaining to beneficiaries make up only $17 billion of that amount, slightly more than one-third. How would beneficiaries actually be affected? Part b premiums now stand to go up by an amount of zero in 1991; zero in 1992; $3.20 in 1993; and a total of $9.80 by 1995—$9.80 over 5 years. Just for comparison, assume you get $5,000 a year annually from Social Security. If you received only a 3-percent cost-of-living adjustment every year for 5 years, your annual income would have increased by nearly $800 by 1995. Your Medicare premiums part b, voluntary Medicare premiums, would have gone up by only $9.80.

In addition, Medicare part b deductibles would be increased from $75, where it has been since 1982, to $150. That is what is being proposed. Compare that to what our grandchildren will face if we do not cut into entitlements. We in Congress have taken away $757 billion in annual spending under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law and we say you can't touch this, even in the event of a sequester. Well, just what are we going to touch? This amendment would remove a cut and add a tax, a tax on the rich.

I want to ask my colleagues who they think the rich are? We're down here speaking about how Donald Trump and Leona Helmsley need to pay their fair share unless, presumably, they use Medicare. At least those rich are not paid their salaries from the vaults of the Federal Treasury. On February 1, of this year, the Senate passed a salary increase that raised our annual pay to $98,400. That was up from $89,500 where we had raised it in March of 1987. Prior to that, Senate salaries were $77,400 a year—and given the pressures on the Federal budget I think that is quite a plenty. And I proved that by returning my pay increases every year to the U.S. Treasury, over $20,000 in this year alone. I write that check personally and it goes right back into the Treasury of the U.S. Government.

The people right here on this floor of the Senate complaining about the rich are being paid $98,400 every year by, yes, none other than Joe and Josie Sixpack. How many of those people out there in the real world do you think are earning $98,400 a year? Only about 2 percent of all of the individuals in the United States have incomes as high as $75,000 and that includes salary, government benefits, or any other income, only 2 percent. That sounds like a pretty good definition of the rich to me, the top 2 percent of America's salary earners, we are earning what that group was earning before our salary hikes. But we passed those through and I accept responsibility for my part in that process but I didn't take the bucks. Now that is in the pot of expenditures that we can't touch. That big money machine which is the U.S. Government is taxing Joe Sixpack and paying out that money to someone else, without regard for any demonstrated need. All of those expenses are untouchable.

It is time that they ceased to be untouchable. We made some very slight progress with this budget package in slowing the snowballing of entitlements expenses. This is not the time to now undo even that small progress. It is time, however, to stop kidding the American people, to stop pretending that our debt can be paid without reforming the entitlements system in some way, means-testing on COLA's or however else. I want to ask my colleagues one question, What do they think is going to happen if we have increases in medicare expenses of 11.6 percent a year forever? Similar increases in Social Security and other entitlements programs? Does anyone here on this floor really believe that we can just let that juggernaut keep rolling along forever? What is their answer to that terrible problem? Tax the rich if we can't even effect a modest deceleration of entitlements spending, I can tell you with absolute certainty that we will not, no never, solve our deficit problem, whether we raise taxes or not. What are we doing to ourselves and more importantly to the people who sent us here? That is the real and only question. I strongly oppose this amendment and I respectfully ask my colleagues to do the same.

DISALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTIONS FOR INTEREST ON TAX DEFICIENCIES PROVISION

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, the bill before the Senate today contains a proposal which penalizes taxpayers for innocent underpayments, IRS delays, and unexpected changes in the law. The proposed nondeductibility of interest charges would apply to all deficiencies, including those for which the taxpayer bears no fault whatsoever. Substantial penalties already exist for fraudulent, negligent, and undisclosed aggressive tax positions. This proposal covers not only those positions, but also the remaining universe of innocent and inadvertent underpayments. The nondeductibility penalty would apply in cases where the IRS changed its position between the time of filing and the time of audit, and where prior case law was reversed in the interim. Plus, the penalty increases whenever the IRS is slow in concluding a tax audit.

This proposal piles penalty on penalty, and fails to distinguish innocent underpayments from cases of fraud and negligence. It abandons all attempts to relate interest charges to commercial reality and forces corporations to pay junk bond rates to the IRS.

The proposal could have a variety of unintended and undesirable administrative consequences. In some cases, it would increase incentives to pay an assessed tax and file a refund claim, thus depriving the IRS and taxpayers access to the tax court and its special expertise, and requiring a doubling of tax returns for each year—one original and one amended, seeking the refund. In other cases, there could be greater incentives for taxpayers to fight all the way through litigation to try and avoid all interest charges rather than settle, thus clogging an already strained IRS caseload. It would also make taxpayers unlikely to grant extensions of expiring statutes of limitations, cutting off IRS audit time and decreasing audit quality.

Finally, Mr. President, this proposal would unfairly impact smaller, less affluent taxpayers, the proverbial "little guy" who invariably gets screwed by big brother IRS. The big corporate taxpayer can afford to hold out and fight it out with the IRS, particularly when there are big bucks involved. Thus, big corporation borrows from major banker friend on its rather large line of credit if it can, maybe even at the expense of its credit rating, pays the disputed tax liability, proceeds to deduct the interest it pays friendly banker from its tax return, and then takes the case to Federal District Court which does not have the efficient and extensive expertise of the tax court and then litigates the heck out of it infinitum at great expense to the Government, resulting in extensive court backlogs. This forces borrowing at the time of a major credit crunch and the corporation will have no reason not to litigate.

Meanwhile our little friend, the average business taxpayer who is being hounded by the IRS and who does not have a rather large line of credit with anyone and who therefore cannot come up with the money to pay the IRS alleged deficiency is faced with a real dilemma. He can fight the IRS in the tax court and end up losing his interest deductions on final settlement or he can sell off assets to pay the tax and take it to district court for a refund. Mr. President, you can bet the farm that if this taxpayer does the latter, he will fight to the death with the IRS until he wins. Again, the courts are tied up at great Government expense.

This is a bad idea whose time has not and should not come. It is unfair, irrational, ill-conceived and, quite frankly, will lose money in the long run through vastly increased administrative and legal costs borne by both the Government and the American taxpayer. This could end up being a major loser for the Treasury in the long run—oh well—the highways to hell have always been paved with good intentions.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement to the congressional leadership from the American Bar Association be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Statement to the Congressional Leadership, the House Ways and Means Committee, the Senate Finance Committee, the Treasury Department, and the Office of Management and Budget

PROPOSED DISALLOWANCE OF CORPORATE DEDUCTION FOR INTEREST ON TAX DEFICIENCIES

SUMMARY

This statement is presented on behalf of the Section of Taxation. It has not been approved by the House of Delegates or the Board of Governors of the American Bar Association and, accordingly, should not be construed as representing the position of the Association.

The Section of Taxation strongly recommends rejection of the proposal, set out in the Budget Summit Agreement and the Ways and Means Committee decisions released October 12, to disallow the corporate income tax deduction for interest on tax deficiencies.

Disallowance of this deduction would strongly encourage corporate taxpayers to truncate administrative proceedings to resolve tax disputes with the Internal Revenue Service, pay asserted tax deficiencies as soon as possible to stop the running of interest, and proceed to court for adjudication of disputed items. At present, the great preponderance of such disputes are resolved at the IRS administrative level. That process works to the advantage of both the government and corporate taxpayers. It would be significantly undermined by the proposed disallowance rule.

The present tax litigation system allows management of approximately 95% of tax disputes at the trial level by the Tax Court. The proposed deduction disallowance would create powerful incentive for corporate taxpayers to litigate their tax cases in the district courts or the Claims Court. It would thereby cause a large shift of tax litigation from the Tax Court, often the forum permitting the most efficient disposition of tax controversies, to the already overburdened district courts and the Claims Court.

Because interest on tax overpayments is taxable to corporations, the proposed deduction disallowance rule would create many possibilities for whipsawing corporate taxpayers. If, for example, the IRS determines a deduction allowable, but attributable to a different year from that claimed by the taxpayer, the interest owing the government by virtue of the shift will be nondeductible, but the interest owing the taxpayer will be taxable. These and other such opportunities for creating nondeductible and taxable interest from the same item exist where there is no dispute whatever about the substantively proper tax treatment of the item in question.

The interest disallowance proposal presents other serious problems. Particularly because of its major impact on tax administration, its considerable and undesirable change of the present system for tax litigation, and the serious imbalances arising from whipsaw possibilities, the Section of Taxation strongly recommends rejection of the proposal.

ANALYSIS

Disallowing the Deduction for Interest on Corporate Tax Deficiencies Would Disrupt Tax Administration

In large corporate cases, the Internal Revenue Service frequently does not begin, much less complete, an audit before the normal statute of limitations expires. Nonetheless, almost all large corporations routinely agree to extend the statute of limitations to enable the IRS to complete a thorough audit. In many cases, audits may not be complete for many years after the statute of limitations otherwise would have expired. After an audit report is issued to the taxpayer, there is a substantial likelihood of IRS appellate consideration, which may take more years to complete, with further extensions of the statute of limitations. The appellate procedure, however, results in a resolution of most tax disputes without litigation. Naturally, interest on any tax deficiency continues to accrue during the entire process.

While the Tax Reform Act of 1986 disallowed individuals' reductions for "personal interest," and Temporary Treasury regulations treat individual interest as "personal" even where it arises from tax deficiencies attributable to business income,[1] corporations differ from individuals in essential tax respects. Corporations are pure business entities, and because all of their expenditures are thefore business expenditures, there is no occasion to distinguish between business and personal expenditures, as there is with individuals. Moreover, because of the practical nature of corporate tax audits—unlike individual audits—tax deficiency interest is commonly in the nature of an ordinary and necessary expense of doing business, in principle deductible without regard to the special Internal Revenue Code deduction for interest.

Disallowing the deduction for this interest would increase the effective interest rate by more than 50% (assuming a 34% tax rate). The state tax impact would make this rate increase even greater. Such an increase in the cost of money would lead corporate taxpayers to refuse extensions of the statute of limitations.

The result would be potentially chaotic for tax administration and for the IRS. The Service does not have sufficient agents to conduct audits on a current basis. Examinations would have to be far less thorough. Resolutions of issues based on an incomplete factual background usually work to the government's disadvantage. A further and severe consequence would be to remove the resolution of most corporate tax controversies from the traditional administrative process designed for that purpose to the more confrontational setting and procedures of litigation.

The Proposal Would Create Large and Undesirable Changes in the Long-Established System for Civil Tax Litigation

Disallowance of the interest deduction will strongly discourage corporate taxpayers from delaying payment and litigating in the Tax Court, which was created for the sole purpose of resolving tax controversies. Instead, such taxpayers ordinarily will pay the disputed tax and sue for refunds in the district courts or the Claims Court.[2] The Tax Court now manages approxiamtely 95 percent of all civil tax cases at the trial level. The shift in the situs of litigation will, therefore, be large. The district courts in particular are already overburdened with litigation, and an inundation of tax cases now handled by the Tax Court would create great difficulties and even further delays in district court dockets.

Disallowing the Deduction for Interest on Tax Deficiencies Will "Whipsaw" Taxpayers

There will be an especially inequitable consequence of denying deductions for interest on tax deficiencies. Many tax adjustments involve merely the timing of an income item or deduction, and others involve allocation of tax items between related corporations. Interest on tax overpayments is taxable income. As a consequence, if the interest deduction is denied, many corporations will be "whipsawed." That is, they will have to pay nondeductible interest from the year of the tax increase, but they will receive taxable interest from the year of the corresponding tax reduction. The same effect will occur when tax items are moved between related corporations.

[1] Treas. Reg. § 1.163-9T(b)(2)(A).

[2] Taxpayers are allowed to make deposits of tax to cut off further interest accruals, while still extending the statute of limitations and preserving Tax Court jurisdiction. See Rev. Proc. 84-58, 1984-2 C.B. 501. They are also allowed to make payments of disputed tax, while preserving the jurisdiction of the Tax Court, if they make the payments after the IRS issues its formal Notice of Deficiency.

Deposits of tax are not frequently made, however, because deposits are returned without interest, and the taxpayer is given no credit for the time the government held the deposit when any interest on taxes is computed later. Further, the proposed deduction disallowance rule will provide a strong incentive for corporate taxpayers to pay disputed taxes as soon as possible—commonly before the formal Notice of Deficiency is issued—and they will thereby forfeit their right to litigate the dispute in the Tax Court.

Enforcement of the Disallowance Rule Will Be Difficult

Interest is deductible by corporations, with only minor exceptions, because for them interest is always business-related. If interest on tax deficiencies becomes nondeductible, corporations will have substantial incentive to reorganize their financing arrangements, obtaining funds from other sources to pay tax deficiencies as soon as possible. This interest will be deductible.[3] Because corporate financing is often complex, involving borrowing from different sources at different rates of interest for a range of purposes, any statutory or regulatory effort to deal with the problem is likely to prove, at the very least, exceedingly difficult to administer. Hence, if corporate deductions for interest on tax deficiencies are disallowed, the real losers would be the IRS administrative resolution process, the Tax Court litigation system, distressed taxpayers with insufficient credit to borrow from third parties, and unwary taxpayers who fall into the trap.

Disallowing the Deduction Would Constitute a New and Inappropriate Penalty

Disallowing the corporate interest deduction would be, in effect, a new penalty, imposed without regard to fault and based mainly upon the length of time it takes to solve the controversy. In the consideration of penalty reform last year, the Internal Revenue Service prepared a massive Report on Civil Tax Penalties. This Report considered and rejected both "no fault" penalties and the use of interest charges and other time-value-of-money concepts in computing penalties. In both cases, the Service concluded that such penalties would be unfair to taxpayers attempting to comply with tax laws in good faith. These conclusions were correct in 1989, and they remain correct today.

Congress adopted these conclusions last year when it reformed the entire structure of penalties under the Internal Revenue Code. The Congressional evaluation of the issue was sound then. It ought to be preserved this year.

Corporations Should Be Permitted To Continue To Deduct Interest on Tax Deficiencies Even Though Individuals Are Not

Individuals have been denied deductions for "personal interest"—interpreted by Temporary Treasury regulations as including tax deficiencies attributable to business income—since the Tax Reform Act of 1986. If the Treasury interpretation is correct, it may seem fair to deny these deductions to corporations as well. But the real world differences between corporations and individuals, both as taxpayers and as borrowers, amply justify this deduction for corporations, even though it is denied to individuals.[4]

Corporations and individuals are subject to vastly different income tax regimes. The differences reflect the fact that corporations are pure business entities. For corporations, unlike individuals, there is no need to distinguish between personal and business expenditures, because corporations have no personal expenditures.

In practice, the tax administration system also affects individuals and corporations differently. For nearly all individuals, a tax audit is an infrequent, isolated event. For corporations, however, audits are likely to be frequent. For many large corporations, tax audits take place on a virtually continuous basis, and for several tax years at once. Thus, for corporations the interest expense on tax deficiencies is in the nature of an ordinary and necessary expense of doing business.

CONCLUSION

Disallowing corporate deductions for interest on tax deficiencies would cause major problems for Internal Revenue Service tax administration and the national court system. It would produce serious inequities for corporations, and it is not justified by the treatment of individual interest. On these grounds, the Section of Taxation strongly recommends that the proposal not be included in the deficit reduction package.

THE GORE-MIKULSKI AMENDMENT

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I voted to waive the Budget Act to permit consideration of the amendment to the reconciliation bill offered by the Senator from Tennessee, Senator GORE and the Senator from Maryland, Senator MIKULSKI.

The amendment would make significant improvements in the fairness of the tax package included in the deficit reduction plan, by reducing the tax burden on the elderly and on the average taxpayer and increasing the share of deficit reduction costs to be borne by wealthier taxpayers. It is for that reason that I support the amendment.

I should note, however, that even with the Gore-Mikulski amendment there would remain serious problems, including a gasoline tax increase even though it would be smaller as a result of the Gore-Mikulski amendment. For this reason I reserve final judgment on approval of the overall budget plan.

ACCELERATED DEATH BENEFITS FOR THE TERMINALLY ILL

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, many victims of terminal illness suffer not only from the disease itself, but from the overwhelming economic consequences of their condition. AIDS patients and those stricken with cancer often lose their jobs. Their health care costs mount. They can't pay their rent. Some become homeless or are forced to forgo life-sustaining or life-improving care. The tragedy of their illness is compounded by the tragedy of economic ruin.

In the past year many life insurance companies have been offering people an advance on their death benefits in the event of a terminal illness to ensure that they will have funds available to pay health care costs, mortgage payments, living expenses, and, in general, allow them to live their final months with dignity and as comfortably as possible. Insurance commissioners in 43 States have now approved the addition of accelerated death benefits to life insurance policies, thereby providing the terminally ill with critical financial resources in their final months.

While death benefits are excluded from income tax under current law, the law needs to be clarified with respect to the payment of accelerated death benefits to the terminally ill. In addition, because the right to receive accelerated death benefits does not significantly alter the fundamental terms or economics of the policy, clarification is needed that the addition of the accelerated death benefit provision, at no cost, will not cause the policies to fail to be treated as life insurance policies for tax purposes.

Mr. President, I understand that the procedures surrounding this budget reconciliation bill have precluded the consideration of the clarification of this tax issue which is important to thousands of terminally ill people throughout the country. I would ask the chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. BENTSEN, if, at the earliest possible date, his committee could consider this needed and worthwhile tax clarification.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am aware of the accelerated death benefits issue and of its importance for those Americans affected. Let me say to the Senator from Connecticut that I applaud his efforts in helping the terminally ill and I assure him that I will look closely at this issue as soon as possible in the next Congress.

THE DAC PERCENTAGES

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, a great deal of concern has been expressed by the Members of this Chamber over the $8 billion to be raised from the life insurance industry and its millions of policyholders through the so-called DAC proposal. A number of our colleagues are concerned that an increase in the tax of up to 50 percent on some companies is excessive, and might threaten the financial vitality of some of those companies.

As you know, at least 13 members of the Committee on Finance were prepared to offer an amendment during committee deliberations to lower the applicable DAC percentages. Unfortunately, our ability to act on this important issue was affected by our inability to receive official revenue estimates on certain compliance measures.

[3] Interest on this borrowing will be deductible as it accrues, even if it is not paid currently. By contrast, under the law as it now exists, interest on tax deficiencies is deductible only (1) after the amounts of the deficiency and the interest are determined, or (2) if the tax is contested, the taxpayer remits the tax and interest to the Service and does not designate the remittance as a deposit in the nature of a cash bond. Rev. Rul. 89-6, 1989-1 C.B. 119. Thus, this process would actually accelerate interest deductions.

[4] There is little relevant legislative history on this part of the 1986 Act. One explanation frequently advanced for including interest on income tax deficiencies in the general denial of the individual interest deduction, however, is that, if an individual borrowed from a third party to pay an income tax liability, the interest on such a loan would be for a personal and therefore nondeductible purpose. This rationale has no relevance in the corporate context, since corporations generally make only business expenditures, and since there is no distinction between personal and other types of corporate interest deductions.

From my conversations with the chairman, Mr. President, I know that he shares many of the same concerns. I think I speak for many of my colleagues when I urge him during conference to attempt to lower the applicable DAC percentages as much as possible.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Arkansas for his work in this area and assure him and the other members of this Chamber that I intend to make an effort, to the extent possible, to reduce the applicable DAC percentages for the life insurance industry.

THE DAC PERCENTAGES

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I understand that the so-called DAC provisions of the bill will increase the tax on the life insurance industry by about $8 billion over the years 1991-95. I am opposed to the DAC proposal. It was not thoroughly considered, no hearings were held by either the House or the Senate. It is arbitrary and its arbitrariness will undoubtedly harm some companies and do so to the advantage of their competitors.

As proposed in this bill the DAC tax has immediate oppressive consequences for hundreds of active life insurance companies. It will seriously impact their ability to keep operating. In its current form it could bankrupt scores of companies which are already queasy due to their holdings of junk bonds and real estate.

Now is not the time to load up the taxes of the life insurance industry. The proposed tax has nothing to do with deferred acquistion costs. It is simply a flat-out annual gross premiums tax making the life insurance industry the only industry subject to tax both on gross revenues and full net operating income. This is especially unfair with respect to existing fixed premium contracts since the companies cannot price the new taxes into their product.

Five major property and casualty insurance companies which also sell a considerable amount of life insurance have recently been listed by citizens watch as companies which have poor investment portfolios and, should we experience several small or one or two major natural disasters, could go into bankruptcy. Now is not the time to hammer these companies and this industry with a DAC. After our savings and loan crisis, and our bank failures, we do not need the Government trying to kick the teeth out of the life insurance industry.

The life insurance industry has been singled out to shoulder a disproportionate share of the corporate tax burden in this budget agreement.

No other industry in America is forced by Congress to absorb an annual Federal income tax increase of nearly 50 percent.

By denying life insurance companies a current deduction for their selling expenses, a death blow is dealt to the small independent insurance salesman.

The life insurance industry will have to absorb an unfair 6 percent of the new taxes in this budget package. The President said that the burden of this tax package should be fair for any one group and should not be excessive for any one group. This new tax more than exceeds that definition of fairness.

The problem with this DAC tax is that it is simply a revenue raising proposal. The budget negotiators could not find the $8 billion anywhere else so they took it out of the insurance industry. Life insurance tax rates are in line with other segments of the financial community and in many cases, higher.

A DAC proposal will make life insurance products noncompetitive. The increased cost on life insurance to consumers will cause many to not save for their future and not to invest in the future of America.

In short, this proposal only reduces the financial protection and retirement savings available for American families. It reduces savings available for long-term investment in our economy and results in fewer jobs in the life insurance business.

The new DAC tax has been lowered from $16 billion to $8 billion as proponents point out and we are supposed to convince that industry how sympathetic the Congress has been in halving the original proposal. Mr. President, half of a bad proposal, a proposal which should not have been proposed at all, is still half of a bad deal—which is not made right by cutting it back. Half of the wrong medicine is still the wrong medicine and will perhaps only make the patient a little less sick—but half the wrong medicine can also kill the patient.

I believe this proposal should be dropped from the bill or at a minimum significantly reduced. We should revisit the insurance tax issue next year in the next Congress with full hearings and all options explored for creating a fair and equitable system for the entire industry, both mutual companies and stock insurance companies.

FLOOR STOCKS TAX PROVISION

Mr. FORD. First, I would like to thank my colleague for his assistance in reforming the method for applying the floor stocks tax on tobacco products contained in the Finance Committee budget reconciliation package. As the chairman knows, the floor stocks tax provision enacted in 1982 exempted retailers from the tax, which had an unintended detrimental impact on tobacco distributors. I also appreciate my colleague's assistance in extending the payment time for the floor stocks tax.

However, my constituents, particularly my small distributors, remain concerned that the method for assessing the tax is burdensome. The so-called snapshop assessment, which taxes the distributor's inventory as of a certain date, forces distributors to minimize their inventory as of the specified date. This causes a potential clog in the chain of distribution system, distributors are unable to pass along the cost of the tax and effectively must fund the tax themselves. Because the operating margin is so small in this business, the distributor often must borrow the funds to meet the floor stocks tax obligation.

I would ask the chairman to continue his efforts to ensure equitable treatment of retailers and distributors and to delay payment of the floor stocks tax. In addition, I would appreciate his consideration of alternative methods of assessing this tax which would avoid the disruption in distribution that occurs when distributors, and now retailers, are forced to minimize inventory.

Would the chairman be willing to consider this situation in conference on the budget reconciliation measure?

Mr. BENTSEN. As the Senator knows, I am aware of this situation and sympathetic to the problems faced by distributors. As he notes, the Finance Committee bill makes considerable progress on that point. Although it is unclear what the revenue impact of such a change would be, I appreciate the Senator's raising this issue at this time, and will review this provision of the conference with the House on this measure.

Mr. FORD. I thank my distinguished colleague for his continued willingness to work on this issue.

FISCAL YEAR 1991 BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT AND HEALTH MEASURES

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the 1991 Budget Reconciliation Act.

This bill, just like the budget summit agreement that failed on October 5, shortsightedly contains the largest tax increase in history. I opposed the budget because, as you probably already know too well, the average American taxpayer already works until May 5 of every year to pay his or her tax bill. Never before have taxpayers had to work for the Government for such a long time, and yet the Democrats in Congress are trying to force a tax increase on us so that they can spend more.

It is discouraging and almost frightening to realize that, inspite of the tax increases of the 1980's—yes, tax increases—Congress has heaped $1.6 trillion on to the national debt. That is bigger than our national budget has ever been. And, yet, when Congress sits down at the bargaining table to cut the deficit, the first proposal is the easy way out—a tax increase.

That's why these summits between congressional leaders and the President never work. We have had 6 tax-increasing budget summits since 1983, but the deficit fell only in years when there was no summit and no new taxes. History shows that in deals that supposedly swap tax increases for cuts in spending, the spending cuts never materialize. Foist a heavier tax burden on the American public and Congress just uses the new taxes for new spending on programs we don't need or want.

Moreover, not since World War II have we raised taxes to over 19.6 percent of GNP—as the current package certainly will—without tipping the economy into recession. We cannot justify a tax increase. Annual tax collections are already a third higher now than in the 1960's and 1970's but spending has grown even faster.

As far as I am concerned, we need to eliminate waste, inefficiency, and mismanagement before we even consider raising taxes. This package is 0 for 3, and yet the Democrats are still pushing for the largest tax increase in history? As far as I am concerned, the budget process is completely broke and never has it been more obvious. We need a line-item veto, like the one I have introduced and have been working to enact along with over 40 public interest groups and citizens action organizations. We need a balance budget amendment and a host of other reform measures—none of which are included in this bill.

I am strongly committed to deficit reduction, and I am as worried as any parent or grandparent about the legacy this profligacy will leave, but I do not think we have to compromise our economic well-being when there are so many programs that we can eliminate or restructure.

With regard to this bill, I am also concerned that it contains proposals that result in reducing benefits for Medicare beneficiaries and dramatically increasing their out-of-pocket health care costs. There is no question that health care costs are rising at phenominal rates—and have been for some number of years now. But, in my opinion, dramatically increasing seniors out-of-pocket costs and failing to do serious reforms to slow the growth of health care costs will only ensure that we are back in their pockets looking for more again next year.

In addition, I am concerned that the ultimate effect of capping domestic spending growth at 4 percent will have on Medicare premiums and deductibles for our Nation's elderly. If I understand this concept correctly, when health care costs rise in the double digits next year, as they have been for nearly 10 years now, we will have to either increase premiums paid by the elderly or reduce services—both of which will have negative consequences on our Nation's elderly, who are trying to make ends meet on a fixed income.

Lastly, I am concerned that this bill does not truly take Social Security off-budget and out of the budget deficit calculations. For some time, Mr. President, I have been advocating taking the reserves in the Social Security trust funds off-budget and out of the budget deficit calculations. I believe we must do so in order to be honest about our Nation's budgetary situation and to protect the trust funds so that it might be there to provide benefits for both today's retirees and tomorrow's. It is for that reason that I am joining with Senators HEINZ and HOLLINGS an amendment to this bill to take Social Security off-budget and out of the budget deficit calculations.

Even though I have some very serious problems with this budget reconciliation bill, for the reasons I have just outlined, there are a number of provisions—in the health area, particularly—that I strongly support. In fact, I am not only a strong supporter of these proposals, I helped author some of them. I would just like to briefly touch on a couple of them.

First, I am pleased to see that this bill proposes elimination of the urban/rural differential in Medicare payments to hospitals. For several years now, I have been arguing that the policy of paying rural hospitals less than urban hospitals for the same service just does not make sense. The reason being that about the only thing that is cheaper for a rural hospital, than an urban hospital, is land. In fact, many things are much more costly for rurals than urbans. For example, the recruitment and retention costs for nurses and doctors can often exceed those of an urban facility. The equipment needs of urban and rural hospitals are the same. But, often it costs more in a rural area to get equipment repaired because the parts aren't right at hand. And, in many cases, a rural hospital may have to pay for travel, if not lodging, for the repair person if he or she has to travel far in coming to the facility. We have been narrowing the differential for a coupie of years now. I am pleased to see that this package bites the bullet and finally eliminates the differential—something which I believe should have been done long ago.

Second, I am pleased this package contains an expansion of the hospice program under Medicare. This program is a critical care option for those in our population who become critically ill. I have long been an advocate and supporter of the hospice program. In fact, I have proposed that the expansion contained in the now repealed Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act be restored. The expansion contained in this package is a much needed benefit for a very critically ill segment of our population, who deserve our assistance in providing them with affordable care and a comfortable, caring environment in which to spend their remaining days.

Third, I applaud the Finance Committee for including the text of two bills I sponsored—one with Senator HEINZ and the other with Senator BENTSEN—to improve the care for those with end stage renal disease, and make the care more readily available.

One of the provisions will provide Medicare reimbursement for home use of the drugs necessary to the stability of an individual with end stage renal disease.

The second provision will restore Medicare coverage of staff-assisted home dialysis services for those who are too sick to go into a facility to get dialyzed, cannot provide the service for themselves at home, or simply are unable to physically get to a facility. I am particularly pleased that this provision was included, as last year Congress overreacted to an abuse of the previous staff-assisted benefit by eliminating the benefit all together—rather than dealing with the specific abuse of the benefit. This led a number of very sick individuals to be placed in a life threatening situation where they could not get care. I personally intervened on behalf of a number of Arizonans in this situation, in terms of helping them get care. And, as a result, joined with Senator HEINZ in offering a bill to fix the problem—restoring the beneift for those who truly need it. And, it is this proposal that has been incorporated in this package.

Fourth, I am pleased to see that the Finance Committee included in this budget reconciliation a proposal that I offered with Senator DANFORTH to require that hospitals inform their patients of living wills and medical directives upon their admission for care. In my view, this is a very important proposal.

It is shocking to most Americans that were you to go into a hospital for an operation, and something were to go wrong and you ended up in a persistent vegitative state, that care would most likely not be discontinued—even at the request of a loved one—unless you had formally made your wishes known before hand. And, it must have been done in the form of a formal living will and an advanced medical directive. This has been the subject of a number of lawsuits. As uncomfortable a subject as this is, I believe it is important that Americans are educated about this issue, and I believe that one of the appropriate places and times is on admission to a hospital.

Again, Mr. President, I am not able to in good conscience vote for this bill because of my very strong concerns about the tax and spend thrust of this bill and the fact that it does not include any serious budget reforms. Having said that, I wanted it to be known that there are some provisions in this package that I am in very strong support of.

BUDGET RECONCILIATION: CHILD CARE

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, a lot of attention has been paid to how this budget package affects the rich, how it affects the poor, how it affects truckers and farmers, and most of all how it affects seniors. Very little time has been spent asking ourselves what this package does for children and perhaps more importantly, what our inability to reduce the budget deficit means for our children and our grandchildren.

No one talks about the fact that every 53 minutes an American child dies because of poverty, that every 47 seconds a child is abused or neglected, every 26 seconds a child runs away from home, and everyday 719 babies are born with low birth weight. No one talks about how we have so neglected children in this country that they now make up the poorest segment of our society.

Mr. President, we are failing our children, and failing our future. It is time to think about those who cannot speak for themselves and to think about what is best for this country by reaffirming our commitment to the value we place on children and the well-being of future generations.

It is this reason, Mr. President, that I am pleased that, at the last moment, agreement was reached to add to Reconciliation a compromise agreement between President Bush and the Senate leadership on child care. For almost 3 years now we have been battling back and forth on the issue of child care. All this time, the children of this country have been waiting.

I believe the package before us today is a good one. I say this as the only member in the Senate on both committees which worked on this legislation. I had serious concerns that it did not go far enough on parental choice, that it was bureaucratic in nature, and that it set stringent standards that many family day care providers wouldn't be able to meet. I was also the author of the Ford-Durenberger amendment that lifted the restrictions on participation by religious institutions—institutions that provide over one-third of all child care in this country.

But to the credit and dedication of Senator DODD, Senator HATCH, and President Bush, the compromise before us is a very good one and will provide a solid foundation for assisting families with their child care needs into the next century. The compromise is two-fold. The overall proposal provides just over $15 billion over 5 years for child care split 80-20 between tax credits and direct block grants. That is 80 percent direct money into parents pockets to assist with child care of their choice. The tax proposal includes three proposals one of which eliminates the bias within the current dependent care tax credit by making it refundable. Another amends the Earned Income Tax Credit Program to account for family size and a third establishes a new family health insurance credit.

Another portion of the proposal establishes a new block grant program of which at least 10 percent is reserved to improve the quality of child care—an area that 97 percent of parents recently surveyed said was their top priority. Another 10 percent of this will be reserved for early childhood development programs and latchkey programs. The remaining 75 percent of the funds will be reserved for direct assistance, either through grants, contracts or certificates to assist low-income families meet their child care needs. Overall this new block grant streamlines a lot of the bureaucracy of the original proposal while maintaining the ability of States to establish a quality child care program in their state.

The time for action is long overdue. The need to help families is just too great to go another year without addressing this problem. In my State of Minnesota alone, 4,800 working families are on county waiting lists for the state sliding-fee program. Many of the social service workers are advising low-income families to go on AFDC—where we guaranteed child care assistance as part of the Family Support Act—to get child care. This is simply wrong.

So, Mr. President, I want to thank my good friends from Connecticut and Utah for their many hours of work to ensure that our children do not have to wait another year. And I am pleased that inclusion of this proposal is a step forward out of the "Me Generation" and giving something to the future.

BUDGET RECONCILIATION

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, like all of my colleagues, I have been watching the budget deliberations closely over the past few weeks. I have been impressed by the long hours that so many people have devoted to this issue and the willingness to put forward unpopular proposals, which, in the case of some of them, is the nicest thing that can be said about them.

I commend the work of the two leaders, Senator DOLE and Senator MITCHELL. They have had the unique honor of being urged by their membership to work out a deal only to be castigated for cutting a deal behind closed doors. We are like the character in the movie "Casablanca" who expressed shock at the casino's gambling just before being handed his winnings.

The summit agreement, despite all the hemming and hawing and gnashing of teeth, was a good start. Congress and the White House committed to real and substantial spending cuts over the next 5 years. I stop a bit short of crediting the agreement with $500 billion in deficit reduction. The economic assumptions seem a bit beyond wishful thinking.

But as a practical and political matter, I do not think we are going to get a very different mix of spending cuts and revenue increases than those contained in the budget summit agreement and subsequent proposals. I can support those goals, and I think it is incumbent on any Senator or any proposal to stick to the same targets, $40 billion in savings next year and $500 billion over 5 years.

Despite my problems with this piece or that piece of the budget summit agreement, I would have voted for it. As we all know, that agreement was just an outline. It was and is up to us to fill in the blanks.

That said, I do not think we should be bound to every single proposal that the summit or the summiteers or the tax committees have seen fit to make.

My job is to represent the people of Vermont, not please people in Washington. In representing Vermonters, I have no illusions that I will please them. They do not want their taxes increased, and they do not want worthwhile Government services reduced. But I think they understand the need for some combination of the two in order to get the deficit under control. All they ask, indeed all Americans ask in general, is that the burden be shared fairly.

I think the specifics of the budget summit agreement fell short of being fair. Quite frankly, the budget summit produced some lousy decisions. We do not need tax breaks for oil producers, especially at a time when oil is at $40 a barrel. And we do not need to tax home heating oil when prices are skyrocketing and Government support for low income fuel purchases is dropping like a stone. And we do not need to take it out of the hides of Medicare recipients.

I am not saying Medicare should be immune from spending restraint. But it need not bear the brunt of entitlement savings. Nor should we have stuck it to the unemployed by delaying their unemployment checks. Few enough people qualify for unemployment as it is; the 2-week delay would have exacerbated the problem.

As a general matter, I was disappointed by the allocation of spending reductions. Agriculture and other accounts took a relatively large cut, while defense and foreign aid went virtually untouched.

While I support the exclusion of the cost of Operation Desert Shield from the budget calculations due to the uncertainty of the gulf situation, I do not understand why the negotiators did not take advantage of the changes in world climate to ask the military to contribute its share to deficit reduction.

Unfortunately, the resolution enshrined the level of spending recommended by the Senate Armed Services Committee and ignored the considerably lower House of Representatives numbers. The summiteers have preempted the normal legislative process that, in this case, would probably have resulted in lower spending figures than those contained in this agreement. During Senate consideration of the defense bill, I supported several amendments that would have reduced spending for the B-2 bomber and SDI. A substantial number of my Senate colleagues agreed with these cuts, and it was assumed that spending would be cut in some categories during negotiations with the House.

It is high time the Pentagon realizes that the clash of military might is giving way worldwide to the clash of economic might and the advantages of moral leadership. The whole point of this budget agreement is to restore the economic health of the Nation. This is where our national strength is most in need of resuscitation. Tying up our resources with a commitment to buy more military hardware in fiscal years 1992-95 instead of investing in economic development and human capital is inviting international irrelevance.

But perhaps most important were the proposed tax increases. I may be dating myself, but I am one Republican who believes the tax code should be progressive. I suppose it is good politics to suggest the other guy's proposal is raising taxes while mine is not. But they all raise taxes. The question is how they go about it.

They all seem to share in common a propensity to tax through the back door. We are faced with a veritable feast of excise taxes—on gas, beer, cigarettes, telephones—you name it. We'll disallow some deductions, and stick it to the insurance industry. For a while we were even going to slap an excise tax on $9,000 fur coats until we decided that they were a staple, not a luxury.

Vermonters do not like taxes anymore than anyone else. But I think they do want us to be straightforward. Rather than a covey of little taxes hiding in the underbrush, I think they want to know who is going to pay what to solve the deficit. Maybe that is only to take a bead on us, but that is their due.

We can only estimate at who will bear the burden; whether the rich, the poor, or the middle class. Various studies have been produced to show the progressivity of the various proposals. Not knowing the assumptions that have gone into such studies, I am reluctant to comment on their absolute value. But I suspect, and have seen no evidence to the contrary, that they do give us a relative perspective between the competing proposals.

By this standard, the budget summit agreement flunks, and the Senate Finance package gets only a C. Nobody is going to graduate with high honors, but several of the other proposals under consideration offer more progressive alternatives.

Do I want to soak the rich? Of course not. But if somebody's going to get wet, I would rather it be the rich than the poor.

I am not convinced that a slight increase in the marginal tax rates of those people making $200,000 or more a year will reduce their efforts to try to make more money.

Lord knows Congress did not cut short its pay raise to avoid the 33-percent bracket.

Thus I support extending the 33 percent tax bracket, or "bursting the bubble." If the couple making under $100,000 can live with it, so can the couple making more than $200,000. In my judgment, this proposal makes more sense, for the people of Vermont and the country.

It certainly makes more sense than the alternatives. Although the conventional wisdom is that the Northeast is a "winner" under a gas tax, Vermont is a big loser. We are the second most rural State in the Nation. Mass transit is almost nonexistent as we simply do not have the population density to support it. People have to drive long distances just to get to work, to the store, or to the doctor.

What is worse, the wisdom of the summiteers was to change the highway trust fund formula and divert half the new receipts from the gas tax away from the trust fund. Simply put, that is highway robbery. With roads cracking and bridges crumbling we sure as heck do not need to rob money from the highway trust fund.

That is not to say that I or anyone embrace all the particulars of one package or another. I think we should extend the expiring revenue provisions contained in the Senate Finance proposal. The Mortgage Revenue Bond Program, the educational assistance deduction, the research credit, the alternative energy credit—they are all valuable and I support almost every one of them. The child care provisions, while they leave an awful lot to be desired, are on balance positive changes.

But taken as a whole, I think the Finance Committee package taxes too much through the back door and asks too much of Americans with moderate means. I hope the conference report which we will be faced with in the next few days will bring a greater degree of fairness to the tax code, and to the sacrifices that the public must make. That is the least I owe to my constituents, and we owe to the American people.

INCOME TAX RATES AND LIMITATIONS ON ITEMIZED DEDUCTIONS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the bill provision which limits itemized deductions for taxpayers with incomes above $100,000 is a subterfuge, a deception.

The claim is made by many that the Senate bill does not raise the income tax rate. It does—by disguise. For those taxpayers in the bubble already paying at the 33 percent rate, the deduction limitation raises their tax rate by almost 2 percentage points—1.65 percent. For those higher income taxpayers above the bubble, paying at 28 percent, the itemized deduction limitation raises their tax rate by 1.4 percent—to 29.4 percent.

The bubble is exacerbated—it is double bubble. It creates a large relative tax increase for taxpayers caught in the bubble as compared to wealthier taxpayers above the bubble. For example, a couple earning $150,000 that loses deductions under this proposal will pay taxes on the additional taxable income at the rate of 33 percent, whereas a couple making $500,000 will pay taxes on the additional income at a rate of 28 percent. This makes the inequities of the bubble worse.

To repeat: income tax rates go up under the Senate bill; but only in a way that is difficult to see. This kind of deception is not worthy of this body. It is designed to give cover to some, who want to be able to claim that we aren't raising the tax rate. We are, and no one should claim otherwise.

When you limit the deduction for State and local taxes, you violate a sacred principle against double taxation. You also violate federalism. Should we really be so willing to sacrifice these principles in order to make the claim—patently false—that we have'nt raised rates.

If we take the approach of limiting deductions, even by 5 percent for high income taxes, we will soon make a further encroachment. This is clearly a case of the "camel's nose under the tent." Look at what's happened already: the budget summit called for a 3-percent disallowance of deductions, 2 weeks later we are already at 5 percent.

There is a serious marriage penalty in the proposal. The 5-percent limitation applies when income exceeds $100,000. The threshold is $100,000, regardless of whether it is a single person making $100,000 or a married couple together making $100,000.

Finally, Mr. President, the complexity of this proposal should not be overlooked. Some itemized deductions—some, not all, and you have to check which—are not allowed. Investment interest, yes. Casualty losses, yes. Medical expenses, yes. But State and local taxes, no. Home mortgage interest, no. Charitable contributions, no. And this disallowance only applies for some taxpayers, if income exceeds a certain point. And then what? You have to figure out how much they are disallowed. How much? Five percent of the amount by which income exceeds $100,000. And people wonder how it is that the Internal Revenue Code has doubled in length since the early 1970's. And this complexity serves absolutely no useful purpose—save the political one of being able to claim, if one is audacious enough, that income tax rates haven't been raised. We should have more respect for the intelligence of the American taxpayer.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I oppose the motion to waive the Budget Act in order to consider the Mitchell/Dole amendment. In addition to a general concern about consideration of a substantial and far-reaching amendment such as this one with relatively little debate, I have at least two specific concerns.

First, I believe that it is unwise to "bake-in" spending priorities for the next 3 years, as is done in this amendment. The enormous changes throughout the world in the past year should warn us about the dangers of establishing such levels so far in advance.

Second, this amendment renders the Gramm-Rudman discipline toothless for the next 3 years. The looseness of the budget process set up by this amendment will lead to even greater deficits, I'm afraid.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am going to vote against the budget plan now before the Senate.

Mr. President, the need for deficit reduction is apparent to all. It is urgent. It is critical. We must do something to get control of our country's debt and our Nation's future. And we must do it soon.

I am committed to reducing our deficit and I have supported proposals to do so. Just this year, we in the Senate Budget Committee developed a budget resolution that would have reduced the deficit by about $54 billion in fiscal year 1991. That is significantly more than the $40 billion called for in the summit agreement.

Reducing the deficit is vital. But it is equally important that we do so in a forward-thinking, growth-promoting, and fair manner. As serious a disease as the deficit is, we should not accept a treatment that makes other societal problems even worse.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill because it lacks fairness. It penalizes middle class, working Americans. Penalizes the elderly. And penalizes the future of our country.

Mr. President, ordinary, middle class people in my State of New Jersey are adjusting to a significant change in the State tax structure. Our economy is struggling. Working New Jerseyans are hard pressed to pay their mortgages. Hard pressed to save for their children's education. Hard pressed to keep their heads above water.

Mr. President, when these people hear that the President and some in Congress want to reduce the deficit they agree. But when they are asked to carry the lion's share of the load with taxes that are targeted at them, they get angry. Very angry. And, Mr. President, so do I.

Mr. President, the average American family has suffered under an increasingly regressive tax system for too long. Over the past decade, much of the burden of paying taxes has been shifted—from the rich to the middle class. It is an outrageous development with unpleasant results.

According to one recent study, the wealthiest 1 percent of the population—those with incomes of $549,000 each—will pay an average of $82,196 less in Federal tax this year compared to what they would have paid under the tax system in effect before 1978. That works out to a 36-percent tax cut. Meanwhile, Mr. President, 9 out of 10 other Americans have had their taxes increased.

The cost of the huge tax breaks for the wealthy, Mr. President, are enormous. In 1990 alone, according to that study, the breaks given to the top 1 percent of the population are costing the Treasury $85 billion.

Think about that, Mr. President. We are looking at a plan that claims to achieve $40 billion in deficit reduction in the first year—$40 billion through things like higher taxes on gas. And cuts in Medicare for our elderly.

Yet if instead we treated the richest of the rich the same way they were treated about 13 years ago, we reportedly could have reduced the deficit more than twice as much as this plan provides.

Mr. President, I am not advocating a return to the tax policies of 13 years ago. But I think these statistics show that the Reagan tax cuts left us with a legacy of inequity. And this bill keeps much of that inequity locked in place.

Mr. President, this bill is better than the summit agreement. It is somewhat more progressive. But it still places too high a tax burden on the middle class. We can do better. And the Democrats in the House have shown us one way how. For example, the Senate plan would increase taxes on those with incomes between $40,000 and $50,000 by 2.8 percent. By contrast, the House Democratic plan would involve a much smaller 0.8 percent increase for these people.

One of the reasons why the House package treats the middle class more fairly, is that it asks the richest of the rich to pay their fair share as well. The House bill asks those with incomes of $200,000 or more to pay 63 percent of the tax increase, according to one study, while asking those with incomes under $50,000 to pay 11 percent of the increase. Yet the bill before us today asks those wealthy Americans to bear only 24 percent of the tax increase, while those with incomes under $50,000 must pay 34 percent of the increase, more than three times the relative share in the House package.

Mr. President, enough already. The middle class has been squeezed for too long. It is time to stand up for them. It is time to make the Tax Code more fair. And this package falls far short.

In fact, Mr. President, not only does this package propose additional taxes on the middle class, it also includes needless tax breaks for special business or financial interests. While average Americans would pay more for their gas, the energy industry would actually get significant new tax breaks—$3.5 billion worth of tax breaks.

Mr. President, how can we in good conscience ask hard pressed middle class families to pay more to commute to work, more to drive their children to school, more to drive to the supermarket for food. And then turn around and give a huge tax break to big oil companies?

Mr. President, that's not fair. It is not right. And I am not going to support it.

Mr. President, I am also particularly concerned about the Medicare cuts that are included in this bill. We have been swinging the budget ax at Medicare for years. And if we approve the kind of cuts called for in this agreement, it is our senior citizens who will be bloodied.

A $50 billion cut in Medicare, Mr. President, is a significant cut. It will have a real impact on New Jersey's hospitals, which are already strained to the breaking point. And it places new burdens on those people who happen to be both elderly and sick.

Mr. President, it does not make sense to target these people for such deep cuts. Many of them are already struggling. Millions live week to week, on fixed incomes, with little or no financial security.

So, Mr. President, it is obvious this agreement is unfair to working, middle class Americans. And also unfair to senior citizens.

It also clouds the future of this country.

Mr. President, while the tax burden has been shifted from the rich to the middle class over the past decade, there has been another important shift. We have taken enormous resources away from initiatives designed to help ordinary Americans at home. And shifted piles of money to the Pentagon.

Let us get a little perspective, Mr. President. In 1980, at the heart of the cold war, soon after the Soviet Union had invaded Afghanistan, this country spent a total of $134 billion on defense.

Under the plan before us today, not even including the costs of Operation Desert Shield, defense spending would be locked in for 1991 at $298 billion. Then, on top of that, add another $11.5 billion for our operations in the Middle East.

So we have gone from $134 billion to almost $310 billion in just 10 years. Mr. President, even taking inflation into account, that's an enormous increase.

But while spending on the Pentagon has exploded, what has happened to those programs that are designed to help Americans build strength at home, with their families, in their neighborhoods, in their towns and cities.

Well, Mr. President, 10 years ago domestic discretionary spending constituted 23 percent of the Federal budget. Today it constitutes 11.9 percent. We have seen real cuts in education, in housing, in community development. We have failed to maintain our physical infrastructure, and we continue to neglect the needs of America's infants and children.

In a nutshell, Mr. President, we have underinvested in this Nation's future. While we have continued to build more excess into our military machine.

That has got to change. The American people know that.

But this administration wants to freeze these skewed priorities into place. And that is what this bill does. While barely cutting defense, it places virtually insurmountable procedural obstacles on future efforts to shift priorities from defense to domestic programs. That, Mr. President, is unacceptable.

So, Mr. President, we have a budget plan before us that hits working, middle class Americans and the elderly disproportionately. That gives wasteful tax breaks to favored special interests. That continues overfunding of the Pentagon and underinvesting in America's future. And that locks all this into concrete for several years.

Mr. President, that is why I cannot support this plan.

Let me add, Mr. President, that I have voted for amendments to this package that were defeated, but that would have improved the bill and moved it toward the type of legislation I could support. For example, I supported an amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], which would have reduced the tax burden on the middle class, reduced the Medicare cuts included in this bill, and asked the wealthiest Americans to bear a larger share of the tax burden. Similarly, I supported an amendment by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], which would have eliminated the increase in the Medicare deductible, and asked millionaires to pay a modest surcharge to pay for it.

Unfortunately, one of the most significant elements of this bill, the language reforming the budget process, was made available to most Senators only a few hours ago. As a result, most Members could not possibly be familiar with its details and there has been very little public input.

Mr. President, this is a terrible way to set national priorities. How can it be that in a democracy, the total amount of spending for domestic and defense programs, the fundamental direction of the Government, is being set for the next 3 years with so little debate and improvements?

Mr. President, as strongly as I disagree with the substance of this bill, I know the majority leader, the chairmen of the Appropriations and Budget Committees, and others have worked long and hard on an agreement with the administration. I also know that many believe that the Congress has to go along with the essence of that agreement in order to ensure that the President will sign the bill.

Respectfully, though, I must say that I see matters differently. The summit agreement has been repudiated by the American people and their Representatives in the Congress. It has been repudiated strongly, unambiguously, and in a bipartisan fashion. There is no question about that.

So, Mr. President, I simply disagree that we in Congress still owe an allegiance to that summit agreement. I think Congress should stand up for what we believe in. I think we should stand up for fairness. If we do, the American people will back us up.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, it is not easy to come to the floor of the Senate and cast a vote in favor of raising taxes on the American people. Nor was it easy for the President to turn away from his campaign pledge not to raise taxes. But the President and the members of the Senate and the House were not elected to make only the easy decisions and to turn away from the difficult choices. The faith of the American people in their government, sorely tested in recent weeks, can only be preserved if we are willing to make the hard choices that the times demand. And today is one of those days when hard choices can no longer be avoided.

Mr. President, this country is facing a crisis of governance. Our ability to finance the social, economic, and defense needs of our country is being seriously undermined. For nearly a generation, we have lived on credit. Our national debt tripled in the past decade. We opted to pass on to our children and our children's children the fiscal profligacy that historians will judge us by. But the credit card economy cannot sustain itself forever. The time of paying up our bills, meeting our obligations, and getting this fiscal house in order has arrived.

Make no mistake, the tax and spending reduction package that we will shortly be voting on represents but a single step toward restoring budget solvency and sanity to the Federal Government. It is surely not the last time that we will be called upon to approve reductions in Federal spending and increases in revenues. As I interpret the numbers in this budget, it appears to me that we will need to have a budget reconciliation bill next year, and the year after, and the year after for as far as the eye can see. For there is no doubt in this Senator's mind that after accumulating more than $3 trillion in debt, we are not going to make real progress toward a balanced budget by a single stroke of a pen on a 5-year $500 billion budget bill.

Just look at the deficit targets we are aiming to reach over the next 5 years: $205 billion in 1991; $197 billion in 1992; $169 billion in 1993; $111 billion in 1994, and $63 billion in 1995. If you add up the numbers and look at the realties of this package, what you see is that the deficits that will accumulate over the next 5 years will total more than $745 billion. In other words, we will add at least three quarters of a trillion dollars in additional debt to the already staggering 1990 Federal debt of $3.2 trillion.

Mr. President, the numbers I have just quoted are the best case numbers. They take into account a set of economic assumptions that assumes that short-term Treasury rates will decline to 5.7 percent in 1992 and then fall to 4.4 percent in 1994. They assume economic growth of 3.8 percent in 1992, 4.1 percent in 1993, and 3.7 percent in 1994. I hope we achieve those results. But I certainly am not confident that that will be the outcome. Five year budget forecasts are notoriously inaccurate. They fail to account for minor adjustments in economic trends that when factored into a 5 trillion dollar economy can produce swings in the budget deficit of $100 billion to $200 billion.

Just look at this year's economic forecasting. At the beginning of the year, we were presented with a set of numbers which suggested that with some minor revenue and programmatic changes, the fiscal year 1991 budget deficit would be $64 billion. Five months later, in May, those numbers were out the window. By July, the Congressional Budget Office was projecting that the fiscal year 1990 budget deficit would be $195 billion, and the fiscal year 1991 deficit would be $232 billion. Now in October, CBO has indicated to my staff that the $195 billion projection made in July is, in reality, closer to $220 billion, and the fiscal year 1991 deficit could be over a quarter trillion dollars. So as far as I am concerned, the economic assumptions underlying this budget have little, if any, credibility. What this package is, is simply a down payment. Even if this package is adopted, we're not even close to being out of the woods as far as the Federal budget deficit is concerned and we're certainly not going to come close to balancing the budget in the next 5 years.

Mr. President, the staggering deficit numbers I have just described tell only one-half of the story. If we really want to give the American public an honest look at the size of this deficit, we need look only to the 5-year debt ceiling extension that we in the Finance Committee approved as part of this package. At the end of 5 years, if all goes well under this budget agreement, the national debt of the United States will have increased from $3.2 trillion to just over $5 trillion. And the reason for this huge increase in debt is because we continue to use "pay-as-you-go" trust fund program surpluses to mask the true size of the Federal budget deficit.

For more than 2 years, many members of this body, especially Senators MOYNIHAN and HEINZ, have tried to bring about a sense of "Truth in Budgeting," by getting Congress to exclude the Social Security surpluses from calculating the Gramm-Rudman targets. This budget agreement takes a step in that direction, but it does not go far enough. The proposed Gramm-Rudman targets exclude Social Security operating surpluses. But interest accrued by the Social Security trust funds are not deemed a part of the operating surpluses. As a result, interest that should be credited to the trust fund is being included in the operating budget of the Government for purposes of the Gramm-Rudman targets. This is just another example of the type of fiscal chicanery that leaves everyone in the country with a sense of cynicism about how Washington avoids honestly dealing with its fiscal responsibilities.

Moreover, Mr. President, if we excluded all Federal Government trust fund surpluses—Social Security, Medicare part A-Hospital, the Highway Trust Fund, the Airport Trust Fund—from the Federal Government's operating budget, the real deficit, the actual shortfall between revenues for general funding and the actual costs of operating the Federal Government would exceed $300 billion, not the $205 billion figures used in this budget. According to CBO's July analysis, the deficit excluding all trust funds would be $367 billion in fiscal year 1991, $379 billion in 1992, $345 billion in 1993, $309 billion in 1994 and $315 billion in 1995. Clearly, the package in front of us will barely dent this extraordinary shorfall in revenue.

Mr. President, is this the best deficit-reduction package that Congress would develop in the face of this fiscal crisis? I think the answer to that question is No. We should have cut spending more. In fact, what this budget deficit package labels reduced spending is nothing more than the peace dividend minus Desert Shield, along with the usual—in this case $37.6 million—in medical provider cuts, and new taxes styled in the fashion of new user fees. In my view it is not a programmatic spending cut when we collect fees for agricultural quarantine and inspection services; it is not a spending cut when we increase premiums paid for flood insurance; it is not a spending cut when we establish a 500-percent increase in the level of civil penalties that can be imposed on businesses that violate OSHA; it is not a spending cut when we raise FHA fees; it is not a spending cut when we establish new fees for oversight of the rail safety program; it is not a spending cut when we collect new fees to pay for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration. Mr. President, the list goes on and on. The point is that we are really not cutting spending to the degree that many believe is necessary. We are just augmenting the costs of programs.

Mr. President, I think this package should have relied less heavily on regressive excise taxes. We should have asked wealthy beneficiaries of Federal entitlement programs to pay a larger share of the cost of those programs. And we should have relied more heavily on changes in the income tax base and left excise taxes to the hard pressed State and local governments who are everyday being required to do more with fewer and fewer resources. But we are not going to rewrite this package on the floor of the Senate tonight. The time for making tough choices is here and now, and although I do not like this package, I think it is the best we can do at this late stage in the budget process and I am going to vote for it.

But, Mr. President, this is the last time that this Senator is going to go along with a budget package that is essentially the product of budget summit negotiations. After Black Monday in 1987, I went along with a 2-year budget summit package that revised the Gramm-Rudman targets and supposedly put us on track for a balanced budget by 1993. I went along with last year's budget summit package. And I will go along with this year's package because the choice between a $100 billion sequester, a complete shutdown of the Government, and chaos in the financial markets, is simply not a choice. We have a gun to our heads and we must act responsibly.

When we marked up the reconciliation bill in the Finance Committee early last Saturday morning, I said "I hope next year it will be different." My colleague from Pennsylvania, JOHN HEINZ, leaned over to me and said: "It will be—— It will be worse." Mr. President, he may be right. He may have been referring only to the fiscal and economic difficulties that face our country, or he may have meant the process which has worried us all.

Mr. President, for the past 6 years, I have held the view that the budget deficit is the No. 1 problem facing this country. Some economists and some elected officials have suggested otherwise. Some have suggested that deficits do not matter; others that we can grow our way out of the deficit, and that hard choices on reducing spending or raising revenues can be put off forever. And over the past 6 years, the American public has heard so many things about the deficit that they no longer know who to believe. Is it any wonder that the President and the majority leader were unable to convince the public to support the summit package when they went on national television 2 weeks ago? The public has just become confused on what the deficit means and are understandably reluctant to pay more money into Washington without any assurance that we will husband their resources with care.

Mr. President, this is probably the worst time for us to have to raise taxes. The economy is teetering on the verge of recession. Oil prices are fueling an inflationary spiral that could bring us back to the days in the late 1970's when this economy stagnated under the weight of stagflation. Financial institutions are holding back on lending, making it far more difficult for businesses to expand operations. But if we do not pass this package, if we do not make a credible effort to reduce the deficit, then this economy could face a shock that will take the remainder of the decade to remedy.

Foreigners are more and more reluctant to purchase our Government's debt. We cannot raise interest rates at this time without throwing the economy into a severe tailspin. We cannot afford the luxury of increasing Federal spending to counteract the slowdown in the economy. The only choice we have is to convince the financial markets that we are serious about starting down the road to deficit reduction by adopting this package. That will help ease the pressure on the Federal Reserve and make it more likely that the FED can reduce interest rates.

Mr. President, the budget deficit is not simply a matter of restoring confidence to the markets. It is not simply a matter of how many T-bills are issued each week. The budget deficit is a noose around the neck of every elected official who sees social inequities that can only be resolved by a greater financial commitment from Washington. What I am talking about is the 37 million people in this country who have no health insurance. What I am talking about is the problem of long-term care for the elderly and the disabled. What I am talking about is an infrastructure network that is crumbling throughout most regions of this country.

We were elected not to merely sift and sort through thousands of Federal programs to find creative ways to reduce the cost of Government. Mr. President, I think we were elected to help provide a better quality of life to all Americans. That means financial access to health care for everyone; that means freedom from the fear of debilitating and prolonged illness. That will take commitment, and that will take money. The budget deficit is the biggest obstacle to these important policy changes.

Mr. President, if we are to achieve real substantial reductions in the deficit and improvements in Federal programs, we must make a commitment to reviewing from top to bottom every Federal program. That includes Medicare; that includes Social Security; that includes HUD, that includes the Defense Department; that includes the Small Business Administration, and that includes all the spending we do through the Tax Code. For too long we have allowed for business as usual in this body. Every year, we extend every expiring tax break. We never debate them for more than a minute. We extend financing for all the agencies in this town, and then we find more money to create new agencies.

If we are going to achieve what I would call "Perestroika on the Potomac," then I would suggest that the committees of the Congress, along with the administration make this commitment to the American public: Next year we will revisit every program that the Federal Government operates and we will eliminate, not reduce the level of growth, but eliminate unnecessary spending from top to bottom. Otherwise we will be facing budget crisis after budget crisis for the remainder of this decade until the American people finally heed the call, and will throw all of us out of our jobs.

PRESCRIPTION DISCOUNTS UNDER MEDICAID

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to address that part of the reconciliation bill that pertains to prescription drug discounts under Medicaid.

Although comprising only 40 or so pages of this extremely complex bill, the drug-discount provision has an important and far-reaching impact. After a great deal of work stretching over many months, Senators BENTSEN, PACKWOOD, PRYOR, RIEGLE, and the entire Finance Committee are to be congratulated for fashioning legislation that—while certainly not perfect—would be able to achieve substantial savings for the Medicaid Program in an equitable, nonpunitive manner. I do not believe we can do much more without adopting punitive measures that are not necessary to accomplish the required savings.

The legislation is not exactly what I would like, it is not precisely what Senator PRYOR would like, it is not all that patients would like, it is certainly not what the research-based pharmaceutical industry would like—but it is, as it stands, something that most of us can and should support.

Of most importance, the Finance Committee plan would provide greater access for Medicaid patients to FDA-approved drugs than would the House version. New drugs would be available immediately to Medicaid patients upon approval by the Food and Drug Administration. These drugs would not be subject to prior approval and would remain fully available for at least 12 months before States could consider placing restrictions on them.

Also of utmost importance, the Finance Committee plan, unlike the House version of the legislation, would prohibit the imposition of formularies, restructive lists of drugs. Thus, Medicaid patients would have access to FDA-approved drugs and would not be prohibited from being reimbursed for necessary medicines.

Rebates would be required for both generic and brand name drugs. It is anticipated that these rebate provisions would save the Federal Government almost $2 billion in Medicaid expenses over 5 years. The Finance Committee plan would accomplish the required budgetary savings without many of the dangerous provisions of earlier versions, such as therapeutic substitution, the dispensing of a different chemical to a patient than the chemical prescribed by the patient's physician.

The plan also would accomplish the required budgetary savings without taking the dangerous step of forcing price controls on manufacturers, which could easily impede investment in pharmaceutical research and development.

In addition, the Finance Committee plan, unlike the House version of the Medicaid drug discount plan, would not demand rebates from the pharmaceutical industry far in excess of the amount needed to achieve the required budgetary savings. The House version would demand such rebates to expand the Medicaid Program in areas totally unrelated to pharmaceuticals.

For many years, Mr. President, I have followed the intertwined issues of drug prices and drug development. In 1984, I was privileged to be a part of the most significant efforts in recent history to obtain lower prescription drug prices for the American people. This law, the Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act of 1984, also know as Hatch-Waxman, cleared away many of the legal and regulatory roadblocks to the marketing of low-price generic drugs.

This act cut the costs of drugs without undercutting innovation. It provided consumers access to lower-cost drugs that are bioequivalent to the pioneer drug once the patent on the pioneer expires. It maintained incentives for pharmaceutical companies, which have continued their investment in research and development. Patents on more than 70 drugs, representing $5.5 billion in sales in the year 1985 alone, have expired since 1984. Brand name drugs typically lose half of their market to generic products within 2 years after patent expiration. And, brand name drugs with annual sales of $10 billion are scheduled to go off patent between 1991 and 1995.

I refer to this because I believe the legislation before us is consistent with, and builds on, the very solid achievements of the Hatch-Waxman Act. Thus, very real savings would be achieved to the Medicaid Program as a result of the substantial rebates that drug manufacturers would be required to pay. But the rebate program would be implemented in such a way as to preserve the incentives for continued pharmaceutical research and development—the key to conquering disease and improving health. At the same time, the legislation would prohibit the States from adopting restrictive formularies and would improve the access of Medicaid patients to new drugs.

In short, Mr. President, the legislation would achieve a delicate balance between cutting program costs, improving the access of Medicaid patients to needed medicines, and preserving the incentives necessary to encourage continued pharmaceutical research and development. We should support what has been accomplished by the diligent efforts of Senators BENTSEN, PACKWOOD, PRYOR, and RIEGLE and the entire Finance Committee—and not mar a delicate balance that would produce substantial Medicaid savings in an equitable way. I, for one, would strongly oppose any change that would restrict the access of Medicaid patients to drugs or treat manufacturers in a more severe and unfair manner.

EXEMPTING REPORTING CORPORATIONS FROM CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS UNDER SECTION 6038A(a)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, would the Chairman encourage the Treasury Department to consider including in regulations under section 6038A(a) a de minimis rule generally exempting a qualifying reporting corporation from the recordkeeping and agency requirements and related monetary and noncompliance penalties so long as the IRS is free to reimpose those requirements in any case where it believes that they are appropriate for the proper administration of the tax laws.

Mr. BENTSEN. Yes, I would encourage the Treasury Department to include such a de minimis rule in its regulations under section 6038A(a).

PROPERTY SUBJECT TO TRANSFER TAX

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, as Senator BENTSEN knows I introduced a bill in the last session to repeal section 2036(c), and introduced with you S. 3113, which would repeal section 2036(c) and replace it with rules that would more accurately value property subject to transfer tax. Therefore, I am delighted that the Finance Committee included the provision regarding section 2036(c) in its budget reconciliation package. I am concerned, however, with possible inferences that could be made by the IRS or courts from a paragraph in the Senate Finance Committee report. That paragraph is part of the section entitled "Selected Transfer Tax Consequences of Estate Freeze Transactions Without Regard to Section 2036(c)." The paragraph states that the failure to exercise certain rights "in an arm's-length manner may give rise to a gift." The report then cites several IRS private rulings for that proposition. I understand that the issue of whether or not a deemed transfer results when certain rights are not exercised, such as the right to declare noncumulative dividends by a controlling shareholder, is very controversial. Am I correct in my understanding that the committee did not intend to express an opinion as to the correctness of the IRS rulings that were cited?

Mr. BENTSEN. The Senator is correct in his interpretation of the committee report. The committee did not intend to express any opinion whether, under the law, without regard to section 2036(c), rights, such as the right to noncumulative dividends or the right to convert shares from one class to another, had to be exercised even if there were good, arm's-length reasons for not exercising them.

THE OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1990

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, on the few occasions over the past few weeks that I have been able to leave Washington and get back to the real world, my constituents have consistently asked me one question: "What in the world is going on down there?

And you know, Mr. President, I actually think there is a way to explain some of it.

I cannot explain why we allow amendments to be voted on after only 2 minutes of debate. And I cannot explain why we sometimes vote, over and over again, on the same issue. And I certainly cannot explain some of the rules we use to decide if we will vote on the merits of an issue or some procedural question which allows us to avoid the substance of the question.

But I can explain why, over the last 4 or 5 months we have had some of the best minds in our country, some of the best people in our country, sitting around in little rooms in the Capitol and big rooms at Andrews Air Force Base arguing about what to do. And I can explain why, when after arguing all that time, the House of Representatives—Republicans and Democrats alike—rejected it.

I think are a couple of things that explain what we have seen.

First, we have never done anything like it before. For the past 10 years politicians denounced the deficit, but did nothing real about it. Every once and a while when Congress thought that people were seeing through the speeches, they would pass, or reform, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings—a process designed to force us to be responsible—but then spend most of their time figuring out where the loopholes were so they could evade its requirements. Now, after 10 years at the dance, our feet have developed blisters, the band is striking the set, and the lights are going out. But even in the dark we have finally come to see the disaster we have created.

David Stockman once predicted that the Reagan economic policy would result in "$200 billion deficits as far as the eye can see." Who would have throught he was being an optimist?

Given the reality of the disaster we have created, we finally decided to do something about it this year. The President who told people to read my lips started to read the handwriting on the wall and revenues were on the table. We were able to agree on the broad shape of a package: $500 billion in deficit reduction over 5 years, a reasonable mix between revenue increases on one hand and domestic and defense spending cuts on the other. This package is not the ultimate answer to our deficit problem. It will not eliminate the deficit. It will reduce the rate at which the deficit increases even if it does not reduce the annual deficits we develop. Even with those limitations, however, this is a significant and real and important step.

Second, the people trying to fashion a comprehensive deficit package represented different regions of the country, different political parties, and different wings within those parties. One of the reasons we slipped into the deficit disaster is that over the past 10 years Democrats surrendered their identity. Oh, we fought around the edges of Reaganomics but the huge margins which supported the 1981 tax cuts which started us sinking into a sea of red ink testifies to our termidity as a party. The overwhelming support for the defense spending increases which pushed us below the bottom line further blurred our identity. Throughout the decade, we went along. And we got budgets—oh yes, we got budgets. We just didn't get any sense of fiscal sanity.

This year, Democrats began to assert a point of view. When taxes were put on the table, we did not just ask "How much?" We asked "Who would pay?" And we did not like the answer we got. And some Republicans did not like the questions: They wanted to return to the "no new taxes-free lunch" doctrine of the past decade. Obviously, I believe that my party, the Democratic Party, was taking the right approach to the problem. But my point is not to praise one philosophy, it is simply to point out that there were many philosophies represented in those meetings and many perspectives identified in those negotiations. And no single philosophy, no single perspective, no single point of view had the power to prevail. There came a time when basic values and beliefs clashed: The President wanted a capital gains proposal which was too rich for my blood; the Democrats wanted a progressive tax system which the President feared would bleed the rich dry. And there was no way to bridge that gap, no way to paper over those differences—and no way for one side to prevail over the other.

So the package we have before us is a compromise. It has all the strengths and weaknesses of a compromise. It has no clear philosophic center other than the goal of $500 billion in 5 years. It is not easy to achieve that goal without a consistent set of economic assumptions and human values. So it took time to cobble something together. It makes no one happy, but it may satisfy 51 percent of the Congress—and it may serve the interest of 100 percent of America even while it offends every special interest in the country.

Third, without being partisan, I think it took us months and months to come up with this package because we didn't have strong Presidential leadership. The President started out with no new taxes, then everything was on the table, then new revenues were needed, then capital gains were required while changes in the rates were unacceptable, and then—and then who knew where he stood. There is blame to be placed on the Congress—there is no question about that, no debate about it—but one of the reasons we delayed consideration of the budget resolution is because we agreed to the President's request that we negotiate with him at the summit. And those negotiations replaced congressional consideration of the budget.

In addition to the failure of Presidential leadership, we also had a general failure of political courage. I do not believe that the rejection of the original budget summit agreement by the House of Representatives represented a failure of courage; I think it demonstrated a great deal of wisdom. I would have voted against that agreement too. I think we got a better package, both here and in the House, as a result of that rejection. But as we looked at the new and improved packages more closely, we found some very old flaws: All the hidden special interest legislation, all the disguised tax breaks for this group or that, all the buried spending programs for one special project or another. We put a package together to save our Nation and scattered through it sections designed to ensure our reelections. And that makes this package less attractive than it ought to be.

Finally, Mr. President, what bothers me is the nagging fear that these weakness are endemic to the politics we practice today. Until the American people demand better, this is the best we will do. I am not satisfied with it. I am not pleased with it. But it is a small step in the right direction. And I am willing to start walking in the direction it points.

ADMINISTRATION OF LUXURY TAX

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would like to ask a question of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee relating to the collection and refund of the luxury tax as it applies to aircraft used in business.

As I understand the 10-percent excise tax on luxury items, an aircraft costing over $250,000 and used at least 80 percent of the time for business purposes is not subject to the new tax. However, the tax is, nevertheless, imposed when the purchaser takes title to the aircraft. The purchaser then would apply for a refund of the tax on its tax return for the year following the purchase.

It would seem to me that the purchaser in this circumstance should be able to offset its estimated income tax payments for the excise tax that has been paid. Unless such an offset were allowed, the Government would be able to hold substantial amounts of withheld tax for as long as 20 months even though no tax liability exists.

Such an offset would have no adverse impact on compliance because the offset would not change the business use test in any way. It would simply assure that taxpayers would not be denied the use of their money in circumstances where no excise tax liability exists.

Would the distinguished chairman be able to give assurance that the Finance Committee's intent is to allow taxpayers in these circumstances to offset the excise tax against their estimated income tax liability?

Mr. BENTSEN. The Republican leader has made a reasonable point. It is intended that the new excise tax refund may be used to offset estimated tax liability. However, such offset does not abrogate the requirement that the taxpayer show that the 80-percent business use test has been met in order for the excise tax liability not to apply.

REBATES TO BE PRICE ADJUSTMENTS

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I understand it was the intent of the Senate Committee on Finance that rebates made directly from the automobile manufacturer to the retail customer that are specified in the sales agreement be excluded from the taxable sale price for purposes of the luxury tax. It was our intent to consider such rebates as price adjustments and would be deducted from the sale price. Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. BENTSEN. The Senator is correct in his understanding of the committee's intent.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is my understanding of the provision.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Senators for their clarification of this matter.

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1991

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the provisions in S. 3209, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1991, within the jurisdiction of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee include changes in the existing law to achieve reductions in outlays and increase in receipts necessary to achieve and exceed the committee's reconciliation instruction for fiscal year 1991 and fiscal years 1991 through 1995. Title IV achieves direct spending savings of $91 million in fiscal year 1991 and $398 million for fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

S. 3209 incorporates the text from two bills previously reported by the committee and passed by the Senate. Title IV of the pending measure contains the provisions include in the Tongass Timber Reform Act, H.R. 987, as passed by the Senate on June 13, 1990. This measure achieves direct spending savings of $28 million in fiscal year 1991 and $204 million for fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

Title IV of S. 3209 also contains the text of S. 83, as initially passed by the Senate on July 20, 1989, with three modifications. The changes made to S. 83 by the committee will result in savings of $63 million in fiscal year 1991 and $194 million for fiscal years 1991 throught 1995. This has been accomplished.

First, by postponing until 1996 payments in lieu of taxes to the States in which the enrichment facilities are located;

Second, by limiting spending by the new corporation and mandating payment by the corporation of dividends to the Treasury; and Third, by assessing a fee of 0.2 mills per kilowatt hour of electricity generated to be paid each fiscal year from 1991 through 1995 each licensee of a civilian nuclear reactor.

What is unreasonable, however, is that in order to receive an aggregate direct spending savings of $194 million from fiscal years 1991 through 1995, it was necessary to collect $527 million. This situation results principally from scoring rules imposed on the reconciliation process which differentiate between direct spending and discretionary appropriations.

Current uranium enrichment expenditures and receipts are treated as discretionary appropriations and revenues for the purpose of the congressional budget process. As such their budgetary treatment is assigned to the Appropriations Committee.

However, by the simple act of establishing a Federal corporation a major portion, $331 million, or what are now classified as discretionary appropriations are reclassified as direct spending. This difference in direct spending occurs without any change in the operation of the uranium enrichment enterprise itself. It occurs exclusively from the scoring rules imposed on the reconciliation process. Consequently it must be offset by increased revenues.

So, in order to achieve direct spending savings of $194 million for the purpose of reconciliation it is necessary to impose a fee that will raise $527 million. And, if that is not bad enough, while the full savings in budget outlays and revenues from the uranium enrichment provisions in S. 3209 are $813 million, the committee is only able to obtain credit for $194 million in direct spending under the rules imposed on the budget reconciliation process. This is absurd.

The only consolation is that the full $527 million in fees will be deposited in a decontamination and decommissioning fund within the Treasury which would be subject to appropriations. These fees are to be used to establish a base reserve of funds for eventual use by the Corporation to cover that portion of its decontamination and decommissioning costs which are attributable to services performed for commercial customers.

Mr. President, the overall objective of the measure is to restructure the Department of Energy's uranium enrichment enterprise in order for it to be able to function in a more businesslike and competitive manner. In addition, the legislation will revitalize a severly depressed domestic uranium mining industry, and assign appropriate funding responsibilities for cleanup of active uranium mill tailing sites. S. 83 will ensure adequate long-term domestic supplies of uranium at competitive prices to meet the requirements of commercial nuclear powerplants in the United States.

It is this commercial business which guarantees that the enriched uranium required for our vital defense program—notably, 150 nuclear submarines—can be produced at a reasonable cost to the Government. If the enrichment enterprise were to lose its commercial customers, the cost of supplying our defense establishment would be astronomical.

Unfortunately, the rapidly changing enriched uranium market will eventually result in the demise of our enrichment enterprise if the entity does not respond appropriately. For example, Russia is freeing up the enrichment capacity it previously had dedicated to weapons production and in its thirst for hard currency, is offering enriched uranium on the spot market at prices far below those of our enrichment enterprise. No one questions that our uranium enrichment enterprise is severely constrained in its ability to meet such market challenges. Unlike its more progressive, business-oriented foreign counterparts, it cannot rapidly make adjustments in its practices to maintain its competitiveness. The U.S. enrichment business—such as it is—is on the skids because it has been strangled by congressional policy mistakes and the budget and appropriations process.

Title IV of S. 3209, which contains the text of S. 83 as earlier passed by the Senate, will not only remedy these problems but, coupled with the amendments made by the committee in its budget reconciliation recommendation, will result in significant savings in direct spending over the next 5 years.

Inclusion of S. 83 as amended by the committee will in fact produce multiple benefits. Not only is it an integral part of the committee's total budget savings package, but it is also a critical first step in revamping our uranium enrichment enterprise, arresting its decline, and redirecting it onto a path that will produce future monetary benefits to the Treasury instead of drains on taxpayer dollars.

Mr. President, in this Congress S. 83 has overwhelmingly passed the Senate twice: Once on July 20, 1989, as S. 83; and most recently in S. 2415 on September 26, 1990. In addition, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resource reported S. 3085 which contains the provisions of S. 83 as passed earlier by the Senate. And once again the Senate is being asked to consider this matter which first passed the Senate in the 100th Congress on May 30, 1988, as S. 2097.

For the legislative history on this measure I refer my colleagues to Senate Report 101-60 and the Senate's debate on S. 83 on July 20, 1989. I also ask unanimous consent that the text of my remarks from that date be inserted in the RECORD at this point as part of this debate.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPREHENSIVE URANIUM ENRICHMENT ACT OF 1989

The availability of competitive, domestic uranium supplies for nuclear electric power generation is critical to the provision of reliable electric supplies to all American consumers. Today the Senate once again considers legislation to revitalize the Federal governments uranium enrichment enterprise and domestic uranium production, generally. During the 100th Congress, the Senate passed similar legislation to S. 83.

I am pleased to join my colleagues in support of S. 83. which restructures the Department of Energy's uranium enrichment enterprise in order for it to be able to function in a more businesslike and competitive manner. In addition the legislation will revitalize a severely depressed domestic uranium mining industry, and assign appropriate funding responsibilities for cleanup of active uranium mill tailing sites.

During the last Congress, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, as well as the Senate as a whole, spent a great deal of time on this matter. Had it not been for the lateness of the "hour", I am sure we would have been able to work out a final package with the House.

Instead, we are here once again to consider revised legislation which reflects discussions with the Bush Administration. In essence, S. 83 is the final version of last year's attempt to restructure the Federal government's uranium enrichment enterprise. However, changes have been incorporated to reflect S. 847, as proposed by the Bush Administration.

No one questions that our uranium enrichment enterprise is severely constrained in its ability to respond to today's market challenges. S. 83 will ensure adequate long-term domestic supplies of uranium to meet the requirements of the more than one-hundred commercial nuclear power plants in the United States. These reactors will burn more than two billion pounds of uranium over their operational lives. In addition, S. 83 will ensure reliable sources of uranium for vital U.S. defense programs—notably, 150 nuclear submarines. By any standard, uranium is a critical strategic material.

U.S. ENRICHMENT CORPORATION

The U.S. enrichment "business"—such as it is—is strangled by the Congressional budget and appropriations processes. It cannot easily make any short-term adjustments or long-term commitments. And, it basically is unable to effectively compete with its more progressive, business-oriented counterparts around the world. We are rapidly losing customers to competition from abroad.

Mr. President, Title I of S. 83 creates the U.S. Enrichment Corporation to manage the Federal enrichment program. The Corporation is charged to operate as a continuing, commercial enterprise, on a profitable and efficient basis.

For more than 20 years the United States had a worldwide monopoly on uranium enrichment services. The Federal government has provided these enrichment services on a timely, reliable and competitive basis.

But the Department of Energy is rapidly losing customers to competition from abroad. Some of this competition may, in fact, be subsidized. I am also concerned that once Russia frees up its enrichment capacity previously dedicated to weapons production enrichment that it will, in its thirst for hard currency, subsidize foreign uranium sales.

In recent times, the Department has not had the necessary flexibility to adjust to changing international market conditions. S. 83 will change the situation; it enables the United States' enrichment enterprise to once again be competitive. I am confident that when the present uranium enterprise has been restructured under S. 83 that it will be able to re-establish the United States as the world's principal supplier of uranium enrichment services.

When the United States was the sole supplier of such services it was able to effectively promote its nonproliferation policies by preventing other countries from developing the capability to produce weapons' grade nuclear materials. If we are going to continue to be effective in that regard, the United States must be able to provide foreign customers with assurances that it will continue to be a reliable, competitive supplier of uranium enrichment services. S. 83 thus establishes an independent Federal corporation.

The power of the Corporation is vested solely in an Administrator, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Because the Committee and the Administration are concerned the Corporation be operated as much like a private corporation as feasible, the legislation establishes a corporate advisory board. The Corporate Board is to review the Corporation's policies and advise the Administrator and the Secretary.

While the Corporation and its Administrator are under the general supervision of the Secretary of Energy, the Secretary's authority over the Corporation is limited to matters involving the Nation's common defense and security, and matters involving health, safety and the environment. In all other respects the Corporation would operate as an independent Federal Corporation, including with respect to all fiscal matters, such as the declaration of dividends. In this regard, it is intended that the Corporation be free from the restraints of Federal budgetary and appropriations processes.

But more importantly, it is not intended that any officer or employee of the executive branch—including the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Secretary—either directly or indirectly exercise any authority over the Administrator. Rather, it is intended that the Administrator and the Corporation be free to manage its activities. For example, in determining the fiscal needs of the Corporation, the Administrator is required to retain such funds as are needed for the furtherance of the Corporation's functions, such as research and development, capital investments, and the establishment of cash reserves.

The Corporation is structured so as to provide the Administrator maximum flexibility to operate the Corporation in a businesslike manner; however, until the enterprise is privatized S. 83 preserves some degree of accountability to the Executive Branch and the Congress.

In this regard, the bill provides for a report by the Administrator setting forth his recommendations for the eventual transfer of the functions and assets of the Corporation to private ownership.

It was the judgment of the Committee that privatization should be a two step procedure, the first step being the creation of an independent entity that would hold title to the assets of the Federal enrichment enterprise and would operate those facilities on a "commercial" basis. Once the "economic viability" of the Federal uranium enrichment enterprise is established it will be feasible to fully privatize the Corporation, for example, through the sale of stock.

However, if the Corporation is to be privatized, any associated enrichment facilities are going to have to be licenced by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, as provided for in S. 83. The bill anticipates that the NRC's regulations providing for such licensure will reflect, and, to the extent feasible, be consistent with applicable regulations of the other Federal regulatory agencies regarding matters within their jurisdiction and not within the jurisdiction of the NRC.

The bill also anticipates that this licensure process will be initiated by the Corporation while it still is under Federal ownership and control. The possibility exists that significant costs may be incurred in licensing the existing facilities only to find that when privatization occurs it is accompanied by the construction and licensure of new facilities. This possibility, which could affect the "economic viability" of the Federal enrichment enterprise and, in turn, our success in its eventually privatization, should be considered during the licensure process.

Over the years the Federal government has invested considerable funds in facilities to provide these services, which have been priced at cost, as required by law. Under S. 83, the Corporation is to set commercial enrichment prices on the basis of the competitive world market for uranium services. Over the long-term, the goals of the Corporation are to be recovery of costs and profitability and to be competitive with foreign suppliers of enrichment services. Whether or not the Corporation's operations are being conducted in a business like manner, consistent with these goals, is to be judged over the long-term. It is anticipated that such prices, over the long-term, will include the base costs of providing such commercial enrichment services reflecting eventual costs of decontamination and decommissioning as well as the needs of the contingency reserves, research and development, etc.

By comparison, enrichment services provided to the Department of Energy are to be priced so as to recover on an annual basis the actual base costs of providing such services. In any given year such prices cannot exceed the average commercial prices. However, should this limitation not permit full recovery of the actual base costs of providing enrichment services to the Department, the Corporation is to price future services so as to recover any such unrecovered base costs.

Mr. President, at this point in my remarks, I would like to address the matter of the value of the Federal assets that will be transferred to the Corporation and any outstanding debt owed by the Corporation to the Treasury.

When an attempt was made by the Atomic Energy Commission in the 1970's to price these services at higher than cost, the Congress specifically rejected the attempt. In both 1970 and 1971, the GAO confirmed that the pricing methods employed by the Atomic Energy Commission were appropriate and in compliance with the Atomic Energy Act.

Thus we find ourselves in the situation that between 1969 and 1986 total appropriations for the Federal uranium enrichment program were $18.4 billion. The program, in turn, collected $16.6 billion in revenues for services provided to defense and commercial customers. Therefore, there remains a net appropriation of $1.8 billion over this period. However, this figure includes an estimated $1.638 billion in costs incurred in providing enrichment services to defense programs, that were not recovered and, arguably, are owed the Department of Energy as the provider of enrichment services to itself, in the capacity of a customer. If an adjustment is made of these unrecovered defense expenditures—or unrecovered costs—this figure becomes $364 million.

S. 83 characterizes this amount as debt, although it is actually unrecovered defense expenditures or costs. The value of the assets themselves are reflected in the Corporation's stock which is retained by the Secretary of the Treasury.

VOLUNTARY OVERFEEDING PROGRAM

The second issue that is dealt with by the legislation addresses the viability of our domestic uranium mining industry. In order to ensure an adequate long-term supply of domestic uranium, S. 83 encourages the use of supplies of domestic uranium by requiring the Enrichment Corporation to establish a five-year voluntary overfeeding program. The program would permit a commercial enrichment customer to supply greater amounts of uranium for use in the enrichment process than necessary to meet their order. Because of the availability of these additional quantities of uranium, the costs associated with meeting such customer's order is thus reduced because of reduced electricity requirements in providing such enrichment services. Under the program the commercial customer would receive a credit for the dollar savings resulting from the reduced power requirements.

Among the benefits of the program are reduced enrichment costs for commercial enrichment customers and an accelerated utilization of current inventories. Thus a market will be stimulated for new supplies of uranium. In this regard, the legislation also requires that all future Federal government purchases or uranium shall be domestic uranium from domestic producers.

In addition, the legislation vests the Secretary of Energy with a continuing responsibility for the domestic uranium industry. This includes a responsibility to encourage the export of domestic uranium.

URANIUM MILL TAILINGS RECLAMATION

Now, let me turn a moment to the third issued treated in S. 83, that is, funding for uranium mill tailings reclamation. While I view this title of the bill as being the least controversial, I did want to impress upon my colleagues its importance in terms of getting the reclamation job accomplished, and the fairness with which we have allocated the costs of this reclamation effort.

When Congress passed the Uranium Mill Tailings Reclamation Act of 1978, we had no idea of the extent of regulatory requirements that would be attached to the task of cleaning up mill tailings sites. In fact, we did not know anything about these regulations until just a few years ago, when the Environmental Protection Agency finally issued the regulations. The regulations turned out to be far more stringent than anyone could have imagined, and will cost nearly $1 billion to accomplish, according to DOE estimates. So we find ourselves in a situation where the industry has generated almost 200 million tons of mill tailings well before the regulations were known, at a customer price that did not and could not have reflected such exorbitant cleanup costs.

That same industry, now nearly extinct, should not and could be held totally liable for these unanticipated costs, when it is in fact the customers who, under normal circumstances, would have paid this cost in the original price of the ore.

S. 83, within title II, allocates the costs of this reclamation between the mining industry and the Federal government. The legislation creates a program to reimburse licensees of uranium and thorium mill sites for the cost of reclamation of thorium and uranium mill tailings generated as an incident of sales to the Federal government for defense purposes. At the time these sales occurred, possible hazards from the tailings were not recognized and no reclamation was required by the government procurement contracts.

The legislation authorized $300 million as the Federal contribution for reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial action costs. Reimbursement to licensees is not to exceed $4.50 a ton for the tailings generated under Federal contracts unless excess funds remain at the end of the program. If there are excess funds, the Secretary of Energy may reimburse in excess of $4.50 a ton in those cases where costs exceed this limit. However, acceptance of the Federal funds is to be the exclusive remedy.

More importantly, I should note that the provisions of this title are vital to the accomplishment of this cleanup effort, which we would all agree is an environmentally sound objective.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, this legislation must be enacted in order to ensure the availability of competitive, domestic uranium supplies for nuclear electric power generation. This will in turn provide a reliable electric supply to American consumers and meet the needs of the Department of Defense. This measure will revitalize a severely depressed domestic uranium mining industry and would restructure the uranium enrichment activities of the Department of Energy into a Federal corporation that can function in a business-like and competitive manner.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I urge support for title IV of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1991 as reported by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

THE BUDGET RECONCILIATION BILL

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, when the budget summit produced a bipartisan agreement after months of torturous negotiations, I announced my willingness to support the compromise. Clearly, there were portions that I did not support, most particularly more taxes and drastic cuts in agriculture and Medicare. However, for all of its shortcomings, the budget summit proposal would have set in motion a process for real budget discipline. For the first time in a long time, Federal spending would not be permitted to grow uncontrollably. And, Congress finally would break itself of the tax and spend mentality that had dominated the faulty fiscal policy of its Democratic leadership.

At that time, I commended our congressional leaders for rising above partisan differences to create a truly remarkable product. Despite the rather obvious political liabilities inherent in any bipartisan compromise, I was willing to embrace it as the best possible solution under the circumstances and was willing to say so to my constituents.

After the demise of the budget summit proposal, this body passed an alternative Democratic budget resolution which allowed as much as $10 billion more in taxes and $10 billion less in spending cuts. At that time, I expressed my deep misgivings about the lack of spending discipline in that budget resolution—discipline that had been marginal even in the bipartisan budget summit agreement. I had little faith that a budget resolution, drafted by Democrats and interpreted by committees controlled by Democrats, would result in anything other than more taxes and less spending discipline.

Well, Mr. President, it turns out my fears were more than justified. When compared to the budget summit package, the reconciliation bill taxes the American people more and cuts spending less. It calls for $152 billion in new taxes, $12 billion more than the summit package. At the same time, the reconciliation bill cuts only $110 billion form mandatory spending programs, $9 billion less than the summit agreement. Moreover, many of the so-called cuts in spending are nothing more than new user fees. Although I do not specifically object to user fees, I cannot condone disguising new fees, which more appropriately should be called taxes, as spending cuts.

Mr. President, I cannot support this reconciliation bill. It is primarily new and permanent taxes coupled with week promises for mild spending restraint. It simply does not represent progress toward the goal of spending restraint and fiscal discipline. It was created by a Democratic-controlled Congress that is still fully wed to the tax and spend policies that brought us to this point of fiscal chaos. Simply put, the American people deserve better.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, after a great deal of consideration, I have decided not to support this budget package. While it is clear that major deficit reduction is long overdue, I have many concerns about the course that is charted by this particular piece of legislation.

While this package is better than the one put forward by the summitters, I am still very concerned that it will place an undue burden on middle- and low-income Americans and on our senior citizens. The increase in the Medicare deductible would be the equivalent of a 20-percent cut in the COLA for an average older person on Social Security. The increase in the gas tax hits hard at the average working person at a time when they have already seen huge increases in the amount they must pay for gasoline. It asks less of a sacrifice from those with high incomes than it does of those of more modest means. In short, it is not the direction I think we should be heading in.

I am particularly concerned about continuing efforts to jury-rig the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings approach to budgeting. This system, which has already been adjusted once, has failed to bring about a balanced budget. Instead, it has led to many successful efforts to find ways around its constraints, and to mask the true nature of the budget problems we face. The proposal we have before us creates a whole new maze of across-the-board cuts—a budgetary approach most of us said should never be implemented because it cuts good programs and bad ones indiscriminately—and provides a whole new set of incentives to find clever ways to avoid facing our budgetary problems head-on.

It is clear that we must move forward to enact a budget. The proposal advanced by the House of Representatives is a major improvement over this bill. It reduces the cost to senior citizens, cuts the gas tax, and extends a more fair share of the overall cost of reducing the deficit to those who are able to pay. I would strongly urge the conferees on this package to move toward the House package. Until we make substantial improvements, I cannot in good faith support the package that we have in front of us today.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for the fiscal year 1991 omnibus budget reconciliation resolution.

The reconciliation resolution is imperfect—but an improvement on the budget summit agreement of October 7. The solid deficit reduction it provides, the clarification of government priorities, and the fairness of the burden sharing more than outweigh its flaws.

The resolution preserves the overall summit agreement on deficit reduction. It is the largest deficit reduction package ever considered by the Congress, including deficit reduction of some $40 billion in fiscal year 1991 and $500 billion over fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

Mr. President, the budget clock is ticking. At the present time, we face a crisis—a crisis in Government, a crisis in the economy, and a crisis in confidence in the institution of government itself.

Our Government is paralyzed, and across this country American citizens are outraged. Rightfully so.

If this were a European parliament, the government already would have resigned in disgrace.

America is saying, "Enough already." After 10 years of debate, phony budgets, soaring deficits, and political indulgence, the Government is imploding.

Our country must have a national budget, which means compromises must be made. If we don't enact a reconciliation bill, the growing deficit and the ongoing paralysis in budgetmaking will continue to erode our ability to govern.

Once and for all, we must begin erasing the Federal deficit that has plagued this country for the past 10 years. Now is the time to end this fiscal insanity.

Mr. President, this is a fair and balanced package. It is a compromise package. It represents tough choices. It will involve some sacrifice. But it is real and it is right.

As I said earlier, it is not a perfect reconciliation bill. But in my 16 years in the Congress, I have yet to see the perfect budget plan. Every Senator who wants to vote against it can say it does not do something exactly the way that Senator would like to see it done.

This budget plan isn't perfect to this Senator either. But it is a real beginning toward serious deficit reduction. This budget will help us address the problems of the next century and put our Nation back on track. This budget truly is about our Nation's future: Without a solution to our budget crisis, we will continue mortgaging our children's future.

Mr. President, a budget is not simply an accounting document; it should reflect the priorities for our Nation.

We not only need to have the deficit reduced—we also must invest in the next generation.

In that regard, I would like to highlight a few of the improvements that have occurred since the budget summit agreement. I am particularly delighted that the bill incorporates a two-part approach to Federal assistance to meet the child-care needs of millions of families across the Nation—a grant program to States fashioned by the Labor Committee and an expansion of tax credits developed by the Finance Committee.

As my colleagues know, a great deal of time, energy, and deliberation have gone into developing child care legislation. During the 1988 Presidential campaign, George Bush announced his support for child care. Everyone agreed that we needed child care legislation—but we lacked consensus on what that legislation should look like. On June 23, 1989—15 months ago—the Senate passed S. 5, the ABC bill, after 8 days of heated debate. Subsequently, the House passed its version of child care legislation, and since that time the Senate, the House and the administration have debated the best way to meet the child-care needs of the Nation.

Over the weekend, with the encouragement of the distinguished majority leader, for the first time we reached agreement on a new and expanded

Federal role in child care. The bipartisan agreement is a fair and balanced approach that will make quality child care more available and affordable.

Millions of latchkey children are home alone every day. Around the country, child care waiting lists grow longer and longer. For parents lucky enough to find a place, it costs an average of $3,000 a year to send one child to full-time child care. I am very pleased that our reconciliation bill, by including the bipartisan child-care agreement, will go a long way toward helping these children and families.

I am also pleased that the Finance Committee package includes a substantial improvement in Medicaid coverage, especially for poor children.

Millions of children have no health insurance today. The Finance Committee legislation would address this problem by extending Medicaid coverage to children up through age 18 whose families have incomes below 100 percent of the poverty line, phasing in the coverage over the next 13 years. The legislation also would grant States the option of raising the Medicaid income limit above the poverty line for children through age 18 as well.

Mr. President, I am also pleased about the greater fairness in burden sharing in this bill as compared to the budget summit agreement.

I had serious reservations about the tax provisions in the budget summit agreement. Simply put, they were too regressive. Under the summit agreement, the Federal tax burdens of the poorest one-fifth of U.S. households would have increased 11.1 percent. The tax burdens of households in the middle of the income spectrum would have risen 3.3 percent. But among the wealthiest one-fifth of households, the tax burden would have climbed just 2.1 percent, and, among the richest 1 percent of all Americans, the tax increase would have been only 1.7 percent.

The summit agreement was regressive for two principal reasons. First, nearly half of its total tax increase would have come from higher energy and excise taxes. Such taxes consume a larger share of the income of low- and middle-income people than of those who are more affluent. Second, the summit agreement contained lucrative new tax breaks for wealthy individuals who made investments in certain small- and medium-sized businesses. Those tax breaks would have offset much of the tax increase that would otherwise have been imposed on upper-income households.

By expanding the earned income tax credit for the poor and reducing the tax breaks for the rich, the bill significantly increases the progressivity of this package over the summit package. Thus, the bill would cut taxes by 2.3 percent for those earning between $10,000 and $20,000 a year. Higher earning taxpayers would have their taxes raised between 1.9 and 3.7 percent, with those earning more than $200,000 hit the hardest.

Finally, with respect to taxes, I am pleased that the package drops the provision of the summit agreement that called for a 2-cents-per-gallon tax on home heating oil, a tax that would have had an adverse impact on the citizens of the Northeast.

As I stated earlier, Mr. President, there are still provisions in this legislation that I believe need to be improved before the process is finished.

The first of those involves the Medicare program. While I am pleased that the beneficiary reductions in the Finance Committee package are considerably smaller than those in the summit agreement, I am nevertheless concerned that the finance package retains the Medicare deductible increase and eliminates the 3-year phase-in of that deductible. I also would have preferred that the package include some protections for low-income elderly and disabled Medicare beneficiaries.

Finally, I am concerned about the unfair singling out of the insurance industry for an enormous corporate income tax increase. While the industry is very important to the State of Connecticut, it is equally important to the Nation and I am deeply concerned about the impact of the huge tax increases contained in this bill.

I would like to make several points about the insurance company tax increases.

First, Members should be aware that the insurance industry is the only industry that is being singled out for a corporate income tax increase in this bill. There are some minor corporate provisions relating to compliance, loopholes, and interest on tax deficiencies, but these are much smaller than the insurance increase, and their impact is widely spread among all corporations. Only insurance suffers a special industry increase in its corporate income taxes.

Second, the insurance tax increase in the Senate bill is actually higher than in the House bill in two regards. Thus, the Senate bill includes a one-time income speedup for property and casualty companies that the House bill does not. Let me make it clear—both bills would increase so-called salvage and subrogation taxes. However, the House bill would increase them by some $600 million over 5 years while the Senate bill would be nearly twice that amount, at roughly $1.1 billion over the same period.

In addition, the Senate bill also denies a greater amount of deductions than the House does under the proposal to capitalize so-called deferred acquisition costs, or DACS, for life insurance companies. While the overall DAC revenue number of $8 billion over 5 years is the same in both bills—an amount that is roughly half the largest number discussed at the summit—the Senate bill provides higher taxes for companies generally, in order to finance revisions that benefit only some companies. While the revenue number indicates that this is an $8 billion DAC proposal, for the companies that do not qualify for special small company or other relief, it is just the same as a $15 billion DAC, and that is a huge tax increase by any standard.

Third, the measures raising the industry's taxes consist principally of speeding up income and delaying deductions in ways that do not apply to other industries. This is not a case of finding some industry that somehow escaped tax reform. To the contrary, there was a major tax increase for life insurance in a comprehensive 1984 reform bill and a major tax increase for property and casualty insurance in the 1986 Tax Reform Act.

The bill we are considering today adds another nearly $2 billion a year to industry burdens on top of those earlier changes.

Mr. President, I am deeply concerned about the consequences of these increases. In the first instance, companies will increase some prices and cut some costs and dividends. However, the industry will not be able to pass all the added costs through to consumers and stockholders, so the rest will have to come from industry surplus.

I do not want to say the sky is falling here, but we are in an environment today that should lead us to question the wisdom of exposing insurance industry surplus to a significant new tax cost. This month, one of the biggest companies in the industry, headquartered in my state, took an enormous charge against earnings and cut its dividend in reaction to the collapse in the real estate market. We have congressional inquiries about safety and solvency. We have consumer groups raising questions about the same issues. We have an economic situation that is placing enormous strains on all financial institutions in this country, at great risk to the customer and to the taxpayer.

In the midst of this overall industry and economic situation, we are sticking the industry with a huge tax increase. From both a fairness and a solvency standpoint, I am deeply concerned about this increase. But I want to make clear that under both the Senate and House bills, the industry will experience a significant increase in taxes. I believe that is unfortunate but it is a fact of life. My plea is a narrower one. I urge my colleagues on the Finance Committee to blend the two bills in ways that will reduce these unfortunate impacts as much as possible.

Mr. President, in sum, the bill we are debating tonight is a budget plan that continues to have flaws but one that is dramatically improved over the original budget summit and one that I can support. I have pointed out some key areas where I believe it falls short of good public policy and I hope the conferees will move in the direction of the House-passed bill in these areas, which I think is far fairer.

Mr. President, it is time that we act. I think it's important to move this package now so that we don't tax everyone's patience along with everything else.

RECONCILIATION

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I oppose this reconciliation bill primarily because it would impose the second largest tax increase in our history at a time when the U.S. economy is on the verge of recession.

Let me emphasize a point that was made by the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado, Senator ARMSTRONG: There is no economic theory which argues for a tax increase during a period of economic weakness.

From a supply-side standpoint, there has never been a tax increase designed that could encourage businesses and people to work, save, produce, and invest more. Keynesian economists would argue that a tax increase reduces consumption and aggregate demand which in turn dampens GNP growth and job creation.

I think we should learn from history. The last time taxes were raised in the midst of a recession was in the 1930's, when President Herbert Hoover imposed tarriff and tax rate increases on the U.S. economy. What happened? These tax increases reduced real incomes and production, turning a mild recession into the Great Depression.

I believe that any tax increase is antigrowth, antisavings, antijobs, and anti-investment. A tax increase will lower the standard of living and reduce opportunities for most Americans.

This budget plan represents what I call cart-before-the-horse economics. Instead of providing pro-growth tax incentives to avoid recession, it imposes a massive tax increase which will only worsen the recession and widen the Federal budget deficit.

Furthermore, it seems that many in Congress and the media have focused almost entirely on the question of how to raise taxes on the American people rather than on the more important question of how to control the growth rate of Government spending.

We ought to be pursuing policies—like cutting the capital gains tax—to increase economic growth, investment, job creation, and most important of all, economic opportunity.

Let me read from a release by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights which Senator SYMMS pointed out this morning:

U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS RAISES CONCERNS ABOUT FEDERAL BUDGET DEFICIT-REDUCTION EFFORT

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights urges the President and Congress, in their efforts to reduce the federal deficit, to be fully cognizant of the importance of continued economic growth to the advancement of civil rights in this country. In bad economic times, black and Hispanic unemployment rates rise the fastest. In good times, a tight labor market encourages employers to cast a wider net when hiring, thus breaking barriers that have traditionally prevented minorities, women and persons with disabilities from gaining better paying jobs. Civil rights laws can do little to expand opportunities for members of historically disadvantaged groups when opportunities for all Americans shrink. Strong economic growth is important for creating a climate for effective civil rights policies.

Strong economic growth can also be a powerful force for cutting the federal deficit. A growing economy means more and better paying jobs, which expands the tax base. Policies that encourage savings and entrepreneurial initiative create a growth dividend which will reduce the deficit.

The Commission recognizes that deficit-spending can stifle economic growth, and encourages deficit-reduction efforts.

However, plans for balancing the budget that would also reduce the incentives for individuals to work, save, and invest are likely to be self-defeating. This is the great danger in trying to control the deficit through new taxes.

We therefore call on the President and Congress to adopt only those deficit-reducing proposals consistent with economic growth. Specifically, we recommend freezing real total government expenditure at the fiscal 1990 level.

The Commission recommends that the President and Congress focus on developing policies that will spur both general economic growth and, in particular, growth in the depressed urban and rural areas of our nation. For those who live, work and invest in the depressed areas of our inner cities, for example, we urge cutting the capital gains tax rate to zero, establishing enterprise zones, and other social and job-creating initiatives to help restore economic prosperity to these areas. Overwhelmingly, the residents of these areas suffer the legacy of past discrimination and the limitations of current civil rights laws and policies to promote equality of opportunities. Policies to stimulate growth in depressed areas would not only foster the economic opportunities of residents of these communities, but would benefit many other Americans by helping to realize the full potential of our nation's wealth. Economic growth is not a panacea for this nation's civil rights problems, but economic stagnation will surely exacerbate them. Progress toward eliminating these problems can be accelerated by sustained economic growth and, equally important, aggressive enforcement of all civil rights laws and effective programs to provide educational and economic opportunities to those who have been denied.

In summary, we request, on behalf of America's disadvantaged, no general spending increase and no general tax increase.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, this package does not include growth incentives. It will not expand economic opportunity. In fact, it may in the end reduce opportunities for the disadvantaged in our society.

Let me remind my colleagues that tax revenues are already projected to increase by $397.8 billion between 1990 and 1995. I believe this flood of new tax revenue—an average of $80 billion each year—is more than enough for Congress to meet the Nation's true priorities and trim the budget deficit as well.

Mr. President, I would like to say a few words about the House Democrat tax increase alternative which suspends inflation-indexing of income taxes. This provision represents $30 billion tax increase on middle-income families, plain and simple.

Indexing prevents people from being pushed into higher tax brackets. It prevents automatic tax increases on working families.

According to the Treasury Department, a married couple with two children and income of $34,000 would pay $313.50 more in taxes under the Democratic House provisions suspending inflation adjustments. Similarly a single person with no dependents and an income of $21,000 would pay $151.50 in new taxes under the Democratic plan.

I think this plan proves that liberal schemes always end up soaking the middle-class. History proves that so-called progessive tax theories do not work. People in Eastern Europe and even in the Soviet Union are abandoning punitive taxes in favor of lower taxes on individual inititative. Raising income tax rates in the name of fairness ends up reducing opportunities for all.

We will have an opportunity to vote on the House plan at some point during this debate. I would urge my colleagues to reject this approach, an approach that most of world is in the process of abandoning.

We ought to reject all tax increases period. History shows that higher taxes simply lead to higher spending, not deficit reduction. Every $1 dollar in new taxes leads to $1.52 in new spending.

I believe that President Bush ought to immediately renew his "no-new-taxes" pledge, veto this reconciliation bill, and manage the Federal Government under some kind of modified sequester or across-the-board spending limitation which reduces the deficit by $40 billion in fiscal year 1991.

In this way, we could achive real deficit reduction without raising taxes and damaging our economy.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, this deficit reduction bill is a product of 5 months of bipartisan negotiations between the President and the Congress. It has been closely negotiated during the past 11 days in key Senate committees, including the Finance Committee where it received broad, bipartisan support. It has been debated for almost 20 hours here on the floor of the Senate.

Putting this package together has not been an artistic or a public relations success. We have operated under tight deadlines. There have been mixed signals and missed opportunities from the White House. But in the forum I know best—in the Senate Finance Committee—Republicans and Democrats have worked hard together to produce reasonable, compromise legislation that meets the targets of deficit reduction, deserves the support of the Senate, and merits the approval of the White House.

This is not a perfect package; not the way I would have designed it in an ideal world. Every Senator on this floor has his or her own list of priorities in deficit reduction; some of us would like to burst the bubble and take the top rate to 33 percent for the wealthiest six-tenths of 1 percent of Americans. Some of us would like to see less pressure on Medicare, more money available for child health care. Some of us would like to get rid of the gasoline excise tax. All of us would like to make some change, some shift in the burden.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, we are not in some ivory tower writing a textbook on tax equity and deficit reduction. We are doing our best to deal with a $500 billion problem that poses a clear danger to America's economic future. We are up against tight deadlines. We are operating in a politically sensitive area only weeks before the election. We must reach a compromise with the House, and we must produce a package the President will sign—or risk economic chaos and political paralysis.

So we have compromised. We put together a package that has broad, bipartisan support—15 out of 20 Senators in the Finance Committee. We have a package with strong leadership support, as we have seen during this debate. But even more important, we have produced a deficit reduction agreement that is fair, and that does the job, that is realistic and effective.

I would ask my colleagues to remember that this deficit reduction summit has been running for 5 months; it has almost broken down on several occasions. Deadlines have been extended, positions have changed, problems have been solved. Today we have an opportunity to move this process toward resolution; we have a once-in-a-decade chance to start repairing the damage incurred by a decade of deficits and neglect.

It would be nice if we could find an easy, painless, universally popular way to deal with the consequences of a national debt that has tripled in the past 10 years. Unfortunately, one thing we have learned over the past 5 months is that 500 billion dollars' worth of deficit reduction requires an element of sacrifice from all Americans. We can't duck the sacrifice, but we can seek to assure that it is fairly distributed and designed to do minimal damage to our economy.

The compromise, bipartisan deficit reduction before the Senate meets those objectives. It is not what the White House wants; it is not what the House of Representatives want; it is not what individual Senators would like to see, but it is the basis for compromise and agreement. It is clearly our best hope to avoid sequestration or another shutdown of the Government. It is our best hope to send a signal to our creditors and trading partners and to Wall Street that America is serious about tackling the deficit dilemma and putting our economy on a firm footing.

We have been debating this compromise for over 30 hours. Senators on both sides of the aisle understand it is a substantial improvement on the summit agreement. It meets the targets established at the summit. It is a compromise, not a thumb-in-the-eye political statement. And—when all is said and done—it is our best hope to resolve this impasse on a basis that is fair to all Americans, rich and poor, urban and rural, Republicans and Democrats.

Mr. President, I have said on several occasions that this deficit reduction package is a product of compromise. You don't achieve compromise under difficult and politically dangerous circumstances without a large measure of good will and shared concern about what is right for America. We have seen that good will and shared concern on the Finance Committee and among the leadership of the Senate—from the minority and from the majority. I would like to thank the leaders and my colleagues on the Finance Committee for their patience and hard work and their determination to do what is right, even when it is not easy.

During the past 10 days we have established a pattern of bipartisan cooperation and compromise. We have met the challenges head on. We have offered up honest answers to the very real problem of the deficit. Today the Senate has an opportunity to continue that process, to move it along by approving the deficit reduction package before you.

Mr. President, this is the most important item of legislation to come before the 101st Congress. It deserves the support of every Senator who is concerned about America's future as the most powerful and prosperous nation in the world.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I wish first of all to express my deep appreciation and admiration to the leaders of this body who have worked so hard over many months and passed so many obstacles to bring us here today. We all recognize the absolute necessity that we bring our revenues and our spending back in line over the next 5 years.

It is unfortunate that the artificial deadlines and the self-imposed guillotine of the Gramm-Rudman process made deficit reduction into a short-term, internal crisis. "Why can't Congress get a budget?", our constituents ask, and getting a budget—any budget—has become our only object. Our real mandate is to develop a budget for the United States for the next 5 years. That is more than a matter of making the spending and revenues add up right. The budget debate provides both the opportunity and the obligation to think about what our priorities as a nation should be over 5 years. I am voting against this bill because I believe the answer to the question of whether we got our priorities right is, "No."

One of our first priorities in the next 5 years must be to continue and to build on our dramatically changed relationship with the Soviet Union. That country is now committed to withdrawing all its armed forces from central Europe within the next few years. It is cutting support for its old clients in Cuba, Vietnam, and North Korea. Its deteriorating economy will force a deeper retreat from military purposes and prevent it from resuming imperial quests at least until the next century. Although Soviet or Russian military power will remain a long-term concern, it will not generate threats in the 1990's comparable to those we faced in the 1980's. We can safely concentrate on the many other challenges America faces, such as the threat Iraq poses to the oil fields of the Persian Gulf, and we can safely discard unduly expensive weapons systems designed to counter Soviet threats.

This budget package continues to waste taxpayers' money on such military luxuries as the B–2 bomber and oversized naval forces for 5 more years. For 5 years we will continue to squander our resources on the threats of the past, instead of reassessing our national defense to anticipate the actual threats to American security interests in the future. And this bill compounds these wrong-headed priorities by making it impossible procedurally to shift defense savings to critical domestic priorities in coming years.

A second priority in reducing the deficit must be to keep taxes low and fair for middle-income families. This package raises taxes on middle-income families, and it does so in order to give away new tax breaks for wealthy oil and energy investors. That's wrong and it's unfair.

We should reduce the deficit by closing tax loopholes, not by opening new ones. Under this plan, families earning $20,000 to $30,000 a year would pay more. Families earning $30,000 to $40,000 would pay even more. These are not well-off families. They face extraordinary burdens in our complex society. It's one thing to ask these families to make some sacrifices for the purpose of reducing the deficit. It's quite another thing, though, to ask them to make huge sacrifices so that we can put more money in the pockets of wealthy investors already benefiting from high oil prices. This provision of the package skews our priorities for the present as well as for the future.

This package does not recognize our top priority of defense cuts. It raises taxes on the middle class but instead of using that revenue to reduce the deficit, it squanders part of it on new revenue-losing provisions to benefit healthy industries and wealthy people. Beside these problems, this package places an undue portion of the burden of deficit-cutting on those least able to bear it—senior citizens dependent on Medicare.

Raising the deductible for Medicare is not a solution to the problem of high health care costs. It will not, as some have argued, discourage large numbers of people from using unnecessary health services. It is simply a tax on being sick. Similarly, the increased Medicare premium is simply a higher tax on the elderly. While Medicare cuts might be some part of a balanced deficit-reduction package, senior citizens dependent on this limited program should not be the first place we look for money and they should not bear an unreasonable portion of the cost of balancing the budget. There is no place for this unfairness in our Nation's priorities for the next 5 years.

Finally, Mr. President, this package assumes continuation of the ill-advised Gramm-Rudman guidelines for 5 more years, with additional restrictions that will make it more difficult to use the peace dividend. The ghost of our last failed deficit reduction plan haunts this one. For 5 more years, we will be driven into bad policy decisions and gridlock by furlough notices and threatened cutoffs of vital services. Mr. President, if there is one thing we should have learned from this entire experience with the budget, it is that artificial crises make bad policy. As only a very few of us realized in 1985, no rigid formula or magic procedure will reduce the deficit for us. Only cautious choices that recognize our long-term national priorities can lead us to a fiscally sound future.

I understand how deeply we need a budget, and one that reduces the deficit by at least this amount. I have listened to those who say that this package is better than any other we could hope to pass. But I cannot accept that this is the proper path for our Nation over the next 5 years. For 5 years, taxes would be higher to pay for loopholes for the rich and for the oil industry. Indeed 170 B taxes, in part, to finance loopholes that will make the economy less efficient and the combination of high taxes and increased economic inefficiency could pull us into a recession. For 5 years, the middle class would make sacrifices while the military continued to squander resources on obsolete weapons and defense systems that don't address our security needs. For 5 years, senior citizens who need help with health care costs would pay for the largest portion of whatever deficit reduction we do achieve. For 5 years we'd continue to borrow for the RTC openended if we pass the comparison legislation that will follow this budget.

This may be the best plan for tomorrow, to avoid another shutdown of the Government. But it is not the best plan for 5 years. We can do much better. I will vote against this budget and offer my help in the effort to write a budget that reflects our priorities for the future.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, last night I voted against this reconciliation package for several reasons, which I would like to outline:

First, too many taxes for an economy on the verge of a possible recession.

Second, too many taxes vis-a-vis the spending cuts in the overall package.

Third, too many taxes for already financially strapped families.

fourth, too many taxes for rural America, many parts of which have just rebounded from recession.

Fifth, too many taxes for lower- and middle-income Americans.

Sixth, too much of a cut, proportionally, in agriculture.

Seventh, too little of a cut in the defense budget.

Eighth, concerns about the ability of lower income beneficiaries to pay for the higher medicare costs and for rural hospitals to cope with the lower reimbursements.

What might my alternative be, Mr. President? In May, I supported the $43 billion package voted out of the Senate Budget Committee. I was the only Republican to do so. That plan was larger than this one. it was balanced. It was fair. And we should have voted on that plan last night instead of the one that passed.

Having expressed my position on this bill, and having provided what in my view is a better alternative, let me proceed to what I consider to be the real issue, Mr. President. The real issue is that we, as a Congress, have failed to administer our constitutional responsibilities of making government work for the people of this country. We're now trying to do in 3 weeks and just before an election what we normally do in 9 months. We abdicated our responsibility for the sake of a summit because we thought there would be political cover in doing so.

Well, in doing so, Mr. President, we have created not political cover, but a political crisis. We have brought this country to the brink of paralysis. It is my sincere hope that we have learned a few things in all this and that the country emerges from the experience unscathed. At a minimum, I hope we have learned the evils of budget summitry, and that we never, ever again engage in an end-run around the budget process.

I hope we can throw this exercise in budget summitry into the dust bin of history. Better yet, maybe we should put it in a brass lamp, cork it up, and drop it at the bottom of the ocean. Walting until the last minute to do anything around here just weeks before an election is a prescription for disaster. Sure, we started this summit back in the spring. But we knew even back then that an agreement by the August recess target was unrealistic, and that that would mean going up to D-day in October trying to bite the bullet just before elections.

Mr. President, the fiscal process this year has left an indelible black mark on the affairs of the 101st Congress. it is a heck of a way to close the session before going home to face our constituents. people across this country have watched our work these past weeks in utter amazement. Tourists crowded these galleries and watched in shock. We should bury the memories of our work here this year. If we had to write an epitaph for what we have done, it should read like this: "Dust to dust, ashes to ashes, and summits to hades."

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to oppose this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 5835, be deemed as having been considered and amended by striking all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the language of S. 3209, as amended, to be considered as having been read for the third time and that the Senate proceed without intervening action or debate to a vote on passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, are the yeas and nays ordered on final passage?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 46, as follows:

(1) the payment rate; by

(2) the payment acres for the crop (as determined under subsection (b)); by

(3) the farm program payment yield for the crop for the farm.

(b) PAYMENT ACRES.—For purposes of subsection (a)(2), payment acres for a crop shall be—

(1) the number of acres planted to the crop for harvest within the number of acres obtained by multiplying—

(A) the crop acreage base for the crop for the farm; by

(B) one minus the base reduction percentage (as determined under subsection (c)); less

(2) the quantity of reduced acreage (as determined under subsection (d)(1)).

(c) BASE REDUCTION PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of subsection (b)(1)(B), the base reduction percentage shall be 15 percent for each of the 1992 and 1995 crops.

(d) REDUCED AND PERMITTED ACREAGE.—

(1) REDUCED ACREAGE.—For purposes of subsection (b)(2), the quantity of reduced acreage for a crop shall be the number of acres devoted to conservation uses that is determined by multiplying—

(A) the crop acreage base; by

(B) the percentage reduction required by the Secretary under an acreage limitation program announced by the Secretary.

(2) PERMITTED ACREAGE.—The remaining acreage is hereafter in this section referred to as "permitted acreage".

(e) PLANTING COMMODITIES ON PERMITTED ACREAGE.—The Secretary shall permit producers on a farm to plant on permitted acreage for which the producers do not receive deficiency payments—

(a) 12-MONTH AVERAGE.—For purposes of calculating deficiency payments for each of the 1991 through 1995 crops of wheat, feed grains, and rice, the payment rate for a crop shall be the amount by which the established price for the crop exceeds—

(A) the lesser of—

(i) the national weighted average market price received by producers during the marketing year for the crop, as determined by the Secretary; or

(i) MANAGEMENT OF GRAIN.—Whenever grain is stored under such a program, the Secretary may buy and sell at an equivalent price, allowing for the customary location and grade differentials, substantially equivalent quantities of grain in different locations or warehouses to the extent needed to properly handle, rotate, distribute, and locate the commodities that the Commodity Credit Corporation owns or controls. The purchases to offset sales shall be made within 2 market days following the sales. The Secretary shall make a daily list available showing the price, location, and quantity of the transactions.

(j) USE OF COMMODITY CERTIFICATES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if a producer has substituted purchased or other commodities for the commodities originally pledged as collateral for a loan made under such a program, the Secretary may allow a producer to repay the loan using a generic commodity certificate that may be exchanged for commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation, if the substitute commodities have been pledged as loan collateral and redeemed only within the same county.

"(C)(i) In lieu of accepting assignment of the original credit instrument and the mortgage securing the same under subparagraph (A) in exchange for receipt of debentures, the Secretary shall arrange for the sale of the beneficial interests in the mortgage loan through an auction and sale of the (I) mortgage loans, or (II) participation certificates, or other mortgage-backed obligations in a form acceptable to the Secretary (herein referred to as 'participating certificates', unless the mortgagee can demonstrate that the auction and sale is less economically advantageous to it than the receipt of debentures. The Secretary shall arrange the auction and sale at a price, to be paid to the mortgagee, of par plus accrued interest to the date of sale. The sale price would also include the right to a subsidy payment described in subsection (c).

"(ii)(I) The Secretary shall conduct a public auction to determine the lowest interest rate necessary to accomplish a sale of the beneficial interests in the original credit instrument and mortgage securing such a credit instrument.

"(II) A mortgagee who elects to assign his mortgage must provide the Secretary and persons bidding at the auction a description of the characteristics of the original credit instrument and mortgage securing the original credit instrument to include, but not be limited to: principal mortgage balance; original stated interest rate; service fees; real estate and tenant characteristics; the level and duration of applicable Federal subsidies; and any other information determined by the Secretary to be appropriate. The Secretary shall also provide the status of this property with respect to provisions in the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 or any subsequent Act with respect to eligibility to prepay mortgage, whether the owner has filed an Intent to Prepay or a Plan of Action under the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 or under any subsequent Act; and the details with respect to incentives provided in the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 or under any subsequent Act in lieu of exercising prepayment rights.

"(III) The Secretary shall, upon receipt of the information in subclause (II), promptly advertise for an auction and publish such mortgage descriptions in advance of the auction. For administrative simplicity, the Secretary may wait up to 6 months to conduct the auction, but under no circumstances may the Secretary conduct an auction before 2 months after receiving the mortgagee's written notice of intent to assign its mortgage to the Secretary.

"(IV) The lowest interest rate bid for such purchase by a bidder determined by the Secretary to be acceptable shall be accepted by the Secretary and published in the Federal Register. Settlement for the sale of the credit instrument and the mortgage underlying the credit instrument shall occur within 30 business days of the date winning bidders are selected in the auction.

"(V) If no bids are received or if the bids that are received are not acceptable to the Secretary, the mortgage shall retain all rights under this section to assign the mortgage loan to the Secretary.

"(iii) As part of the auction process, the Secretary shall agree to provide a monthly interest subsidy payment from the General Insurance Fund to the holder of the original credit instrument and the mortgage securing such a credit instrument (and its assigns who are approved mortgagees). The subsidy payment shall be paid on the first day of each month in an amount equal to the difference between the stated interest due on the mortgage loan and the lowest interest rate necessary to accomplish a sale of the Participation Certificates for the then unpaid principal balance plus accrued interest on the mortgage loan. Each interest subsidy payment shall be treated by the holder of the mortgage as interest paid on the mortgage. Such interest subsidy payment shall be provided until the earlier of—

"(I) the maturity date of the loan;

"(II) prepayment of the mortgage loan in accordance with the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 or any subsequent Act, where applicable; or

"(III) default and full payment of insurance benefits on the mortgage loan by the Federal Housing Administration.

"(iv) The Secretary shall require that the loans presented for assignment be auctioned with servicing rights as whole loans and as participating certificates with servicing retained by the current servicer, except that the Secretary may determine if the inclusion of servicing rights in the sale will prove beneficial to the financial interests of the Federal Government.

"(v) To the extent practicable, the Secretary shall encourage State Housing Finance Agencies, nonprofit organizations, and organizations representing the tenants of the property for which the mortgage is being sold, or some other qualified mortgagee participating in a Plan of Action described in the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 or subsequent Act to participate fully in the auction and subsidy mechanism, described in clauses (ii) and (iii).

"(vi) The Secretary shall implement the requirements imposed by this subparagraph within 30 days from the date of enactment and not be subject to the requirement of prior issuance of regulations in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall issue regulations implementing this section within 6 months of enactment.

"(vii) Nothing in this subparagraph shall diminish or impair the low income use restrictions applicable to the project under the original regulatory agreement or the revised agreement entered into pursuant to the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 or subsequent Act, if any, or other agreements for the provision of Federal assistance to the housing or its tenants.

"(viii) The provisions of this subparagraph expire effective October 1, 1995. Not later than January 31 of each year, the Secretary shall transmit to this Congress a report that includes: the number of mortgages auctioned and sold and their value, the amount of subsidies committed to this program, the number of mortgages transferred to preferred mortgagees, the ability of the Secretary to coordinate this program with the incentives provided under the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 or subsequent Act, and the costs and benefits derived from this program for the Federal Government.".

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2110 of title 46, United States Code, the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall establish and implement a system for the collection, commencing October 1, 1990, of $200,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1995, plus an amount sufficient to compensate for inflation for that period, in receipts from payments by users of direct or indirect services provided by the Coast Guard. Amounts received by the United States Government under this section shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating and ascribed to Coast Guard activities.

(b) APPLICATION.—Any fees for indirect services established under this section shall apply only to vessels operating in navigable waters where the Coast Guard has an established presence.

(c) CARGO PREFERENCE USER FEES.—(1) No user fee shall be collected pursuant to subsection (a) unless the Secretary has first established and implemented a system for the collection, for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1995, plus an amount sufficient to compensate for inflation for that period, of user fees on United States-flag commercial vessels which win cargo preference shipment contracts pursuant to section 901(b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U.S.C. 1241(b)), section 901b of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U.S.C. 1241f), the Joint Resolution entitled "Joint Resolution requiring agricultural or other products to be shipped in vessels of the United States where the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other instrumentality of the Government finances the exporting of such products", approved March 26, 1934 (46 U.S.C. 1241-1), or section 2631 of title 10, United States Code.

(2) Each such user fee established pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be an amount equal to 25 percent of the difference between the lowest foreign bid offered and the bid accepted by the shipping agency. Amounts received by the United States Government under this subsection shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts as follows: 20 percent as offsetting receipts of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating and ascribed to Coast Guard activities, and 80 percent as offsetting receipts of the original shipping Federal agency and ascribed to such agency's activities.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in no case shall a cargo preference bid be accepted and contracted for pursuant to any law or provision thereof referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection at over 200 percent the lowest foreign-flag bid.

SEC. 3002. RAILROAD SAFETY USER FEES.

The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 is amended by inserting immediately after section 215 (45 U.S.C. 445) the following new section:

Subtitle B—Airport Capacity

PART 1—SHORT TITLE; FINDINGS

SEC. 3101. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Airport Capacity Act of 1990".

SEC. 3102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) aviation noise management is crucial to the continued increase in airport capacity;

(2) community noise concerns have led to uncoordinated and inconsistent restrictions on aviation which could impede the national air transportation system;

(3) a noise policy must be implemented at the national level;

(4) local interest in aviation noise management shall be considered in determining the national interest;

(5) community concerns can be alleviated through the technology aircraft, combined with the use of revenues, including those available from passenger facility charges, for noise management;

(6) federally controlled revenues can help resolve noise problems and carry with them a responsibility to the national airport system;

(7) a precondition to the establishment or collection of a passenger facility charge shall be the establishment by the Secretary of Transportation of a national noise policy;

(8) revenues derived from a passenger facility charge may be applied to noise management and increased airport capacity;

(9) provisions of subpart S of part 93 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations (known as the "buy-sell rule"), which allow a public right to be used as a private asset, not only restrict competition at the four airports whose use is controlled through slots but also can impede competition in air transportation throughout the northeastern and midwestern United States;

(10) passengers pay higher fares at slot controlled airports than at other airports;

(11) increasing the number of slots at high density traffic airports will make it easier for carriers not already engaged in regular operations at those airports to achieve regular operations; and

(12) improvements in the air traffic control system since the initiation of slot controls, including new technology and new methods of regulating air traffic, necessitate a complete review of the practice of using slots to control access to high density traffic airports.

CHAPTER 2—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 323. FAA FACILITIES AND EQUIPMENT.

That (a) section 506(a)(1) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2205(a)(1) is amended—

(A) by striking "and" immediately after "October 1, 1989,"; and

(B) by inserting immediately before the period at the end of the first sentence the following: "$14,625,200,000 for fiscal years ending before October 1, 1991, and $17,625,200,000 for fiscal years ending before October 1, 1992".

SEC. 324. FAA RESEARCH, ENGINEERING AND DEVELOPMENT.

(a) Section 506(b)(2) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2205(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B)(vii), by striking "and";

(2) in subparagraph (C), by striking the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end of the following new subparagraph:

"(4) for fiscal year 1991, $260,000,000, and for fiscal year 1992, $260,000,000.".

(b) Section 506(b)(4) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2205(b)(4)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking "and 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990, 1991, and 1992"; and

(2) in subparagraph (B), by striking "and 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990, 1991, and 1992".

(c) Section 506(d) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2205(d)) is amended by striking "and 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990, 1991, and 1992".

SEC. 325. FAA OPERATIONS.

For necessary expenses of the Administration for which there is no other specific authorization of appropriations, there is authorized to be appropriated $4,088,000,000 for fiscal year 1991 and $4,412,600,000 for fiscal year 1992.

PART 3—NATIONAL AVIATION NOISE POLICY

SEC. 3201. NATIONAL AVIATION NOISE POLICY.

(a) The Secretary of Transportation shall, by regulation, not later than October 1, 1991, develop and articulate a National Aviation Noise Policy which takes into account the Findings and Determinations and provisions of this chapter.

(b) The National Aviation Noise Policy shall include the establishment of a date or dates for the phasing out of Stage 2 technology aircraft as part of a comprehensive national noise management scheme. The national noise management scheme must include a detailed economic analysis of the impact of any phaseout date on competition in the airline industry, and may provide, by regulation, for the allocation and distribution of Stage 2 operating rights during the phaseout period in a manner determined by the Secretary to be economically efficient.

SEC. 3202. NOISE AND ACCESS RESTRICTION REVIEWS.

(a) The National Aviation Noise Policy shall require the establishment of a program for adequate public notice and comment opportunities on local airport noise or access restrictions that first became effective after October 1, 1990, that were negotiated or executed agreements as of October 1, 1990, or where the FAA has already formed a working group to examine the noise impact of air traffic control procedure changes.

(b) No airport noise or access restriction on the operation of a Stage 3 certificated aircraft, or on a Stage 2 certificated aircraft weighing less than 75,000 pounds, including but not limited to—

(1) any restriction as to noise levels generated on either a single event or cumulative basis;

(2) any limit, direct or indirect, on the total number of State 3 aircraft operations;

(3) any noise budget or noise allocation program which would include Stage 3 aircraft;

(4) any restriction imposing limits on hours of operations; and

(5) any other limit on Stage 3 aircraft,

shall be effective unless it has been agreed to by the airport proprietor and all aircraft operators, or until it has been submitted to the Federal Aviation Administration pursuant to an airport operator's request for approval and approved in accordance with the program.

(c) No airport noise or access restriction proposed after October 1, 1990, could include a restriction on operations with other than Stage 3 aircraft, unless the airport operator publishes the proposed noise or access restriction at least 180 days prior to the effective date of the restriction and prepares—

(1) an analysis of the anticipated or actual costs and benefits of the existing or proposed noise regulation;

(2) a description of alternative regulations;

(3) a description of the alternative measures considered not involving aircraft restrictions, and a comparison of the costs and benefits of such alternative measures to the costs and benefits of the proposed noise or access regulation.

(d) The Administrator shall not approve a noise or access restriction applying to Stage 3 aircraft operations unless the Administrator finds the following conditions to be supported by substantial evidence:

(1) the proposed restriction is reasonable, nonarbitrary, and nondiscriminatory;

(2) the proposed restriction does not create an undue burden on interstate or foreign commerce;

(3) the proposed restriction is not inconsistent with maintaining the safe and efficient utilization of the navigable airspace;

(4) the proposed restriction does not conflict with any existing Federal statute or regulation;

(5) there has been an adequate opportunity for public comment with respect to the regulation;

(6) consideration of alternative means of minimizing or otherwise managing noise was reasonable; and

(7) such other factors as the Administrator deems appropriate to the national air transportation system, as determined by rulemaking.

(e) Sponsors of facilities operating under noise or access restrictions on Stage 3 operations that first became effective after October 1, 1990, shall not be eligible for grants authorized by section 505 of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 U.S.C. App. 2204) 90 days after the date on which the Secretary promulgates the final rule called for under section 331 of this Act, unless the restrictions have been agreed to by the airport proprietor and airport operators or the Administrator has approved the restriction under this title, or the restriction has been rescinded.

(f) The Administrator may reevaluate any noise restrictions previously approved under subsection (d) upon the request of any aircraft operator able to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Administrator that there has been a change in the noise environment of the affected airport pursuant to the criteria established under subsection (d) and that a review and reevaluation of the benefits and costs of the previously approved noise regulation is therefore justified.

(g) The Administrator shall establish by regulation procedures under which the evaluation provided in subsection (f) shall be accomplished. Such evaluation shall not occur less than two years after a determination under subsection (d)(2) has been made.

(h) Except to the extent required by the application of the provisions of this section, nothing in this Act shall be deemed to eliminate or supersede existing law with respect to restrictions by local authorities on operation of Stage 2 aircraft.

SEC. 3203. FEDERAL LIABILITY FOR NOISE DAMAGES.

In the event of a disapproval of a proposed noise or access restriction, the Federal Government shall assume liability for noise damages only to the extent that a taking has occurred as a direct result of such disapproval. Action for the resolution of such a case shall be brought solely in the United States Claims Court.

SEC. 3204. PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.

An aircraft operator may commence a civil action against an airport proprietor for the purpose of protecting its rights under this part, in any United States District Court without regard to citizenship or amount in controversy.

SEC. 3205. LIMITATION ON AIRPORT IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM REVENUE.

Except as specified in subsection (a), under no conditions shall any airport receive revenues under the provisions of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, or impose or collect a passenger facility charge, unless the Administrator assures that the airport is not imposing any noise or access restriction not in compliance with this chapter.

SEC. 3206. NOISE COMPATIBILITY PROGRAM.

No proposal for the imposition of a passenger facility charge shall be approved by the Secretary if the airport has not conducted an airport noise compatibility program pursuant to section 104(b) of the Aviation Safety and Noise Abatement Act of 1979.

PART 4—PASSENGER FACILITY CHARGES

SEC. 3301. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this part the following definition applies: The term "eligible airport-related project" means—

(1) a project for airport development under the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982;

(2) a project for airport planning under such Act;

(3) a project for terminal development described in section 513(b) of such Act;

(4) a project for airport noise capability planning under section 103(b) of the Aviation Safety and Noise Abatement Act of 1979;

(5) a project to carry out noise compatibility measures which are eligible for assistance under section 104 of the Aviation Safety and Noise Abatement Act of 1979 without regard to whether or not a program has been approved for such measures under such section; and

(6) a project for construction of gates and related areas at which passengers are enplaned or deplaned.

SEC. 3302. AUTHORIZATION FOR IMPOSITION.

Section 1113 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1513) is amended by the addition of a new subsection:

"(e) EXCEPTION FOR IMPOSITION OF PASSENGER FACILITY CHARGES.—(1) Notwithstanding the above limitations the Secretary of Transportation is hereby authorized to establish by regulation a program for the imposition of approved passenger facility charges by any airport proprietor to finance eligible projects.

"(2) Passenger facility charges shall be imposed only as approved by the Secretary of Transportation and shall be approved only in full dollar amounts not to exceed three dollars per passenger. They shall remain in effect only during such periods as are necessary to pay for such specific projects as are identified to support their imposition.

"(3) Passenger facility charges shall be collected only from revenue passengers originating or terminating their travel at the airport imposing such a charge.

"(4) No proposal for the imposition of a passenger facility charge shall be approved by the Secretary of Transportation unless:

"(A) The airport proprietor seeking to impose the passenger facility charge certifies, in writing, that airport users and the general public have been provided with: a minimum of seventy-five days advance notice of the proposal; a full and detailed description of the project intended to be financed; a detailed financial plan for full funding of the specific project; and an opportunity to meet with the airport proprietor to present their views. On the basis of such advance notification and information the airport proprietor shall solicit the approval or disapproval of the airport users and the general public and shall advise the Secretary of Transportation of any disagreements with the proposed imposition of a passenger facility charge and the reasons supporting such disagreement.

"(B) In the event that no disagreement is registered, the Secretary shall approve the passenger facility charge.

"(C) In the event that disagreement is registered with reference to a project otherwise eligible for funding under the provisions of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, the Secretary shall approve such passenger facility charge unless the Secretary finds by substantial evidence that it would not significantly benefit airport security, safety, noise mitigation, or capacity.

"(D) The Secretary shall establish, by appropriate rule, the procedures under which a disagreement is registered and an appeal heard under subsection (c).

"(E) In the event that disagreement is registered with reference to a project to build airport gates, the Secretary shall not approve such passenger facility charge unless he finds by substantial evidence that the project is justified by the need to increase capacity at the facility or facilities affected. Under no circumstances shall any gates constructed, improved, or repaired with passenger facility charges under this paragraph be subject to long-term leases for periods exceeding 10 years, or to majority in interest clauses.

"(F) No other projects other than those defined in this title may be financed by a passenger facility charge.

"(5) Any proposal to amend a project supported by an approved passenger facility charge necessitating an upward adjustment of project financing costs shall be treated as a new proposal for the imposition of a passenger facility charge and submitted for approval.

"(6) No passenger facility charge shall be approved for imposition prior to the adoption by regulation of a national aviation noise policy in accordance with the provisions of title III of this Act and, in no event, prior to such date at which the uncommitted balance contained in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund is less than $5,000,000,000.

"(7) Authority for the approval of any new passenger facility charge, or the modification of any existing charge, shall terminate in the event that appropriations fail to be made to fund at least 90 percent of each amount authorized for essential air service and the airport improvement program during any fiscal year. Further, all authority to approve any passenger facility charge shall terminate at any time funds are spent from this Act except as authorized by this Act.

"(8)(A) Revenues derived from collection of a fee by an airport proprietor pursuant to this subsection shall not be treated as airport revenues for the purpose of establishing rates, fees and charges pursuant to any contract between such airport and an air carrier.

"(B) Except as otherwise provided in subparagraph (C) hereof, such airport shall not include the portion of the capital costs of any project paid for from such passenger facility charge revenues in the rate base, by means of depreciation, amortization or otherwise, in establishing fees, rates and charges for air carriers.

"(C) With respect to any project for terminal development, for gates and related areas, or for any facility which is occupied or utilized by one or more air carriers on an exclusive or preferential basis, the rates, fees and charges payable by air carriers which use such facilities shall be no less than the rates, fees and charges paid by carriers using similar facilities at the airport which were not financed with revenues derived from collection of a fee pursuant to this subsection.

"(D) Except as provided in this subsection, nothing contained in this Act shall be construed as endorsing or authorizing the unilateral abrogation, abridgement or alteration of any existing contract or lease provision in place at any airport.

"(9) Any passenger facility charge approved for imposition under this Act shall be collected by the air carrier or its agent selling such transportation and shall be paid to the airport imposing such a charge in accordance with regulations to be issued by the Secretary of Transportation. Such charge shall be separately identified on any ticket sold for such transportation as a local passenger facility charge. The Secretary of Transportation shall provide by regulation for the full and complete compensation of air carriers based upon a uniform fee which reflects their average cost for their collection and handling costs.

"(10) The Secretary of Transportation shall require that any airport imposing a passenger facility charge maintain the funds derived as a result in a separate and identifiable account which, for the purpose of this Act, shall be subject to the same record, audit and examination requirements imposed upon airport improvement program revenues by section 518 of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982.

"(11) No State (or political subdivision thereof, including the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, the District of Columbia, the territories or possessions of the United States or political agencies of two or more States) shall levy or collect any tax on or with respect to any commercial aircraft flight, or any activity or service on board such flight, if such flight neither takes off nor lands in such state or jurisdiction".

AIR CARRIER SPECIAL AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 3352. (a)(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall by rule create, at Washington National Airport, a pool of 30 daily air carrier special authorizations which shall be spread evenly throughout the day from the hour 0700 to the hour 2200 and shall be available only to air carriers that—

(A) will utilize such special authorizations to conduct operations with turbojet aircraft or any aircraft having a certificate maximum seating capacity of 75 or more; and

(B) hold fewer than 12 existing slots at Washington National Airport.

(2) Such special authorizations shall be created and allocated in such a manner that the actual number of daily operations does not exceed the total number of authorized daily operations at Washington National Airport as provided in subpart K of part 93 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations.

(3) Such special authorizations shall be allocated by lottery and in such a manner that, to the maximum extent practicable, all such air carriers have an equal number of slots and special authorizations overall at Washington National Airport. No such air carrier shall receive a special authorization under this subsection which gives that carrier more than 12 slots and special authorizations overall at Washington National Airport.

(5) Each such special authorization shall be public property and its use shall represent a nonpermanent operating privilege within the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the Secretary and the Administrator. Any such privilege may be withdrawn, recalled, or reallocated by the Secretary for reasons of aviation safety, airspace efficiency, the enhancement of competition in air transportation, or any other matter in the public interest and in accordance with the public convenience and necessity.

(6) If the holder of an air carrier special authorization fails to initiate use of the authorization within 60 days after receiving the authorization or thereafter fails to use the authorization in accordance with rules for use of existing air carrier slots, the authorization shall be withdrawn and, if appropriate, be reallocated to another air carrier as provided in this subsection.

(b)(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall by rule create, at La Guardia National Airport, a pool of 30 daily air carrier special authorizations which shall be spread evenly throughout the day and shall be available only to air carriers that—

(A) will utilize such special authorizations to conduct operations with turbojet aircraft or any aircraft having a certificate maximum seating capacity of 75 or more; and

(B) hold fewer than 12 existing slots at La Guardia National Airport.

(2) Such special authorizations shall be allocated by lottery and in such a manner that, to the maximum extent practicable, all such air carriers have an equal number of slots and special authorizations overall at La Guardia National Airport. No such air carrier shall receive a special authorization under this subsection which gives that carrier more than 12 slots and special authorizations overall at La Guardia National Airport.

(3) If such special authorizations remain unused after such air carriers have had an opportunity to obtain them, the remaining authorizations may only be made available to air carriers that have fewer than 12 slots at La Guardia National Airport.

(4) Each such special authorization shall be public property and its use shall represent a nonpermanent operating privilege within the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the Secretary and the Administrator. Any such privilege may be withdrawn, recalled, or reallocated by the Secretary for reasons of aviation safety, airspace efficiency, the enhancement of competition in air transportation, or any other matter in the public interest and in accordance with the public convenience and necessity.

(5) If the holder of an air carrier special authorization fails to initiate use of the authorization within 60 days after receiving the authorization or thereafter fails to use the authorization in accordance with rules for use of existing air carrier slots, the authorization shall be withdrawn and, if appropriate, be reallocated to another air carrier as provided in this subsection.

"f. The optimal level of expenditures for the uranium enrichment enterprise fluctuates and cannot be accurately predicted or efficiently financed if subject to annual authorization and appropriation.

"g. Flexibility is essential to adapt business operations to a competitive marketplace.

"h. The events of the recent past, including the emergence of foreign competition, have brought new and unforeseen forces to bear upon the management and operation of the Government's uranium enrichment enterprise.

"i. The present operation of the uranium enrichment enterprise must be changed so as to further the national interest in the enterprise and respond to the competitive demand placed upon it by market forces, while continuing to meet the paramount objective of ensuring the Nation's common defense and security.

When appropriate, the Corporate Board may make recommendations to the Secretary concerning the compensation to be received by the Administrator and up to ten officers of the Corporation who may receive compensation in excess of Executive Level II as provided in section 1504(a). The Secretary shall transmit such recommendations to the President together with the Secretary's own recommendations concerning compensation. In the event that less than three members of the Corporate Board are in office, recommendations concerning compensation may be made by the Secretary alone. The President shall have the power to enter into binding agreements concerning compensation to be received by the Administrator during his term of office and by the ten officers described in section 1504(a) during their term of employment, regardless of any recommendations received or not received under this title.

"d. Except for initial appointments, members of the Corporate Board shall serve five-year terms. Each member of the Corporate Board shall be a citizen of the United States. No more than three members of the Board shall be members of any one political party. "e. Upon expiration of the initial term, each Corporate Board member appointed thereafter shall serve a term of five years. Upon the occurrence of a vacancy on the Board, the President shall appoint an individual to fill such vacancy for the remainder of the applicable term. Upon expiration of a term, a Board member may continue to serve up to a maximum of one year or until a successor shall have been appointed and assumed office, whichever occurs first.

"g. The Corporate Board shall meet at any time pursuant to the call of the Chairman and as provided by the bylaws of the Corporation, but not less than quarterly. The Administrator or his representative shall attend all meetings of the Corporate Board.

"h. The Corporation shall compensate members of the Corporate Board at a per diem rate equivalent to Executive Level III, as defined in section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, in addition to reimbursement of reasonable expenses incurred when engaged in the performance of duties vested in the Corporate Board. (1) The Corporate Board shall report at least annually to the Administrator on the performance of the Corporation and the issues that, in the opinion of the Board, require the attention of the Administrator. Any such report shall include such recommendations as the Board finds appropriate. A copy of any report under this subsection shall be transmitted promptly to the President, the Secretary, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"(2) Within ninety days after the receipt of any report under this subsection the Administrator shall respond in writing to such report and provide an analysis of such recommendations of the Board contained in the report. Such response shall include plans for implementation of each recommendation or a justification for not implementing such recommendation. "a. The Administrator shall appoint all officers, employees and agents of the Corporation as are deemed necessary to effect the provisions of this title without regard to any administratively imposed limits on personnel, and any such officer, employee or agent shall only be subject to the supervision of the Administrator. The Administrator shall fix all compensation in accordance with the comparable pay provisions of section 5301 of title 5, United States Code, with compensation levels not to exceed Executive Level II, as defined in section 5313 of title 5, United States Code: Provided, That the Administrator may, upon recommendation by the Secretary and the Corporate Board as provided in section 1503(c) and approval by the President, appoint up to ten officers whose compensation shall not exceed an amount which is 20 per centum less than the compensation received by the Administrator, but not less than Executive Level II. The Administrator shall define the duties of all officers and employees and provide a system of organization inclusive of a personnel management system to fix responsibilities and promote efficiency. The Corporation shall assure that the personnel function and organization is consistent with the principles of section 2301(b) of title 5, United States Code, relating to merit system principles. Officers and employees of the Corporation shall be appointed, promoted and assigned on the basis of merit and fitness, and other personnel actions shall be consistent with the principles of fairness and due process but without regard to those provisions of title 5 of the United States Code governing appointments and other personnel actions in the competitive service.

"b. Any Federal employee hired before January 1, 1984, who transfers to the Corporation and who on the day before the date of transfer is subject to the Federal Civil Service Retirement System (subchapter III of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code) shall remain within the coverage of such system unless he or she elects to be subject to the Federal Employees' Retirement System. For those employees remaining in the Federal Civil Service Retirement System, the Corporation shall withhold pay and shall pay into the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund the amounts specified in chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code. Employment by the Corporation without a break in continuity of service shall be considered to be employment by the United States Government for purposes of subchapter III of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code. Any employee of the Corporation who is not within the coverage of the Federal Civil Service Retirement System shall be subject to the Federal Employees' Retirement System (chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code). The Corporation shall withhold pay and make such payments as are required under that retirement system. Further:

"(1) Any employee who transfers to the Corporation under this section shall not be entitled to lump sum payments for unused annual leave under section 5551 title 5, United States Code, but shall be credited by the Corporation with the unused annual leave at the time of transfer.

"(2) An employee who does not transfer to the Corporation and who does not otherwise remain a Federal employee shall be entitled to all the rights and benefits available under Federal law for separated employees, except that severance pay shall not be payable to an employee who does not accept an offer of employment from the Corporation of work substantially similar to that performed by the employee for the Department.

"c. This section does not affect a right or remedy of an officer, employee, or applicant for employment under a law prohibiting discrimination in employment in the Government on the basis of race, color, religion, age, sex, national origin, political affiliation, marital status, or handicap conditions.

"d. Officers and employees of the Corporation shall be covered by chapter 73 of title 5, United States Code, relating to suitability, security and conduct.

"e. Compensation, benefits, and other terms and conditions of employment in effect immediately prior to the effective date of this section, whether provided by statute or by rules and regulations of the Department or the executive branch of the Government of the United States shall continue to apply to officers and employees who transfer to the Corporation from other Federal employment until changed by the Corporation in accordance with the provisions of this title.

"f. The provisions of sections 3323(a) and 8344 of title 5, United States Code, or any other law prohibiting or limiting the reemployment of retired officers or employees or the simultaneous receipt of compensation and retired pay or annuities, shall not apply to officers and employees of the Corporation who have retired from or ceased previous government service prior to April 28, 1987.

"SEC. 1505. TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO THE CORPORATION.—In order to enable the Corporation to exercise the powers and duties vested in it by this title:

"a. The Secretary, as requested by the Administrator, is authorized and directed to transfer without charge to the Corporation all of the Department's right, title, or interest in and to, real or personal properties owned by the Department, or by the United States but under control or custody of the Department, which are related to and materially useful in the performance of the functions transferred by this title, including but not limited to the following—

"(1) production facilities for uranium enrichment inclusive of real estate, buildings and other improvements at production sites and their related and supporting equipment: Provided, That facilities, real estate, improvements and equipment related to the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, and to the gas centrifuge enrichment program shall not transfer under this paragraph except for diffusion cascades and related equipment needed by the Corporation for replacement parts: Provided further, That any enrichment facilities retained by the Department shall not be used to enrich uranium in competition with the Corporation. This paragraph shall not prejudice consideration of any site as a candidate site for future expansion or replacement of uranium enrichment capacity;

"(2) at such time subsequent to the year 2000 as the Secretary determines that the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant should be decommissioned or decontaminated, or both, the Secretary shall convey without charge equipment and facilities relating to the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant not transferred in paragraph (1) to the Corporation;

"(3) facilities, equipment, and materials for research and development activities related to the isotopic separation of uranium by the gaseous diffusion technology;

"(4) the Department's stocks of preproduced enriched uranium, but excluding stocks of highly enriched uranium: Provided, That approximately two metric tons of the Department's highly enriched uranium shall be loaned to the Corporation as required for working inventory;

"(5) the Department's stocks of feed materials for uranium enrichment except for the quantities allocated to the national defense activities of the Department as of the date of enactment;

"(A) the Department's stockpile of enrichment tails existing as of the date of enactment, shall remain with the Department; and

"(B) stocks of feed materials which remain the property of the Department under paragraph (5) shall remain in place at the enrichment plant sites. The Corporation shall have access to and use of these feed materials provided such quantities as are used are replaced, or credit given, if use by the Department is subsequently needed.

"(6) all other facilities, equipment, materials, processes, patents, technical information of any kind, contracts, agreements, and leases to the extent these items concern the Corporation's functions and activities, except those items required for programs and activities of the Department and those items specifically excluded by this subsection.

The transfer authorized by this section is not subject to the requirements of section 120(h) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act.

"b. The Secretary is authorized and directed to grant to the Corporation without charge the Department's rights and access to the Atomic Vapor Laser Isotope Separation, hereinafter referred to as 'AVLIS', technology and to provide on a reimbursable basis and at the request of the Corporation, the necessary cooperation and support of the Department to assure the commercial development and deployment of AVLIS or other technologies in a manner consistent with the intent of this title.

"c. The Secretary is authorized and directed to grant the Corporation without charge, to the extent necessary or appropriate for the conduct of the Corporation's activities, licenses to practice or have practiced any inventions or discoveries (whether patented or unpatented) together with the right to use or have used any processes and technical information owned or controlled by the Department.

"d. The Secretary is directed, without need of further appropriation, to transfer to the Corporation the unexpended balance of appropriations and other monies available to the Department (inclusive of funds set aside for accounts payable), and accounts receivable which are related to functions and activities acquired by the Corporation from the Department pursuant to this title, including all advance payments.

"e. The President is authorized to provide for the transfer to the Corporation of the use, possession, and control of such other real and personal property of the United States which is reasonably related to the functions performed by the Corporation. Such transfers may be made by the President without charge as he may from time to time deem necessary and proper for achieving the purposes of this title.

"f. Title to depleted uranium resulting from the enrichment services provided to the Department by the Corporation shall remain with the Department.

"SEC. 1506. CAPITAL STRUCTURE OF THE CORPORATION:

"a. Upon commencement of operations of the Corporation, all liabilities then chargeable to unexpended balances of appropriations transferred under section 1505 shall become liabilities of the Corporation.

"b. (1) The Corporation shall issue capital stock representing an equity investment equal to the book value of assets transferred to the Corporation, as reported in the Uranium Enrichment Annual Report for fiscal year 1987, modified to reflect continued depreciation and other usual changes that occur up to date of transfer. The Secretary of the Treasury shall hold such stock for the United States: Provided, That all rights and duties pertaining to management of the Corporation shall remain vested in the Administrator as specified in section 1501.

"(2) The capital stock of the Corporation shall not be sold, transferred, or conveyed by the United States unless such disposition is specifically authorized by Federal law enacted after enactment of this title.

"c. The Corporation shall pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury of the United States or such other fund as provided by law, dividends on the capital stock, out of earnings of the Corporation, as a return on the investment represented by such stock. The Corporation shall pay such dividends out of earnings, unless there is an overriding need to retain these funds in furtherance of other corporate functions including but not limited to research and development, capital investments and establishment of cash reserves.

"d. The Corporation shall repay within a twenty-year period the amount of $364,000,000 into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury of the United States, or such other fund as provided by law with interest on the unpaid balance from the date of enactment of this title at a rate equal to the average yield on twenty-year Government obligations as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury on the date of enactment of this title. The money required to be repaid under this subsection is hereinafter referred to as the 'Initial Debt'.

"e. Receipt by the United States of the stock issued by the Corporation (including all rights appurtenant thereto) together with repayment of the Initial Debt and the fees established under section 1701.c shall constitute the sole recovery by the United States of previously unrecovered costs that have been incurred by the United States of uranium enrichment activities prior to enactment of this title.

"SEC. 1507. BORROWING:

"a. (1) The Corporation is authorized to issue and sell bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness (hereinafter collectively referred to as 'bonds') in an amount not exceeding $2,500,000,000 outstanding at any one time to assist in financing its activities and to refund such bonds. The principal of and interest on said bonds shall be payable from revenues of the Corporation.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Corporation may pledge and use its revenues for payment of the principal of and interest on said bonds, for purchase or redemption thereof, and for other purposes incidental thereto, including creation of reserve funds and other funds which may be similarly pledged and used, to such extent and in such manner as it may deem necessary or desirable.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Corporation is authorized to enter into binding convenants with the holders of said bonds—and with the trustee, if any—under any indenture, resolution, or other agreement entered into in connection with the issuance thereof with respect to the establishment of reserve funds and other funds, stipulations concerning the subsequent issuance of bonds, and such other matters, not inconsistent with this title, as the Corporation may deem necessary or desirable to enhance the marketability of said bonds.

"(4) Bonds issued by the Corporation hereunder shall not be obligations of, nor shall payments of the principal thereof or interest thereon be guaranteed by, the United States.

"b. Bonds issued by the Corporation under this section shall be negotiable instruments unless otherwise specified therein, shall be in such forms and denominations, shall be sold at such times and in such amounts, shall mature at such time or times not more than thirty years from their respective dates, shall be sold at such prices, shall bear such rates of interest, may be redeemable before maturity at the option of the Corporation in such manner and at such times and redemption premiums, may be entitled to such priorities of claim on the Corporation's revenues with respect to principal and interest payments, and shall be subject to such other terms and conditions, as the Corporation may determine: Provided, That at least fifteen days before selling each issue of bonds hereunder (exclusive of any commitment shorter than one year) the Corporation shall advise the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount, proposed date of sale, maturities, terms and conditions and expected rates of interest of the proposed issue in the fullest detail possible. The Corporation shall not be subject to the provisions of section 9108 of title 31, United States Code. The Corporation shall be deemed part of an executive department or an independent establishment of the United States for purposes of the provisions of section 78c(c) of title 15, United States Code.

"c. Bonds issued by the Corporation hereunder shall be lawful investments and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of any officer or agency of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer or agency having authority over or control of any such fiduciary, trust, or public funds, may at any time sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by them under this section: Provided, That the Corporation shall not issue or sell any bonds to the Federal Financing Bank.

"SEC. 1508. PRICING:

"a. For purposes of maximizing the long-term economic value of the Corporation to the United States Government, the Corporation shall establish prices for its products, materials and services provided to customers other than the Department on a basis that will, over the long term, allow it to recover its costs for providing the products, materials and services; repay the Initial Debt; recover costs of decontamination, decommissioning and remedial action; and attain the normal business objectives of a profitmaking Corporation.

"b. The Corporation shall establish prices for low assay enrichment services and other products, materials, and services provided the Department on a basis that will allow it to recover its costs on a yearly basis for providing such low assay enrichment services, products, materials, and services, including depreciation and the cost of decontamination, decommissioning and remedial action, but excluding repayment of the Initial Debt and profit. In establishing such prices, the base charge paid by the Department in any given year shall not exceed the average base charge paid by customers other than the Department: Provided, however, That if the imposition of such average base charges as a limitation on the base charge paid by the Department in a given year does not permit the Corporation to fully recover its costs for providing such products, materials and services to the Department then, in subsequent years, the Corporation shall include such unrecovered costs in its prices charged the Department. Base charge shall mean the amount paid by a customer per separative work unit for low assay enrichment services during a given year (exclusive of any credits received under a voluntary overfeeding program), less the portion of such amount which represents the cost of decontamination and decommissioning and remedial action. The average base charge paid by customers other than the Department shall be determined by dividing the estimated total dollar amount of low assay enrichment services sales to customers other than the Department during a given year by the estimated amount of separative work units sold to customers other than the Department during that year. Adjustments between estimated and actual amounts shall be made upon receipt of actual sales data.

"c. The Corporation shall establish prices to the Department for high assay enrichment services on a basis that will allow it to recover its costs, on a yearly basis, for providing the products, materials or services, including depreciation and the costs of decontamination, decommissioning, and remedial action concerning enrichment property, but excluding repayment of the Initial Debt and profit. If the Department does not request any enrichment services in a given year, the Department shall reimburse the Corporation for costs required to maintain the minimum level of operation of the high assay production facility.

"d. (1) In accordance with the cost responsibilities defined in paragraphs (3) and (4), the Corporation beginning in fiscal year 1996 shall recover from its customers other than the Department in the prices and charges established in accordance with subsection (a), amounts that will be sufficient to pay for the costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action for the various property of the Corporation, including property transferred under section 1505(a) at any time. The Corporation shall begin recovering such costs in prices and charges to the Department at such time as this title takes effect. Such costs shall be based on the point in time that such decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action are to be undertaken and accomplished: Provided, That by the year 2000 the Corporation shall have recovered and deposited in the Uranium Enrichment Decontamination and Decommissioning Corporate Fund and the Uranium Enrichment Decontamination and Decommissioning Base Fund 50 per centum of the estimated total costs of decontamination and decommissioning of all property transferred or to be transferred to the Corporation under section 1505, including the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant.

"(2) In order to meet the objective defined in paragraph (1), the Corporation shall periodically estimate the anticipated or actual costs of decommissioning and decontamination. Such estimates shall reflect any changes in assumptions or expectations relevant to meeting such objective, including, but not limited to, any changes in applicable environmental requirements. Such estimates shall be reviewed at least every two years.

"(3) For purposes of enabling the Corporation to meet the objective defined in paragraph (1) with respect to the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant, the Secretary shall periodically estimate the anticipated costs of decontamination and decommissioning and the time at which such decontamination and decommissioning is to be accomplished. Such estimates shall reflect any changes in assumptions or expectations relevant to meeting such objective, including but not limited to, any changes in applicable environmental requirements. The Secretary shall review such estimates every two years and convey this information to the Corporation.

"(4) With respect to property that has been used in the production of low-assay separative work,

"(A) The costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action that shall be recoverable from customers or persons other than the Department in prices, charges and fees shall be in the same ratio to the total costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action for the property in question as the production of separative work over the life of such property for commercial customers bears to the total production of separative work over the life of such property.

"(B) All other costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action for such property shall be recovered in prices and charges to the Department.

"(5) With respect to property that has been used solely in the production of high-assay separative work, all costs of decommissioning, decontamination and remedial action shall be recovered in prices and charges to the Department.

"SEC. 1509. AUDITS.—In fiscal years during which an audit is not performed by the Comptroller General in accordance with the provisions of section 9105 of title 31, United States Code, the financial transactions of the Corporation shall be audited by an independent firm or firms of nationally recognized certified public accountants who shall prepare such audits using standards appropriate for commercial corporate transactions. The fiscal year of the Corporation shall conform to the fiscal year of the United States. The General Accounting Office shall review such audits annually, and to the extent necessary, cause there to be a further examination of the Corporation using standards for commercial corporate transactions. Such audits shall be conducted at the place or places where the accounts of the Corporation are established and maintained. All books, financial records, reports, files, papers, memoranda, and other property of, or in use by, the Corporation shall be made available to the person or persons authorized to conduct audits in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 1510. REPORTS:

"a. The Corporation shall prepare an annual report of its activities. This report shall contain—

"(1) a general description of the Corporation's operations;

"(2) a summary of the Corporation's operating and financial performance, including an explanation of the decision to pay or not pay dividends; and

"(3) copies of audit reports prepared in conformance with section 1509 of this title and the provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

"b. A copy of the annual report shall be provided to the President, the Secretary, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, and the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives. Such reports shall be completed not later than ninety days following the close of each fiscal year and shall accurately reflect the financial position of the Corporation at fiscal year end, inclusive of any impairment of capital or ability of the Corporation to comply with the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 1511. CONTROL OF INFORMATION:

"a. The term 'Commission' shall be deemed to include the Corporation wherever such term appears in section 141 and subsections a. and b. of section 142 of title I.

"b. No contracts or arrangements shall be made, nor any contract continued in effect, under section 1401, 1402, 1403, or 1404, unless the person with whom such contract or arrangement is made, or the contractor or prospective contractor, agrees in writing not to permit any individual to have access to Restricted Data, as defined in section 11 y. of title I, until the Office of Personnel Management shall have made an investigation and report to the Corporation on the character, associations, and loyalty of such individual, and the Corporation shall have determined that permitting such person to have access to restricted data will not endanger the common defense and security.

"c. The restrictions detailed in subsections b., c., d., e., f., g., and h., of section 145 of title I shall be deemed to apply to the Corporation where they refer to the Commission or a majority of the members of the Commission, and to the Administrator where they refer to the General Manager.

"d. The Administrator shall keep the appropriate congressional committees fully and currently informed with respect to all of the Corporation's activities. To the extent consistent with the other provisions of this section, the Corporation shall make available to any of such committees all books, financial records, reports, files, papers, memoranda, or other information possessed by the Corporation upon receiving a request for such information from the chairman of such committee.

"e. Whenever the Corporation submits to the President, or the Office of Management and Budget, any budget, legislative recommendation, testimony, or comments on legislation, prepared for submission to the Congress, the Corporation shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the appropriate committees of Congress.

"f. The Corporation shall have no power to control or restrict the dissemination of information other than as granted by this or any other law.

"SEC. 1512. PATENTS AND INVENTIONS:

"a. The term 'Commission' shall be deemed to include the Corporation wherever such term appears in section 152, 153b. (1), and 158 of title I. The Corporation shall pay such royalty fees for patents licensed to it under section 153 b. (1) of title I as are paid by the Department under that provision. Nothing in title I or this title shall affect the right of the Corporation to require that patents granted on inventions, that have been conceived or first reduced to practice during the course of research or operations of, or financed by the Corporation, be assigned to the Corporation.

"b. The Department shall notify the Corporation of all reports heretofore or hereafter filed with it under subsection 151 c. of title I and all applications for patents heretofore or hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Patents of which the Department has notice under subsection 151 d. of title I or otherwise, whenever such reports or applications involve matters pertaining to the functions or responsibilities of the Corporation in accordance with this title. The Department shall make all such reports available to the Corporation, and the Commissioner of Patents shall provide the Corporation access to all such applications. All reports and applications to which access is so provided shall be kept in confidence by the Corporation, and no information concerning the same given without authority of the inventor or owner unless necessary to carry out the provisions of any Act of Congress.

"c. The Corporation, without regard for any of the conditions specified in paragraph 153 c. (1), (2), (3), or (4) of title I, may at any time make application to the Department for a patent license for the use of an invention or discovery useful in the production or utilization of special nuclear material or atomic energy covered by a patent when such patent has not been declared to be affected with the public interest under subsection 153 b. (1) of title I and when use of such patent is within the Corporation's authority. Any such application shall constitute an application under subsection 153 c. of title I subject, except as specified above, to all the provisions of subsections 153 c., d., e., f., g., and h., of title I.

"d. With respect to the Corporation's functions under this title, section 158 of title I shall be deemed to include the Corporation within the phrase, 'any other licensee' in the first sentence thereof and within the phrase 'such licensee' in the second sentence thereof.

"e. The Corporation shall not be liable directly or indirectly for any damages or financial responsibility with respect to secrecy orders imposed under section 181 of title 35, United States Code, through 187.

"f. The Corporation shall not be liable or responsible for any payments made or awards under subsection 157 b.(3) of title I, or any settlements or judgments involving claims for alleged patent infringement except to the extent that any such awards, settlements or judgments are attributable to activities of the Corporation after the effective date of this title.

"g. The Corporation shall keep currently informed as to matters affecting its rights and responsibilities under chapter 13 of title I as modified by this section and shall take all appropriate action to avail itself of such rights and satisfy such responsibilities. The Department in discharging its responsibilities under chapter 13 of title I shall exercise diligence in informing the Corporation of matters affecting the responsibilities and jurisdiction of the Corporation and seeking and following as appropriate the advice and recommendation of the Corporation in such matters.

"CHAPTER 26. LICENSING, TAXATION, AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1601. LICENSING:

"a. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, with respect solely to facilities, equipment and materials for activities related to the isotopic separation of uranium by the gaseous diffusion technology at facilities in existence as of the date of enactment of this title, the Corporation and its contractors are hereby exempted from the licensing requirements and prohibitions of sections 57, 62, 81 and other provisions of title I, to the same extent as the Department and its contractors are exempt in regard to the Department's own functions and activities. Such exemption shall remain in effect unless and until the Corporation and its contractors receive all necessary licenses for such facilities, equipment and materials as are required under title I.

"b. Within two years of the enactment of this title, the Commission shall promulgate regulations or issue other regulatory guidance under title I for the licensing of facilities described in subsection (a) that employ the gaseous diffusion technology.

"c. Within one year after the promulgation of regulations or the issuance of other regulatory guidance under subsection (b), the Corporation and its contractors shall make necessary applications for and otherwise seek to obtain such licenses as will remove the exemption provided under subsection (a). As part of its application, the Corporation shall submit an Environmental Impact Statement in accordance with the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act. The Commission shall adopt this statement to the extent practicable under the National Environmental Policy Act. In preparing such statement, the Corporation, and in making any licensing decision, the Commission, shall not consider the need for such facilities, alternatives to such facilities, or the costs compared to the benefits of such facilities. The Commission shall act on licensing requests by the Corporation in a timely manner.

"d. The Corporation shall not transfer or deliver any source, special nuclear or byproduct materials or production or utilization facilities, as defined in title I, to any person who is not properly qualified or licensed under the provisions of title I.

"e. The Corporation shall be subject to the regulatory jurisdiction of the Commission and the Department of Transportation with respect to the packaging and transportation of source, special nuclear and byproduct materials.

"SEC. 1602. EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION AND PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES:

"a. In order to render financial assistance to those States and localities in which the facilities of the Corporation are located, beginning in fiscal year 1996, the Corporation is authorized and directed to make payments to State and local governments as provided in this section. Such payments shall be in lieu of any and all State and local taxes on the real and personal property, activities, and income of the Corporation. All property of the Corporation its activities and income are expressly exempted from taxation in any manner or form by any State, county, or other local government entity. The activities of the Corporation for this purpose shall include the activities of organizations pursuant to cost-type contracts with the Corporation to manage, operate, and maintain its facilities. The income of the Corporation shall include income received by such organizations for the account of the Corporation. The income of the Corporation shall not include income received by such organizations for their own accounts and such income shall not be exempt from taxation.

"b. Beginning in fiscal year 1996, the Corporation shall make annual payments, in amounts determined by the Corporation to be fair and reasonable, to the State and local governmental agencies having tax jurisdiction in any area where facilities of the Corporation are located. In making such determinations, the Corporation shall be guided by the following criteria:

"(1) Amounts paid shall not exceed the tax payments that would be made by a private industrial corporation owning similar facilities and engaged in similar activities at the same location: Provided, however, That there shall be excluded any amount that would be payable as a tax on net income.

"(2) The Corporation shall take into account the customs and practices prevailing in the area with respect to appraisal, assessment, and classification of industrial property and any special considerations extended to large-scale industrial operations.

"(3) No amount shall be included to the extent that any tax unfairly discriminates against the class of taxpayers of which the Corporation would be a member if it were a private industrial corporation, compared with other taxpayers or classes of taxpayers.

"(4) Following the commencement of payments in fiscal year 1996, no payment made to any taxing authority for any period shall be less than the payments which would have been made to such taxing authority for the same period by the Department and its cost-type contractors on behalf of the Department with respect to property that has been transferred to the Corporation under section 1505 and which would have been attributable to the ownership, management operation, and maintenance of the Department's uranium enrichment facilities, applying the laws and policies prevailing immediately to the enactment of this title.

"c. Payments shall be made by the Corporation at the time when payments of taxes by taxpayers to each taxing authority are due and payable: Provided, That no payment shall be made to the extent that the tax would apply to a period prior to fiscal year 1996.

"d. The determination by the Corporation of the amounts due hereunder shall be final and conclusive.
